

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

INTRODUCTION.

BEFORE commencing the study of any ancient book, a modern reader is naturally desirous of being made acquainted with whatever is known of the personal history of the author. In the case of Herodotus there is little information remaining to gratify this desire, and that little is of a doubtful character. The brief notice in SUIDAS, which attributes to him a prolonged residence in the island Samos, after expulsion, in the sequel of a political convulsion, from his native city Halicarnassus, might from its probability be received without any suspicion, if it were not combined with the assertion, that in Samos he cultivated the Ionian dialect, and there wrote his history. But the Ionian dialect was in fact the dialect of literature at the time, and, although Samos was one of the Ionian states of Asia, its language was quite a peculiar one, as Herodotus himself remarks¹; and, indeed, the few characteristics of it which are recorded do not appear in any of the MSS of his work. Nevertheless, although we cannot accept any view which would connect his residence in Samos with the peculiarities of his language, there are indications in the course of his work that he was familiar with the island, and that some of his accounts of distant regions are derived from information furnished by the enterprising navigators whose home it was. Suidas goes on to say that after a prolonged stay there he returned to Halicarnassus, and assisted in the expulsion of the tyrant Lygdamis (the author of his own banishment, and the murderer of his kinsman Panyasis, a soothsayer and epic poet). Perceiving himself, however, to be unpopular with his fellow-citizens, he joined as a volunteer the colony sent by the Athenians to Thurii in Italy, died there, and was buried in the agora. These insulated facts are at least conformable to the nature of the times in which Herodotus lived, and are confirmed in some degree by various passages in his writings. Some may perhaps trace the influence of his relative in the superstitious regard for omens and portents which shows itself continually, and may connect his residence in Samos with the frequent allusion to the mysteries and sacred legends². It seems indisputable that some portions of the work which has come down to us must have been composed in the south of Italy; and there is at least a strong probability that a large part originally existed in an independent form. Of the celebrated story related by LUCIAN relative to the circumstances under which the whole was first produced, something will be said in the sequel.

But a far more important matter for the profitable study of this writer is to ascertain the peculiar circumstances of the time in which he lived, in their bearing upon literary productions of a similar nature to his own. No writer escapes the influences of his age, even under circumstances which give the freest scope to individual character. But this scope, under Hellenic modes of life, was narrowed to an almost infinitesimal limit. From his earliest childhood to the day of his death, the Greek lived entirely with others and for others. The traditions, social, political, and religious, in which he was brought up, became a part of himself. Originality, such as we see every day, and are accustomed to admire, would have been in his eyes an object almost of horror,—would indeed have been viewed very much in the same light as free-thinking at the present time. To suppose, therefore, that because an author displays evident marks of intelligence and sagacity, those qualities would exhibit themselves in the same kind of discrimination which we should look for in a writer on similar subjects at this day, is to take up a ground which will necessarily distort our judgement both of his merits and defects,—a result which has certainly happened in the case of Herodotus. To make this point clearer it will be well to bestow some little consideration upon the other prose writers which preceded or immediately followed him, and to sketch in a rough outline the characteristics in which they resembled, and those in which they differed.

Fortunately, although nothing but a few fragments remain of these writers, we have the means of doing this. DIONYSIUS OF HALICARNASSUS, in two treatises which have come down to us, has given a masterly description of them in terms which seem almost enough in themselves to furnish posterity with a complete clue to the subject, and to prevent any one from entertaining those views which of late have acquired a great, though undeserved, popularity. “Not only the ancient historians,” says he in one place, “Eugeon of Samos, Deiochus of Proconnesus, Eudemus of Paros, Democles of Phigalea, and Hecatæus of Miletus, and also the Argive Acusilaus, the Lamp-sacene Charon, and the Chalcedonian Amelesagoras,—not only these, but also they who were very little more ancient than the Peloponnesian war, and came down to the time of Thucydides, such as Hellenicus of Lesbos and Damastes of Sigeum, Xenomedes the Chian and Xanthus the Lydian, with many others, all resemble one another in the plan of their work and the selection of their subjects. Some of them recorded Hellenic stories, and some those of foreign parts; and these they did not think of connecting with one another, but distributed them by nations and cities, and went through the string of these independently of each other; adhering to one common principle, that whatever local traditions were preserved in the several places, and whatever writings were accessible to them in temples or elsewhere, these they should publish in the form in which they got them without addition or diminution. Among these materials existed legends which had obtained current belief in the lapse of time, and likewise stories of dramatic interest, in which a reader of the present day finds much to carp at³.” This topographical method retained so great a hold upon the minds of men, that POLYBIUS thinks it necessary, nearly three hundred years after the latest of the writers mentioned by Dionysius, to apologize for not adopting it in his own work, although composed for an entirely different object from those of the logographers in question⁴.

When Dionysius, after the above description, proceeds to compare Herodotus with these writers, the distinction which he draws between them is nothing like that which modern critics have generally assumed. It points entirely to the superior artistical skill which our author displays in the choice of his subject and the manner of treating it. "He does not (says the critic) confine himself to the history of a single nation or a single state; no! he begins with the Lydian dynasty and comes down to the Persian war, including in one single narrative all the important transactions both of Greeks and barbarians that had occurred in the interval of two hundred and forty years⁵." But let us observe that there is nothing in the whole of the essay to give the slightest support to the modern assumption, that in point of critical sagacity, diligent investigation, and historical fidelity, Herodotus belongs to an entirely different class from his contemporaries and immediate predecessors. That he does exceed them in these respects is possible; but if the fact, it could scarcely be ascertained in any other way than by a careful comparison of his and their writings,—a comparison which the loss of the latter has put out of our power. If, indeed, we are to be at all guided by the chance expressions of those ancient writers, who had the means of instituting such a comparison, those expressions, so far as they go, are unfavourable to the modern view of the question. Herodotus and Hellanicus are coupled with one another by STRABO, in a very emphatic passage, in which we cannot doubt that he is expressing himself advisedly, and after well considering the facts of the case. "The ancient Greek historians (says he) gave the names of Scythians and Celto-scythians to all the northerns, while those who preceded them made a division, terming such as lay above the Euxine, the Ister, and the Adriatic, Hyperboreans, and Sauromatians, and Arimaspians; while such as lay beyond the Caspians they called, one portion of them, Sacians, and another Massagetes, having in fact not a particle of certain information to give about them, although they do not scruple to relate a war between Cyrus and the Massagetes! In fact, neither on the subject of these tribes had any one ascertained any thing to be depended upon, nor was any great credit to be attached to the ancient part of the Persian and Median and Assyrian history, owing to the simplicity of the historians (τῶν συγγραφέων) and their fondness for legends (τὴν φιλομυθίαν). For seeing, as they did, professed legend writers (τοὺς φανερώς μυθογράφους) in great esteem, they thought that they would give a relish to their productions by relating, in the form of history, matters which they neither saw nor heard of, (at least from persons who they were satisfied were acquainted with what they related,) simply and solely because such matters would excite the satisfaction and wonder of the hearers. One has as much reason to put faith in Hesiod and Homer in their stories of the heroes, as upon Ctesias, Herodotus, and Hellanicus, and others of that stamp⁶."

THUCYDIDES, again, in a well-known passage, wherein he compares his own subject and the plan on which he has treated it with the writings of his predecessors or contemporaries, can hardly be doubted by an unprejudiced reader to refer to HERODOTUS⁷. If this be the case, our author must be considered as reckoned by the philosophical historian among the logographers of the time, with whom the principal object was to produce an agreeable narrative, consistent with itself, and sufficiently conformable to the opinions current among their hearers to be received without opposition by them. Such a narrative would not necessarily be false, but it would certainly not be founded on that kind of investigation which in modern times we are accustomed to consider essential to the character of an historian. The principle of discrimination exercised in combining materials would be one which an artist would adopt rather than a philosopher. The writer would probably abstain from the incorporation of stories which carried improbability on their very face, but he would be saved from this by the simple operation of his good taste; and the result would be, that his work might very well, when completed, present the appearance of a judgement in the selection of materials, which, in another age and under other conditions of society, would only arise from the exercise of a critical spirit. This is a point which it is important to keep in view, not only in weighing the authority to be attached to Thucydides's remark upon his illustrious contemporary, but also in estimating the value of the latter as an historical witness. By losing sight of it we convert, at the outset, into a direct censure of another what was only intended as an elucidation of the writer's own method; we suppose a rivalry where none either existed or could exist, any more than between a sculptor and a painter. And when we come to the perusal of Herodotus himself, we bring with us a fruitful source of erroneous judgement, by assuming in him qualities which he neither possessed nor claimed, which are foreign to the habits of his time, and would have hindered rather than furthered the execution of his real design.

A very different feeling from that which called forth the observations of Thucydides is shown in the attack upon Herodotus by one of the other writers with whom Strabo couples him. CTESIAS, a Cnidian physician, resided for seventeen years at the court of Artaxerxes Mnemon, and on his return to Greece produced a connected history of the Assyrian, Median, and Persian dynasties from the time of Ninus and Semiramis to the third year of the ninety-fifth Olympiad (B.C. 398). This work only remains in the scanty epitome made by PHOTIUS, afterwards elevated to the patriarchate of Constantinople, but the first twenty chapters of the second book of DIODORUS SICULUS, which contain the history of Semiramis, are undoubtedly taken from it². In almost all the particulars of the Persian history it was

² An epitome of Ctesias (or, as Voss supposes, of the first twenty-three books of his work, excluding the last, which was on the subject of India) was made by PAMPHILA, a literary lady of Egyptian extraction, in the time of Nero. It was in three books, and it may be suspected that it was really from this work, and not from the original, that Photius's epitome was made. This will account for the extreme disproportion as well as meagreness of his performance. Omitting the first six books which contained the Assyrian and Median history prior to the time of Cyrus, he compresses opposed to the account given by Herodotus, and the opposition seems to have been of a controversial character, for the writer did not scruple to apply the epithets of "liar" and "romancer" to his predecessor⁹. Nevertheless, harsh as these expressions read to us, a recollection of the notorious irascibility of the Greeks upon all subjects in which two different views could be taken, ought to check the haste with which some modern scholars have assumed, that if they refused to adopt Ctesias's judgement of Herodotus, they were bound in justice to the party accused to deny all credence to any statements of the accuser. Whatever may be the personal merits of the two parties, there is no antecedent improbability that the sources of information possessed by the Cnidian were very different in kind from those to which the Halicarnassian had access; and that the same historical fact would consequently appear in a very different light to the one and the other. Ctesias states the grounds of his information to have been his own personal observation, and the testimony of the Persians themselves, checked and arranged by a reference to the records of the royal chronicles. What the sources were from which Herodotus derived his information is a very difficult problem to determine; but whether better or worse than those to which his rival had access, it will appear that they were quite different; and consequently that all general assumptions as to the degree of weight to be given to either writer are premature, until an estimate has been formed (at any rate approximately) of the value of the materials at the command of each.

In order to attempt this, however, with any prospect of success, the first step to be taken is to get quit of all the associations which spring out of modern civilisation. Every one accustomed to the facilities which the present time offers, involuntarily attributes to any individual of the same social position with himself similar methods of effecting any given purpose,—unconsciously forgetting the entirely different conditions of social existence which an interval of more than 2000 years implies. To visit personally all the scenes which he was going to describe; to collect materials (documentary or otherwise) upon the spot; to read all that others had written on the subject, and verify all points which might appear doubtful by a reference to other sources of information; to provide himself with the best maps, and correct these from time to time by independent observations; to determine every incident by a careful reference both to time and place; to make plans of interesting localities; and to bring home specimens, zoological, botanical, and mineral, for the behoof of those more learned in such lore than himself, would possibly have been the plan adopted by Herodotus had he lived in the nineteenth century after, instead of the fifth before, the commencement of the Christian era. Whether in this case his work would have been as entertaining a one as it is, or would have stood the same chance of surviving for some thousands of years, and being read by every succeeding generation with renewed delight, may be suffered to remain an unmooted point. It will be well, however, to consider some of the obvious obstacles which, he living at the time he did, existed to hinder his realisation of such an idea of a historian's duties as has just been sketched out.

First of all, the mere difficulties and dangers of locomotion were enormous. Until the time of Alexander the seas swarmed with pirates, and the land with banditti¹⁰. The only countries to which there is any satisfactory evidence of Greek visitors having resorted for the mere purpose of gratifying an intelligent curiosity, are Lydia (under the reign of Croesus) and Egypt, with both of which places there existed direct commercial relations of considerable importance. Where this was the case, the interest of the states whose revenue was increased by levying duties upon the merchants would induce them to render the access of foreigners something safer. But on the other hand, the very same interest would tend to confine traffic to certain definite channels, and to fetter it by arbitrary rules enforced in the most summary manner. The hardy Samian skipper with his cargo of Laconian marine dye, might, after creeping along the coast of Crete, take advantage of a favourable wind to run across to

Cyrene; but if while doing this an easterly breeze should spring up and carry him out of his course, he would, unless preserved by the special favour of the gods, infallibly be sunk by the Carthaginian cruisers, or if spared, it would only be for the purpose of being carried into port and sold as a slave. It would avail him little to plead that he had been bound for a place with which the Carthaginians themselves carried on a commercial intercourse, that the deviation from his owners' instructions was quite involuntary on his part, that he should be extremely happy to exchange his cargo for a return freight of salt-fish from the curing-houses at Adryme¹¹, or of negroes from the coffles with which he understood the Garamantes were every day expected in the town of the Lotus-eaters¹²; or, as his ship had suffered from stress of weather, that he would go back in ballast, and invest the proceeds of his outward cargo in a choice selection of carbuncles¹³, which would fetch a good price at Ephesus, to decorate the shrines of the great goddess Artemis withal. He would find, in such a case, that the advantages of an open trade were little appreciated by the merchant-princes he had to deal with. "Stranger," one of these might perhaps answer, in such counting-house Greek as he could muster, "we do business in a very different way. 'Tis very true, we drive a thriving trade with thy friends of Cyrene. That silphium of theirs always goes off well in the Campanian market; and I sent orders only yesterday to my agent at *the Stake*¹⁴ to buy up as much as he could get. But should I deal with thee, what oath could we two take to make the bargain binding? And as for the Lotus-eaters and their slave-market, I rede thee lay an ox on thy tongue. My excellent friend Lars Perpenna, of the great house in Agylla, found his way there last summer, and by Moloch, he had a narrow escape of ending his days as a bailiff on Hamilcar's model farm. He protested indeed, that out at sea there was a tremendous north-wester, and that if he had not run under ¹⁴ The Stake (Χάραξ) was a place in the immediate neighbourhood of the Altars of Philæus, where a traffic (which in the time of the Ptolemies was contraband) used to be carried on between Carthaginians and Cyrenians, the former obtaining the syrup of silphium in exchange for wine. (STRABO, xvii. c. 3, p. 495.) But this traffic was carried on overland.

Fair Cape, he must have gone down : indeed he would have it that his ship had suffered so much he could not possibly get again to sea under a week ; but our commissioner told him roundly (and he was a man to keep his word) that, ready or not ready, if the craft did not clear out on the fifth day ¹⁵, he would seize both her and her owner. In sooth, friend, I suspect that my gossip's north-wester blew very much in the same direction as thy south-easter, that is, to a good market where there were no port dues to pay. Thou hast doubtless heard of such a place as Sardinia? No! Nor Gades? No! I dare say not indeed! no more than a Cretan of wearing ship ¹⁶!"

The Carthaginians, although the most striking examples of commercial monopolists in the time with which we are concerned, are by no means to be considered as alone in their practices. Several instances of the same habitual policy are pointed out in the notes of this edition ; and, in fact, it may be considered as a point established beyond all reasonable doubt, that piracy would be regularly practised by any one of the petty states of Hellas upon any other, where no direct relations, sanctioned by a common religious bond, existed between the two. The amount of risk to a traveller by sea arising out of this state of things appears vividly in the line of argument adopted by the orator ANDOCIDES, who is defending himself against the charge of having been concerned in the mutilation of the Hermæ, which caused so much excitement at Athens just before the fatal expedition to Sicily. He had left the city at the time, and been engaged for several years in commerce until his return and subsequent trial. His accuser, in reference to the dangers of this employment, had asserted that the gods had specially preserved him through them, destining him "to a drier death on shore" as the reward of his sacrilege. "What," he replies, "if the gods had deemed me guilty, would they not have revenged themselves upon me when they had got me involved in the extremest peril? for what human peril is greater than a sea voyage at a stormy time? Here they had life, limb, and fortune in their hands, and yet they saved me: why! they might have caused that not even my body should have obtained a grave! What! when there was war, and war-gallies and pirates covering the seas,—as numbers know to their cost, from being captured by them, and after losing their all ending their lives in slavery,—when too there was a barbarous seaboard on which numbers before now have been wrecked, and murdered after the most horrible tortures,—will you believe that the gods saved me through all these perils in order to make Cephisius, that vilest of Athenians (not that he is an Athenian as he professes), the minister of their vengeance on me¹⁷ ? ”

We may, from what has been said, come without much hesitation to the conclusion, that admitting our author to have been as naturally inclined to travel as an Englishman of the present day, his means of gratifying this passion must have been very limited;—that if he visited foreign parts, it will have been under the same circumstances as the travelling merchants of his day,—that his voyages will have been (except by accident) limited to the courses held by the trading vessels, and his travels by land to the great routes along which the commercial intercourse between distant countries was carried on; for if travelling by sea was dangerous, far more so (POLYBIUS tells us) was travelling by land.

But even supposing the personal experiences of our author thus limited by the necessities of his time, it may be replied that the examples of the Parkes, Burckhardts, and Clappertons show how great an amount of knowledge may be acquired by a traveller in a càravan. Here, however, there is another abatement to be made. Modern travellers under such circumstances possess a power, which before the time of ERATOSTHENES, was quite out of the reach even of the most intelligent. They can determine the latitude, longitude, and height above the level of the sea, of any spot they please. But not one of these three particulars could be attempted by Herodotus, except in the very roughest manner. The spherical figure of the earth was a notion which certainly never entered his mind, and except on this assumption neither latitude nor longitude have any existence. The position of any one place on the surface of the earth can, in such a case, only be described by a reference to its bearing from some other. And in so assigning its bearing, we must not forget that our traveller has no compass, nay, that he has not even the rough means of orientation now possessed by every school-boy who knows how to find the pole-star. The north of Herodotus is the quarter from whence the cold Thracian winds blow. His south is the place of the sun when sensibly highest in the heaven (μεσημβρία), or the region from which the warm moist wind (νότος) comes. His east and west are the solstitial points of the rising and setting sun, without any definition whatever of the position from whence the phenomenon is observed ¹⁸.

ARISTOTLE allows his ideally brave man (τὸν ἀνδρείον) to be afraid of death out at sea, without forfeiting any portion of his claim to the character; and in fact considers an entire absence of fear in such a case to indicate a habit of mind for which the Greek language possessed no expression: τῶν δ' ὑπερβαλλόντων τῇ ἀφοβίᾳ ἀνένυμος· εἴη δ' ἂν τις μαινόμενος ἢ ἀνάληγτος, εἰ μὴδὲν φοβοῖτο, μήτε σεισμὸν μήτε τὰ κύματα, καθάπερ φασὶ τοὺς Κελτούς. (Nicomach. Ethic. ii. p. 1115.)

That this rough way of assigning positions, by their bearing upon other equally undefined points, was the ordinary method of our author, will appear quite plainly from an expression used by him in several passages, which has not been generally understood by the commentators, and which is unintelligible except on the supposition that he is defining the position of a spot by projecting it, as it were, upon the direction of the course which he is at the time pursuing, quite irrespectively of what that course may happen to be. For instance, in describing Pteria, the place where the first battle took place between the armies of Croesus and Cyrus, he says that it is κατὰ Σινώπην πόλιν μάλιστά κη κεμένη (i. 76). The defile where the ibises were said to watch for the winged snakes, is in Arabia κατὰ Βουτοῦν πόλιν μάλιστά κη κείμενος (ii. 75). The Labyrinth is said to be situated above the lake Mœris, and κατὰ Κροκοδείλων καλεομένην πόλιν μάλιστά κη κείμενος (ii. 148). Now one may assume, à priori, that this phrase is used in the same sense in all these passages, and in the second of them (see note 195 thereon) it is quite certain that the preposition conveys no sense of proximity, for the defile was far away from the city Buto. It can only be taken to mean "on the same line with the city Buto," that is, that when a traveller passing up the Nile arrives at Buto, he is come "abreast of" the locality where the bones of the snakes are to be seen. Applying this sense to the other two passages, a satisfactory meaning will be obtained; but, if we come to consider the direction with reference to the points of the compass, we shall discover that in the first of the three cases the traveller must look southwards for the direction of Pteria, in the second eastwards for the defile in the Arabian mountains, and in the third westwards for the Labyrinth. In other words, the description is an appropriate one for a person carrying in his hand an outline of the south coast of the Euxine or of the banks of the Nile, and referring other sites which he has occasion to mention to some point on these¹⁹; but it is altogether unnatural for one who had before him any thing like a map in the modern sense of the word, that is, a representation of a large portion of the earth's surface on a fixed scale, wherein the several places should be noted, and their relative bearings laid down on one consistent plan.

That maps of this description existed in the time of Herodotus I will not absolutely deny; but that they were either common, or likely to be used by him, or, if they had been, that they possessed such a degree of accuracy as to contribute to the clearness of his views in combining the several portions of his own personal experience, appears to me very unlikely. The first person who ever attempted to construct any thing which could be so called, or indeed who paid any particular attention to the subject of geography, was the Milesian ANAXIMANDER, and perhaps we shall be near the truth in supposing that a brazen tablet, exhibiting the known earth according to his views of it, was set up in some public place at Miletus, and furnished Aristagoras with the information regarding the route to Susa which Herodotus makes him give. Anaximander was followed by HECATÆUS, who corrected his errors, partly, if not entirely, from his own personal experience as a traveller, and left behind him the memoir in which this was done,—a work which remained extant

¹⁹ The coast outline which Democedes is described as having made for Darius is an example of such a chart; and the existing work under the name of SCYLAX is the mere description of such another. As for the Nile, most modern tourists up the Rhine or by the South Coast Railway in England, have bought, or been solicited to buy, a similar manual.

in the time of ERATOSTHENES²⁰; but that copies of this production, or of any considerable portion of it, were in common circulation, there seems no reason whatever to suppose. If, indeed, it really was, as some have imagined, the basis of the brazen tablet which Aristagoras was said to have taken with him to Lacedæmon, it is plain that its utility as a guide can have been very small; for the Lacedæmonians, to whom it was exhibited, gathered from it no conception of the real distance of Susa from the coast, and unless Aristagoras had inadvertently answered their question truly, were in a fair way (according to Herodotus) of being duped by him. So far, therefore, as the evidence of this particular incident (on which much stress has been laid) goes, there is nothing whatever to difference the "map" of Aristagoras from those numerous γῆς περίοδοι which excite our author's contempt elsewhere, and consequently nothing to indicate the existence of charts constructed on such principles as to furnish a traveller with assistance in disentangling the geography of the country through which he might be passing.

But, in fact, the commercial importance of Miletus, its wealth, and the civilisation indicated by its contributions to the literature of the sixth and fifth centuries before the Christian era forbid us to rest satisfied with merely this negative result. Anaximander's name is brought into connexion with that of his countryman Thales, either as a scholar or an acquaintance; and his reputation as a physical philosopher was high throughout antiquity, worthless as his views appear to the superior enlightenment of modern times. It is difficult therefore to suppose, that a performance which even Eratosthenes thought

worthy of honourable mention, can have possessed merely the merit of being the first rough attempt to convey an idea of the shape and bearings of the then known portions of the earth. Had it been nothing more than this, it must have been utterly valueless, if merely from the erroneous physical notions of its author. But it will assume a considerable value (although one of a very different kind from a modern chart) if we suppose that within such a rude outline as we have imagined there were drawn the several inland routes, and the tracks of coast navigation, by which the commerce of Miletus (then unquestionably the chief of the Hellenic trading communities) was accustomed to pass,—and that the different ports at which (if a navigator) the traveller would desire to touch, the landmarks for which he would have to look out, or (in the case of land routes) the stations where he might be able to rest, the rivers which he would have to cross, and the barriers where he would find tolls to pay, were noted down upon each of these. This information might be conveyed in such a tablet without any adherence to an uniform scale; because the distances, estimated in the way in which alone at that time it was possible to estimate them, would naturally be specified by the number of days' march or of hours' sail from one position to another. A tablet constructed on such a principle would be of the greatest use to the merchants who met on the exchange at Miletus; and on this its reputation would rest. To look at it in the usual manner as a step in the science of mathematical geography is (I conceive) not only to attribute to it a merit which it did not possess: it is really to distract our attention from those which it did. It must be regarded as resembling the PEUTINGER TABLE, a general itinerary in a synoptical form, conveying the aggregate information possessed by Greek merchants at the time, in a shape independent of any knowledge of the true figure and dimensions of the earth, and consequently subject to all the amount of error which ignorance of the elementary principles of mathematical geography necessarily involves. In this view of the subject, it is not difficult to understand, how the memoir of Hecataeus founded upon it should acquire the reputation it did. It no doubt consisted mainly in the verification and correction of the distances and bearings of the landmarks, with reference exclusively to travellers upon the routes. Thus the corrected itinerary, although of no pretension in itself to the merits of a chart, would become most interesting to a scientific geographer like Eratosthenes, who having already, by independent methods, determined approximately the figure and magnitude of the earth, would find in it materials to fill up the correct outline which his superior knowledge had enabled him to sketch out.

HECATÆUS THE MILESIAN, whose name has been brought before our notice in connexion with the subject of this celebrated tablet, is also included in the list of ancient writers criticised by Dionysius of Halicarnassus in the way we have seen. Mention of him by name occurs in four passages in our MSS of Herodotus ²¹, in the first three of which he is described by the title ὁ λογοποιός, a term which ARRIAN gives to both ²². In the fourth passage he is called simply "the son of Hegesander," his father's name not having been mentioned in the other three, and a notice, apparently in his own words, of the conduct of the Pelasgians to their Athenian neighbours is inserted into our author's text ²³. This passage may possibly be a later introduction by the hand of an ancient editor, of whom there are traces in several other places ²⁴; but even if it be so, it is still not likely that Herodotus should have learnt what he says of Hecataeus without being acquainted with his works. In point of fact, Hecataeus is the only one of the numerous prose writers then extant who is mentioned by him by name. Now it is distinctly asserted, that in the second book of his work, a great deal has been taken from Hecataeus's Periegesis, even the very language having been only slightly changed, and as instances of this are cited the descriptions of the phoenix, the river-horse, and the mode of capturing the crocodile ²⁵. Yet, not only is there no indication on the part of Herodotus that he has there made any use of his predecessor's writings, but, if we turn to the passages thus particularised, we find what amounts to a profession that he is himself an eye-witness of what he is describing. The phoenix, he allows, he has not seen himself except in a painting, from the circumstance of its visiting the country only at rare intervals; from which statement one would naturally infer that he must have seen both the river-horse and the crocodile, the description of which occurs in the next section. But the description is of such a kind as to make one absolutely certain that he neither saw them nor got his account direct from any one who had;—so entirely erroneous are the particulars in matters which could not fail to strike the eye. And yet these descriptions occur in a part of the book for the superior accuracy of which he volunteers a pledge, studiously contrasting it in this respect with what he afterwards proceeds to relate²⁶. Whether, therefore, we adopt the assertion of PORPHYRY, that the sections just referred to are really the work of Hecataeus, or reject it, the conclusion seems irresistible, that we have here an instance of the writer giving an account, as if on his own authority, of what he undoubtedly could not have seen²⁷.

If now we set out with the impression, which some scholars appear to have derived from the study of Herodotus, that there is “observable, in every part of his history, a determination not to be responsible for any but ascertained facts;” if we regard his intercourse with the Chaldean priests in Babylon as taking place while “engaged in collecting materials for his history of Assyria;” and think of him as one who, after having “visited all the most remarkable parts of the world then known—Egypt, Syria, Palestine, Colchis, probably Babylon and Ecbatana, the northern parts of Africa, the shores of the Hellespont, the Euxine Sea, and Scythia, pursuing in all those countries his researches with unwearied industry,” . . . “again recommenced his researches and his travels with renovated ardour; and, as he had before directed his attention more particularly to the nations and countries which acknowledged the supremacy of the Persian empire, so now travelled with the same patience of investigation over the various provinces of Greece, collecting the records of the most illustrious families of the different towns of any note,” we cannot help feeling not only surprised, but shocked, at such a manifestation of the real state of the case as appears in the passages just mentioned. If we are determined to take up ground different from that on which the ancients uniformly took their stand in the criticism of our author, we must give up his character for veracity. Considered as a logographer, nothing can be said too highly in his praise. But then we must regard him as governed by the principles of a logographer, blending together into one mass the various materials which offered themselves to him, here the tale brought by some skipper of a merchant ship, there the story which beguiled the discomforts of the caravanserai after the day's journey was over; often listening to the tale of the ἱεργίης of a temple, at another time hearing the details which some veteran sailor or septuagenarian hoplite poured out, of the doings at Salamis or Marathon. The local traditions which embodied in a mythical form the early history of the several states,—the popular poetry which embalmed the memory of the worthies of the past,—the peculiar customs prevailing at the religious festivals, to every one of which was attached some story to explain it,—would furnish a mass of materials not less valuable for his purpose than formal historical documents. Modern criticism is inclined to rate such sources of information very low; but in the days of Herodotus they found more favour, or perhaps we should rather say, more justice. At all events, if we are to be guided by the direct testimony of antiquity, confirmed by that indirect evidence which the remains of the early historians afford, we shall not set out on the assumption that Herodotus was guided by a modern spirit of criticism in the collection or the selection of his materials; but either be satisfied to enjoy his work as a composition of surpassing beauty and interest, reading it as a contemporary would have done; or else, if in accordance with the habits and tastes of the present day we look in it for materials from which to reconstruct the image of the past, we must be content patiently to trace the probable sources of each portion of it, to compare not merely Herodotus with Ctesias or Dinon (as one might Hallam with Lingard, or Southey with Butler), but both the one and the other with what we know from other sources to have actually taken place; not deciding between them on the simple estimate which we may form of their relative judgments, but testing the accounts of each by the analogy of other similar cases, and by their conformity with the known conditions of society. The notes with which this edition is furnished have been drawn up chiefly with the object of facilitating this process. They are not, properly speaking, so much illustrations of the text of Herodotus, as illustrations, through his text, of the time in which he lived and the influences under which his work would necessarily be composed. The object has not been to palliate discrepancies, but by bringing them out into a strong light, to show distinctly the degree of historical assurance which exists on the points where they occur, and thus prepare the way for a due appreciation of all conflicting statements. In some cases I cherish the hope that the result of this method has been, to render possible a clearer view of important historical transactions than has yet been obtained²²; and I have little doubt that a much richer harvest will be reaped by those who have leisure to follow it up.

²⁷ It has generally been assumed by the modern magnifiers of Herodotus's historical character, that when he uses the expression μάχις ἐμὲ ἐδν or ἐτι ἐς ἐμὲ ἐδν, he is of course to be regarded as an eye-witness of the thing to which these words are applied. This rule, however, can hardly be applied to the “Forts of Darius” in Scythia (iv. 124), or, if applied, it must be at the expense of the writer's character as an observer. See notes 316 and 317, thereon.

It would, however, be a great error to dismiss the reader to the study of Herodotus, under an impression that because his materials are mainly of the kind just described, and combined with one another on a principle very different from that which a modern historian would adopt, his work is therefore at all deficient in historical value. The very phenomena discoverable in it, which take it out of the category of histories such as those of Tacitus or Thucydides, will (if we look at the matter aright) increase our conviction of the fidelity with which it reflects the current opinions, feelings, and habits of the time in which it was written. What the men of that day believed of the transactions of the generation which had preceded them, comes to us in a scarcely altered shape. A flood of barbarism had swept over Asia, and, after engulfing almost all the existing civilisation, had been rolled back again; so that when the survivors of the deluge began to lift up their heads, an entirely new order of things had sprung into existence, and of the old order only insulated relics remained, connected together and interpreted by the popular sentiments of the time. A generation before the battle of Salamis the coasts of Asia were full of flourishing commercial communities, small indeed as regards their territorial extent, but wealthy, enterprising, and skilled ²² I would instance especially the nature of the revolution effected by Darius, as developed in the Excursus II. on Book iii. and the under-current of Achaean interests, which modified the whole foreign policy of Sparta before and during the Persian war, upon their finding an able and unscrupulous representative in a Heraclide king. in arts and arms. The Homeric epics,—the lyric poetry, of which fragments alone have come down to us,—the numerous colonies which studded the shores of the Euxine,—the magnificent temples of Samos and Ephesus,—and the proverbial luxury of Ionia, constitute incontestable evidence of the extent which civilisation had reached among the Asiatic Hellenes. With their European brethren the case was widely different. That city, in which, before a century more had elapsed, were produced the dramas of Sophocles and the friezes of the Parthenon,—in which the oratory of “Olympian Pericles” swayed the wills of the assembled people like the nod of the omnipotent Zeus himself,—while, meantime, unprecedented national success had engendered the vision of universal sovereignty,—was, at the time when Croesus crossed the Halys, a humble member of the confederacy of which her military rival was the paramount head,—too feeble to dream of independent action,—without a written literature, unless we may give such a name to the productions of Solon,—and indebted for even the rudiments of cultivation to the dynasty whose name she afterwards proscribed²⁹. History presents no instance of rapid development comparable to that of Athens during the latter half of the sixth and the former half of the fifth century before the Christian era; the nearest parallel perhaps is that of the Italian republics at the time of the revival of letters. But the calamity which had in its results awakened the latent energies of the countrymen of Themistocles, by merging all individual interests in the sense of one common danger and the sentiment of one common patriotism, and which, when it was at last repelled, left them no longer an aggregate of rival families, but an united people free by their own efforts, presenting to the world an example of the most heroic valour rewarded by the most dazzling success,—had overlaid and entirely extinguished the national life of the Asiatic states. Their whole population had been changed, and their national records were of course destroyed, when the temples in which they had been laid up were burnt and the endowments confiscated. Hence, when the ancient enemy was at last partially humbled, and some of the exiles which remained alive had returned to their native land, a complete gap in the continuity of their history would exist, to be bridged over in the best way it might. Of the way, now, in which this problem was solved we have the picture in the work of Herodotus,—a far more valuable document, surely, from its exhibiting, in their genuine simplicity, the materials of the edifice, than would have been the case had the writer undertaken the duty of chipping and shaping these in order to produce a more symmetrical, and, what some may consider, a more historical appearance.

I will now proceed to point out some of the principal sources of Herodotus's materials, and give a brief sketch of their peculiar character, in order to make yet plainer the point of view from which, in my opinion, he must be criticised.

The most important of all must undoubtedly be reckoned the temples, especially those which were connected with periodical assemblages of the different members of the Hellenic race, such as those of Pytho and Olympia. The importance of these reunions is often but little appreciated, from the habit which prevails of regarding them exclusively under their religious aspect. No doubt the national feeling was fostered by that participation in common religious ceremonies which formed an essential part of the meeting; but this was not the original object of their institution, and would in a very slight degree be the case until after the occurrence of those great events which did, so to speak, create the nationality. There was no pan-hellenic spirit, in the proper sense of the word, before the Persian war. In the earlier times the prevailing bond of union was the principle of confederation, either for the purpose of mutual defence or for that of commercial advantage, and perhaps especially the latter. STRABO expresses as much in a word, when he says "that the panegyris is a commercial matter;" and the truth of the remark is confirmed by the circumstance, that as the lines of traffic altered with the political changes of the world, the temples which had been the seat of the principal assemblages lost their importance, sometimes recovering it again with the return of the original state of things²⁰. And, in fact, the

²⁰ This was the case with Delos, which immediately after the Mithridatic war recovered its former importance, because Corinth, which for several hundred years had attracted the thorough traffic between Asia and Europe, had been destroyed by the Romans. The Delians were wise enough to assist the natural advantages of their situation connexion between the temple and the fair is very easy to understand. One may at once see how, in early times, the respect due to the shrine of the god produced security to his worshippers; how deeds of violence and robbery, which the lax morality of the time would have let pass unrebuked in another place and at a different time, became sacrilege when perpetrated within the boundaries of the sacred territory, and before the expiration of the sacred truce. Within these limits the authority of the accredited ministers of the temple would be supreme, arising from the circumstance that they alone had the power of defining the rites and ceremonies which the stranger, who had entered the territory under the guardianship of the local deity, must perform in order to propitiate him³¹. This knowledge was considered a matter of the very highest importance; it was handed down traditionally from generation to generation, usually in certain families. No one would attempt either to question, or to share it; and as a necessary consequence, a yet further power would be grafted upon it,—that of determining what regulations should be observed by the visitors of the temple in their intercourse with each other during their stay in the sacred territory. All disputes between them would naturally fall under the jurisdiction of the acknowledged authorities of the place. In their capacity of ἐξηγηται, these would be regarded as divinely accredited; and in such a case the decisions of equity would become invested with the awful character of a divine command. The obvious utility of enforcing such decisions would enlist on the side of the judges the sympathy and active support of all except the party against whom each particular decision was given; and thus insensibly would grow up a complete code of maxims relating to the intercourse of men with one another, the good sense of which would commend itself to the sober judgment of the calm, while the repute of their sacred origin would procure obedience to them even from the violent³². It is, however, now im-

by abstaining from levying port dues,—the earliest instance of an enlightened commercial policy which I know. (Ἐκεῖσε γὰρ μετεχώρησαν οἱ ἔμποροι καὶ τῆς ἀτελείας τοῦ ἱεροῦ προκαλουμένης αὐτοῖς, καὶ τῆς εὐκαιρίας τοῦ λιμένος. STRABO, x. c. 5, p. 388.)

³¹ The well-known scene in SOPHOCLES'S Œdipus Coloneus will convey a lively notion of the effect of the religio loci in Pagan antiquity (vv. 117—257). See also vv. 465—492.

³² Thus will be explained the origin of the old gnomic sentiments referred to in note 116 on i. 32.

portant to remember that such proceedings imply a common religious belief. The deity whose shrine was regarded in so sacred a light, and whose ministers were so revered as to render their authority paramount even in the decision of purely secular matters, was, of necessity, himself assumed to stand in a special relation to his worshippers, of a kind which demanded their respect, and at the same time justified them in expecting protection from him. In this necessity originated the early genealogies,—preserved in the poets but not invented by them,—connecting by lineal descent impersonations of the several tribes (i. e. their eponyms) with the tutelary deity who was the object of their united worship; and thus expressing to the multitude, not in an arbitrary form, but in the only language intelligible to an uncultivated age, their religious and ethnical history. The transition from the divine to the merely human was smoothed down by the employment of that machinery which the imagination so readily suggests to those who are open to the influences of nature. The stream, the mountain, and the forest were all invested with life. The foaming torrent had been a river-god, the spreading oak in the depth of the forest a melancholy maiden, the dancing brook some joyous daughter of an ancient chief whose charms had won for her the love of the local divinity, and who became by him the mother of a new race³³. The dry genealogy thus acquired the colouring of

“BROOK! whose society the Poet seeks,
Intent his wasted spirits to renew;
And whom the curious Painter doth pursue
Through rocky passes, among flowery creeks,
And track thee dancing down thy water-breaks;
If wish were mine some type of thee to view,
Thee, and not thee thyself, I would not do
Like Grecian Artists, give thee human cheeks, Channels for tears; no Naiad should'st thou be,—
Have neither limbs, feet, feathers, joints, nor hairs:
It seems th' Eternal Soul is clothed in thee
With purer robes than those of flesh and blood,
And hath bestowed on thee a better good;
Unwearied joy, and life without its cares.”

The sympathy of the poet of nature revolts, as might have been expected, from the artistical polytheism of the classical period, and attaches itself to the feelings of an earlier age, when the instinctive sense of the beautiful (as strong then as ever after-the poetical tale; upon the ancient pantheistic creed thus became grafted the varied forms which Hellenic polytheism afterwards assumed; and as the process went on, in accordance with a regular law, every addition to the original legend was stamped with the impress of the common habits of life and common modes of thought and feeling belonging to the time in which it was assimilated.

"Thus every where to Truth Tradition clings,
Or Fancy localises Powers we love :
Were only History licensed to take note
Of things gone by, her meagre monuments
Would ill suffice for persons and events :
There is an ampler page for man to quote,
A readier book of manifold contents Studied alike in palace and in cot."

WORDSWORTH.

While now the intercourse between different independent communities was very slight, and confined to those tribes whose traditions were identical, the historical and religious myths remained proportionally simple; but the case was altered when the extension of commerce brought distant cities into contact with one another. Some common religious bond was essential to the most ordinary mercantile transaction. Without it there could be no valid covenant, for no oath could be tendered which would bind the conscience of both the contracting parties; and without the sanction of an oath good faith was not to be looked for in early paganism. But this difficulty was soon removed where there existed any strong analogy between religious systems, or similarity between the rituals which embodied them. Nothing was easier, or in the feeling of those simple times more natural and proper, than to combine the two distinct creeds together by the aid of a fresh legend²⁴. Thus the Isis of Egypt found an entrance, as Io, into the religious ideas of the worshippers of the wards) had not yet been dissevered from a religious awe for the grand forms of nature, into which men chose rather to merge humanity, than detach them from the great Whole to which they belonged by isolated personifications.

The other sonnet is that on the monument commonly called Long Meg and her daughters, near the river Eden. (Works, vol. v. p. 249.) To these, the lines of SHELLEY on the Passage of the Apennines, printed among the Posthumous Poems in 1824, deserve well to be added. They might have been chanted under Mount Mænalus, three thousand years ago, as a part of some hymn to Demeter Achaia.

²⁴ See notes 164 and 366, on Book I., note 153 on Book II., and note 487 on Book VII.

Argive Here, as soon as commercial intercourse sprang up between the two countries. Thus, too, the cruel Tauric goddess was brought into connexion with the Artemis Limnæa of Lacedæmon, for the behoof of the merchants of Heraclea and Chersonesus, by help of the story of Iphigenia²⁵. It is not of course to be supposed that these supplementary legends (as they may for distinction's sake be called) possessed at their first growth any thing like the symmetry or the richness with which their handling by the poets has invested them for us. In the dim twilight of the time in which they sprang up, their rude proportions excited no surprise; and it was not until an entirely different state of things had arisen, not until men's tastes had become more cultivated, their acquaintance with the world extended, and their understandings called into action, that a spirit of discrimination arose which rejected the food on which the early ages had been contentedly nourished, and demanded the artistic attractions which the lyrical and dramatic poets supplied. This being the only shape in which we are familiar with the Hellenic mythology, it requires some effort not to forget, that it only represents the original, somewhat as the fairy mythology of the Midsummer Night's Dream may represent the notions prevalent among the common people of England, on the subject of elves and fays, in the reigns of the Tudors. The myths of Hellas, as they grew up in the mountain village or the depths of the forest, were strange and outlandish even to the eye of an ancient mythographer²⁶. It was enough at first if they answered the purpose for which they were produced, that of securing respect for the rude ordinances which were the earliest legal check to the ferocity of uncivilised men.

It is important above all things for understanding any question of mythology, to separate this era of the natural growth of myths, from those later periods in which their handling by poets and logographers produced a far greater luxuriance, although one of an entirely different kind, and also from that still later, when their arrangement by collectors had superinduced a semblance of chronological order. The genuine myth is not a fiction in the proper sense of the word; it was the only possible form for denoting the new phenomena which presented themselves, and demanded to be expressed. It bore an analogy to the common use of metaphorical language,—in which we apply to spiritual experiences language borrowed from the world of sense (as when we talk of being prostrated by a calamity),—or to the practice of children, who will continually speak of that which they are imagining as a transaction which is actually taking place, and who often become really alarmed at the terrors which in their play they create for themselves. The genuine myth therefore is in its essence a truth; for its form expresses the real social conditions of those periods of human existence during which it arises; and its preservation in an uncorrupted shape is the most valuable of all materials for the philosophical historian. There can be no greater confusion than to consider it as interchangeable with fable, unless it be the transplanting it into ages and conditions of society where none of the necessities which gave rise to it existed, and where it is scarcely less absurd to look for it than it would be to search for wild flowers among the pavement of Cheapside.

The first important step in the modification of the myth perhaps was taken by the officials of the temples themselves, in substituting the hymn, with its attractions of metre and music, for the ancient dry formula of invocation. The earliest hymn writers were doubtless themselves priests of the deity celebrated, and their first performances in all probability differed but little from the jejune genealogies to which they succeeded. Unfortunately the productions of Olen the Lycian, Pamphus the Athenian, and Musæus the Eleusinian (who belonged to this class, and are said to have lived before the time of Homer), are so utterly lost, that no direct notion can be formed of their nature; but a few lines which remain of a writer who lived at no great distance of time after the conquest of the Peloponnese, and who may be regarded as belonging to the next stage of advance, entirely go to confirm this view. They constitute a portion of the ἕσμα προσόδου, or hymn in which the sacred procession saluted the Delian Apollo upon entering the walls of his temple. The hymn itself was written by EUMELUS OF CORINTH, a member of the illustrious house of the Bacchiads, for the Messenians on the first occasion of their participating in the festival; and if any opinion may be formed from the specimen which remains, it consisted of a versified recitation of the genealogies through which the ethnical connexion of the Messenians with the other tribes that frequented the Delian panegyris was exhibited³⁷. The fragment is thus given by TZETZES:

Ἄλλ' ὅτε δ' Αἰήτης καὶ Ἀλῶνις ἐξεγένοντο
 Ἑλλίου τε καὶ Ἀντιόπης, τότε δ' ἄνδρα χάριν

From hymns of such a description as this must have been, the transition is scarcely perceptible to the poems of the so-called Cycle, which in fact may be regarded, in their origin, as founded upon

them. The Alexandrine grammarians who arranged these so as to constitute in themselves a complete collection of the Hellenic mythology, were guided entirely by a view to their fitness for mutual adaptation, so as to produce a consistent and continuous narrative; and in this they only carried out the principle upon which the several poets had acted in the composition of their own works. Hence it is that they are called πρῶται ἱστορικοί, and regarded as differing from the logographers who arose yet later, only by the circumstance of writing in metre²⁸. Their poetical merits were perhaps small, but they left no current legend without finding a place for it somewhere or other. The description which MACROBIUS gives of one of them may serve for all. "Virgil," he says, "copied almost verbally his overthrow of Troy, with the story of Sinon and the wooden horse, and all the other contents of his second book, from Pisander, an author distinguished among the Greek poets by a work which, beginning with the nuptials of Jupiter and Juno, collects and reduces into one series all the historical incidents which occurred in the whole of the intervening ages, down to Pisander's own time, and produces a single body out of diverse insulated periods (unum ex diversis hiatibus temporum corpus efficit)"²⁹.

It is obvious, however, that in a people endowed so universally as was the case with the Greeks, with a capacity for apprehending the beautiful in every possible form, mythical history, when once the influence of the artist began to be exercised upon it, would rapidly alter its character, and while it became fuller and richer, would at the same time become more nearly identical with simple fable. In the time of the Hellenic drama, the right of the poet to shape the legend he handled in any way most convenient to himself was not questioned; and the only obstacle to the most arbitrary treatment of the myths arose out of the circumstance, that, as in their main outline they were already familiar to every body, any extraordinary variation from this would have been detrimental to the artistic effect. The spectator, for instance, who sat down in the temple of Dionysus accustomed to think of Helen as having been carried off to Troy by her paramour, would have been (unless familiar with STESICHOUS) utterly puzzled as the curtain rose to find her in Egypt, possessed with the sentiments of a Penelope, and only enduring life in the hope of being ultimately enabled to disabuse her husband of a ten years' delusion, and recover her own character in the public opinion of Hellas. Accordingly EURIPIDES, whose career coincides with the time in which the desire for novelty had completely over-ridden all regard for the traditional method of treating mythical subjects, was compelled, in this as in many other instances, to resort to that peculiarity which drew upon him the ridicule of his comic contemporary, —to employ the first of his personages who appeared on the stage in explaining the particulars of the plot⁴⁰. His predecessor SOPHOCLES, and ÆSCHYLUS indeed also, had introduced some variations into the currently received legends; in fact, slight variations could hardly fail to arise as soon as ever the imagination of the poet was brought to bear upon them; and these would insensibly increase without attracting especial notice until accidental circumstances directed attention to them⁴¹.

But although the early myths were much modified by their poetical handling as soon as they grew into any thing more than dry genealogies, the change thus produced in them was at any rate not of a kind to mask their original character, and to invest them with an undue historical credit in the eyes of posterity. It was otherwise, however, in their passage through the hands of the logographers, whose occupation it became to complete the work which the cyclical poets had begun, of collecting and arranging all the local legends into one consistent whole. When the several genealogies had once been combined, there was a strong temptation to pursue the task of arrangement yet further, and to link the whole together by a chronological system, of which the basis was the number of generations

εἴτ' οὐκ ἐλήθουν ὃ τι τέχουμ', οὐδ' ἐμπεσὼν ἔφυγον, ἀλλ' οὐδὲν πρότεστα μὲν μοι τὸ γένος εἶπ' ἂν εἰθὺς
τοῦ δράματος.—(Frogs, 945.)

⁴¹ Such, for instance, as the peculiarity of EURIPIDES's prologues; or the trenching upon the sacred traditions of a deity whose ritual was a secret one, as ÆSCHYLUS did when he made Artemis the daughter of Demeter, following, as Herodotus tells us (ii. 156), a Hellenized Egyptian legend. He was accused of revealing the doctrine of the mysteries, and pleaded in his defence that if he did so he did it in ignorance. (ARISTOTLE, Nicom. Ethic. p. 1111.)

which appeared to have elapsed⁴². This attempt seems to have been first systematically carried out by HELLANICUS, whose work or works differed from those of his predecessors by not being a mere topographical account of a single locality, but on the contrary including an extent of subject equal to that embraced by Herodotus. Still, however, unlike Herodotus, who weaves into one web the history of all the nations on which he touches, Hellanicus adopted what may be called a topical method, as is obvious from the titles under which he is quoted: Attica, Persica, Troica, and the like. The fragments which remain show that both mythical and historical stories were equally welcome to him; but his essential characteristic is the chronological attempt just referred to. This, in some respects, was not without a claim to a scientific character; for the foundation of it was the succession of the priestesses in the temple of Here between Argos and Mycenæ. So far back as these were entered in contemporaneous records, the register must have been a very valuable document; and from the circumstance of THUCYDIDES fixing the beginning of his history by stating that the attack on Plataea took place in the forty-eighth year of the priesthood of Chrysis⁴³, one is led to believe that it may have furnished a better basis for an era than the registers of the victors either at Pythia and Olympia, or perhaps than any other then existing document. Nevertheless, even in the most recent times, Hellanicus's chronological arrangement was inaccurate⁴⁴, and Thucydides mentions this as one of the reasons, which induced himself to give that brief summary which is the foundation of all the knowledge we possess, of the history of Greece between the Persian and Peloponnesian wars. How entirely sandy a foundation therefore must lie under such statements as that of the month and the day upon which Troy was taken, or of the year in which the nation of the Sicels migrated from the south of Italy to the island to which they gave their name⁴⁵. Yet such a chronological thread as that of Hellanicus, however feeble, was convenient as a mere means of arrangement, and while regarded merely in this light, there was no reason that it should be abandoned. That it maintained its ground for this purpose, until the more comprehensive systems of Eratosthenes and Apollodorus threw it into the shade, can scarcely be doubted⁴⁶.

The register of the priestesses of Here can only be considered as one document out of many of the same kind existing in Hellas. Wherever there was a temple endowed with a demesne, we may be perfectly sure that there was a muniment room. In some instances we know, and in others all analogy would lead us to presume, that the inferior service of a temple, and the cultivation of the neighbouring lands, was carried on by a population originally consisting of hierodules, belonging to the chapter of superior priests or (in the language of antiquity) to the deity to whom the temple was dedicated. As in the middle ages, so here, a transition would gradually take place from an absolutely servile condition to that of villenage. The supply of attendants would sometimes be partially renewed by the dedication of a portion of the captives taken when a town was stormed and destroyed, or by a votive offering of a similar description sent by some affiliated community⁴⁷,—sometimes, too, it would be augmented by the helpless foundling picked up within the sacred precinct, and regarded by pagan humanity as possibly the offspring of the master of the temple⁴⁸, or by the victim of individual oppresrightly holds that it is unquestionably Hellanicus who is described by DIONYSIUS OF HALICARNASSUS in the words ὁ τὰς ἱερέας τὰς ἐν Ἀργεὶ καὶ τὰ κατ' ἑκάστην πρυθέρτα συνταγών. (Gr. 53.)

⁴⁶ It is not to be assumed that because these Alexandrine scholars superseded their predecessors, and have continued, through Eusebius and others, to be the text-book of ancient chronography to the present day, that their methods were more critical; or that any greater dependance is to be placed upon the date of a professed historical transaction, antecedent to the period of contemporaneous records, because it found a place in their canons. The question, when reckoning backward once commenced, became only one of comprehensiveness and convenient arrangement; and if a myth was ever discarded, it was only from its being utterly unmanageable in combination with the rest.

sion, who was glad to exchange the service of a secular master for that lighter burden which a religious fraternity even in pagan times seemed to promise⁴⁹; but the regular maintenance of the ritual and of the fabric required a substantial endowment, and as this could only be in land, the question would at once arise, how this land was to be made to yield its produce. Who was to plough and sow it if under tillage? who to feed the flocks and herds if it consisted of pasture? The original arrangement would doubtless be that which has been always found to prevail, where the conquest of a country by a warlike race has taken place under conditions of imperfect civilisation. The conquered people are, in such cases, compelled to maintain themselves and their conquerors by tilling the fields or herding the flocks of the latter, and they receive as their wages the permission to raise their own subsistence from a portion of the soil occupied by themselves. Such a state of things as this may be regarded as the normal type of pagan religious establishments. The temple, like its successor the abbey, commonly stood in the depth of a forest (the répos or ager publicus), whose solemn shades, unviolated by the axe, were the special haunt of the divinity. Round about were scattered the hamlets of the country people, serfs of the pagan chapter, but still under the guardianship of the deity to whom the land they tilled belonged, and participators in the ritual for the maintenance of which they paid a portion of their produce. Their condition was an enviable one as compared with the periæcian population of secular communities. If they furnished victims for the sacrifices, they partook of at least a portion of the flesh. They would have the privilege of hunting within the forest, and of taking the apples and chestnuts, and the windfalls of wood⁵⁰. The periodical festivals brought many an Autolycus with his pack; and his arrival was the more welcome from his also bringing the news of what was going on in every place through which he had past. If perhaps he took advantage of the influence which plentiful potations from the great silver bowl—the grace-cup at the *Theophania*⁵¹—had exerted upon their brains, and made them give an undue price for their wives' scarlet mantles⁵², or some perfectly irresistible piece of carpet work⁵³, they might console themselves with thinking that the royal present which the pedlar told them he heard was on its way from Sardis would more than make up the difference⁵⁴. It was in the nature of things that a population of this kind should be a contented and thriving one; and if the votive offerings of devotees are to be regarded as one source of the wealth of the sacred communities, another no less important one is to be found in the security from rapine and violence which their religious character afforded to the cultivators of the soil. Some of the first-fruits of this would be the acquisition of a vested interest in their holdings, on condition of rendering the accustomed suit and service to the god. In the course of time special privileges would be granted to individuals, and the record of these 'copyholders' would be preserved in some form or other within the temple⁵⁵. In it the names of the members of the chapter or of its officers, for the time being, would appear; and thus in the lapse of years materials would be formed for a kind of chronicle of the foundation. The skeleton of this would consist of a list of names derived from such sources as have been hinted, augmented by the ethnical and religious genealogies above mentioned, and, where there were public games, by the register of the victors; and in course of time would be enriched by an ample harvest of details supplied from the traditional stories which were attached to the various offerings accumulated in the treasury.

If, now, no violent revolutions had occurred after the first settlement of the several temples in Hellas, such local chronicles might have acquired considerable fulness⁵⁶, and extending over a large

⁵⁶ Two of the recent publications of the CAMDEN SOCIETY afford an excellent illustration of the nature of such compilations as those described in the text. The Liber de antiquis legibus contains a list of the mayors and sheriffs of the city of London from the first year of Richard I. (1188) to the second year of Edward I. (1274), together with an account of remarkable events which happened in their time of office. This portion of the work is written in Latin by the same hand; consequently, by some one who was living at the last date, and who therefore must have space of time from the epoch of their first assuming the character of contemporary records, would have possessed great value as materials for genuine history". But the continual invasions of hostile tribes prevented this. It was not necessary for the conquerors to be of an altogether alien race, who would utterly destroy the temples of the conquered, as the Persians did those of the Hellenic cities in Asia. It would be enough to thoroughly unsettle the tenure of the society's property and to destroy the continuity of its history, if the hierarchy was changed and the care of the temple entrusted to families of the victorious tribe. Such would bring their own traditions with them, and even in the favourable case of an amalgamation of these with what they found, the old annals in their genuine form would be very unpalatable to the new comers. The acceptance of a current story of a kind to imply that the actual possessors of a shrine were intruders into it, would have been a glaring impiety according to ancient ways of thinking". After every such change, therefore, as is marked mythically by the introduction of a new deity with his appropriate legend, we must conceive the back history of the temple to be in a manner reconstructed, retaining only so much of its taken the first portion of the period from some other authority. Accordingly, the earlier years are exceedingly meagre of incidents. But to the whole is prefixed a collection of stories bearing upon the yet more ancient English history, most of which are taken from William of Malmesbury. The Peterborough Chronicle commences in the year 1122, and the first ninety years are exceedingly scanty, containing only a few brief entries relating to public affairs. For the next sixty years it is more minute, and more obviously derived from sources of information peculiar to the abbey, and from the year 1273 it is a contemporaneous history, full and detailed, of the proceedings of the chapter during the next ten years. The original foundation of the abbey was nearly six hundred years before this time, but the edifice had been burnt by the Danes, and the new church was built by abbot John, whose death (in 1125) is one of the earliest events named in the chronicle.

⁵⁸ Thus Clisthenes of Sicyon, who had confiscated the property of the Adrastus temple, was obliged as a necessary consequence to forbid the recitation of the Thebais and Epigoni. See note 99 on iv. 33, and note 172 on v. 67. The conquest of the Poseidon-worshippers of the acropolis at Athens by the Athene-worshippers of the Areopagus is, in the myth, very carefully masked. Theseus, although his pedigree betrays his connexion with Poseidon, is made to be himself the founder of Athene as the tutelary deity of the united city. The hostile inhabitants of the Areopagus are converted into Amazons, although Athene's early connexion with that locality is evinced by her establishment of the court there. And finally, the struggle takes the shape of an amicable rivalry between the two deities as to which shall produce the gift of greatest utility to their common protégés.

It is not to be supposed, however, that chronicles, such as have been described, attracted any great attention. Even in the monastic establishments of the middle ages, the taste for compiling such works only existed in a very small number out of the multitude of their inmates. And in the religions of pagan antiquity,—at least those which chiefly prevailed at the time with which we are concerned,—it must be remembered that not the maceration of the body, but the development of its powers in vigour, not the contemplative life of the recluse, but the stirring energy of the warrior and statesman would be the object kept habitually in view. Apollo gave his advice upon schemes of conquest, or plans of colonisation which would involve conquest, more than upon any other subject; and if, in the 12th century among the monks of Peterborough or St. Edmund's Bury, we find that active business habits and a shrewd eye for the interests of the fraternity were much more generally appreciated than either ascetic piety or skill in letters, we may be sure that at Pytho or Olympia, at Calauræa or the Isthmus, in a climate where an indoor life is almost an unnatural one, and with a creed which aided instead of checking the animal impulses, clerkly propensities were very rare indeed. Not that the Greek was indifferent to the past time; quite the contrary, but he did not care to look at it as an antiquarian does. Nothing so welcome to him if addressed to his imagination,—in the solemn hymn before the altar of the deity,—or in the mythico-historical address to the multitude assembled in the panegyris. To these he would listen with his whole heart and soul; by the help of a memory unimpaired by reading he would carry them home bodily to his own town, and his wife would repeat them to her handmaidens plying the distaff in the gynæceum³⁹, while the children

³⁹ The attendants on Creusa indicate very plainly what were the two great agencies for propagating in early times that which has been called philosophy teaching by examples.

φάτιν δῖον, εὐτυχίας μετέχειν θεόθεν τέκνα θνατοῖς.

(EURIPIDES, Ion, 506.)

Thus too the Athenian in the Laws of PLATO says: νῦν οὖν πευθόμενοι τοῖς μύθοις, οὓς ἐκ νέων παίδων ἐτι ἐν γάλαξιν τρεφόμενοι τροφῶν τε ἤκουον καὶ μητέρων, οἷον ἐν sat by, suspending for a time the construction of toad-beetles from lime-tree bark, while they drank in the thrilling tale how Xanthus met his death by the sword of Melanthus as he looked round at the black shape which had come and stood behind him, or some equally stirring adventure. But it may be safely affirmed that the real early history of the Hellenic tribes would have been, without the intervention of poets or logographers, altogether unpalatable. The system secured by the factitious arrangements of the latter was the very least substitute which could be accepted, for the appeal to the fancy which the former had been accustomed to make.

Having thus traced up the mythico-historical traditions of early Greece to that stage in their growth at which they had acquired a definite shape, had become recognised in the common belief of several distinct communities, and been fixed by embodiment in poetry or poetical prose, we will turn our attention to a new modification which they would thenceforth receive. Let us suppose a colony sent out, and settled in the midst of a barbarous neighbourhood, such, for instance, as were the settlements on the southern coast of the Euxine. Here the emigrants would retain the traditions and the ritual which they carried with them, in a pure state. There would be none of that religious syncretism which was the necessary result of conquest, wherever a close affinity existed between the victors and the vanquished; for there would be no amalgamation of races whatever, any more than there was between the Portuguese settlers on the coast of Africa and the negroes which they found there. But now a phenomenon of a different kind would present itself. As in the earliest days, the natural features of a neighbourhood gave a specific form to the incidents with which the dry skeleton of the historical genealogy was enriched, so, after the full grown myth had been fixed by the poet or logographer, and transported by a colony from its original site to a foreign shore, was the new neighbourhood required to furnish visible objects illustrative of the imported legend. Hence the numberless Nysas, each the reputed nursing place of Dionysus,—hence the repetition of the rivers Tritonis and Thermodon,—hence the cave through which Heracles descended to Hades, shown at Heraclea on the Euxine as well as at Tænarum in Laconia, and many other similar cases. The feeling which occasioned these localisations is one not difficult to understand. It was not peculiar to the pagan mind, but exhibited itself, under similar conditions of civilisation, in the Christian practices of the middle ages. In the steep hills (sometimes artificial mounds), which under the name of Gottesbergs or Calvaries are found throughout continental Europe in the vicinity of the sites of ancient churches⁶⁰, it is not difficult to recognise exactly the same principle of representation which prevailed in pagan antiquity;—a principle enforced by the necessities of the case. The heart of a German or Italian peasant of the 10th century would have been as dull to the simple narrative of events which took place at a distant place and remote time, as those of his pagan ancestors fifteen hundred years before. For him at all to enter into them, it was absolutely indispensable that they should be in a manner acted before his eyes. To regard such local representations as arbitrary fictions or priestly impostures, is just as unphilosophical a proceeding as the attempt to maintain them as if justified by historical facts⁶¹.

Finally, a yet different modification of traditions would take place when, in the course of time, circumstances led to the establishment of intercourse between two or more previously insulated offshoots of a common stock, after the recollection of their common origin had passed away. It was an obvious step to account for the community of habits, and sometimes of language also, apparent in two such tribes, by the hypothesis of a direct migration of the ancestors of the one from the site occupied by the other. Thus the Tyrrhenes of Italy were represented as having come from Lydia, the Phrygians of Asia from Macedonia, the Minyæans of the western shore of the Peloponnese from Lemnos, and the numerous insulated spots where traces of a Pelasgian population remained, were connected with one another by ascribing to that race habits of life of an altogether anomalous character⁶¹. The whole cycle of traditions upon which the story of the Æneid is founded is the combined product of this influence and of that other one which has last been noticed. The Homeric poems and the cyclics furnished the warp, the ethnical affinity of the Asiatic and Italian tribes supplied the woof, of that rich web of poetical history, which was appropriated by VIRGIL, worked up by him into a form adapted to the requirements of his time, and in that state consolidated for all future ages by the epic which has immortalised his name.

What has been said will perhaps be sufficient to guide the student to a right appreciation of the nature of the materials which lay ready to the hand of Herodotus; but a few words may still be desirable upon the principle of discrimination which he appears to have followed.

It has been pointed out above, how the temples, in the neighbourhood of which any periodically recurring assemblage was held, became, from the nature of the case, points of crystallisation for the history of the several communities which took part therein. When this had acquired any definite shape, it naturally would, together with the religious ritual and its explanatory traditions, be carried into any new locality to which the ancient shrine sent out its missionaries. Wherever there was a sanctuary of great reputation and extensive connexions, it would follow as a direct consequence, that its mythico-historical traditions would spread far and wide, and be in the main accepted over an area co-extensive with that of its religious authority. When, therefore, we find, as is sometimes the case, two distinct communities produced as evidence for a particular story, it must not be hastily inferred that the story is an historically true one in the shape in which the two acknowledge it; for the agreement may arise simply from the circumstance of the two frequenting a common shrine, from which the story originally emanated. Thus, for instance, it cannot be doubted that the Hellenium at Naucratis was the original source of many tales which might be current at Chios, Teos, Phocæa, Clazomenæ, Ialysus, Camirus, Lindus, Cnidus, Halicarnassus, Phaselis, and Mytilene⁶², or at any number of those towns; and the apparent concurrence of testimony would in such a case, for the purposes for which a modern historian values it, be altogether imaginary. But, looking at the matter in the way in which it was viewed five hundred years before the Christian era, that concurrence would be extremely important. It would demonstrate that the story in question was a portion of the body of tradition received and delivered at the central shrine, and consequently would authenticate it with all persons in whose eyes that body of tradition possessed authority. There would not indeed be that kind of conviction which is sought for by the investigations of modern scholars, but the need of such a conviction was not felt. Accordingly we find Herodotus, in his most critical moods, testing the merits of any mythical story he heard simply by its conformity with some other to which he had attached credence⁴³. To attribute extraordinary sagacity to him for bringing such stories to a test at all, is no more justifiable than to ascribe to him extraordinary credulity for not bringing them to a better one. He is to be regarded as a man of intelligence in his age, but not in advance of it to any appreciable extent.

The celebrated story told by LUCIAN, relative to an asserted recitation of the history before the assembled Greeks at Olympia, is so generally exploded at the present time, that it is hardly worth while to advert to it, except to remark that it so far conforms to all other ancient criticisms of our author, as to represent him in the light of an artist anxious to produce a work of beauty and general interest, and not in that of an antiquarian. In all its details the story is altogether out of keeping, both with the habits of the time and the appearances which are manifest in the work itself, as has been pointed out in several of the notes. But that portions of the work were read to an audience, not indeed as part of a solemn ceremony, probably at one time monopolised the trade between Egypt and Greece. (Herod. ii. 178.) I am much inclined to suspect that Cos once stood in the list and completed the number of twelve.

⁴³ As, for instance, where he acquiesces with satisfaction in the hypothesis of a double Heracles, as a means of reconciling chronologically the story of the Thasian Heracles at Tyre with the common Heracles legend of European Hellas (ii. 44), and where he rejects the story of Rhodopis attached to the pyramid of Mycerinus, because the heroine of it cannot be brought into synchronism with the female of the same name whose offering existed at Delphi (ii. 134-5). In the former of these cases, his obvious uneasiness, lest he should inadvertently have been guilty of a piece of irreverence, is very curious and instructive. (§ 46, ult.)

but as the usual and natural mode of publishing, at an era when literature was addressed to the ear, is at least not improbable. In fact it seems far from unlikely that the original draft of the work contained only the last three books, and that of the remainder all the several parts were not added simultaneously. If we could be certain that any one of the MSS which exist represented the text as it was left by the author, only altered by the accidents consequent on transcription, this problem might be solved satisfactorily. This, however, is not the case. It was the practice with the booksellers under the Roman empire to make very considerable alterations in the books which they had transcribed, for the purpose of adding to their interest⁶⁴; and there are several passages, especially in the first half of the work of Herodotus, of which it seems doubtful whether they are not notes, originally added for the purpose of illustration by some ancient editor, and afterwards incorporated with the text. Many of these, certainly, may be accounted for on the hypothesis that the author kept an interleaved copy of his book by him to the last, and from time to time inserted in this other incidents which came to his notice and seemed likely to enhance the value of the whole. But this explanation will scarcely suffice to explain all the phenomena of the kind referred to; besides which there is strong evidence of very considerable variation of the copies in early times. Two of the manuscripts which remain stand apart in a striking manner from the rest; and there formerly were copies which differed from any now in existence⁶⁵. The uncertainty arising from these disturbing causes renders it next to impossible, from the present condition of Herodotus's history, to draw a certain conclusion as to the conditions under which it was originally composed. For instance, it has been sometimes assumed that descriptions implying personal knowledge of the object described prove beyond the possibility of question that the author must have travelled in the locality of which he is speaking; but in some cases the passages to which this character attaches

present the appearance of proceeding from an ancient editor, while in others the inexplicable silence upon topics which must have suggested themselves to an eye-witness compels the conclusion, that the writer has in those places adopted and embodied in his work the narrative of another party without changing the form of expression which the circumstances of that party might have rendered appropriate⁶⁶. The way in which whole passages from preceding writers are said to have been tacitly appropriated has been mentioned above⁶⁷. So far, therefore, from tracing out a map of the travels of Herodotus from the incidental notices which occur in his history of different places, some readers may be disposed to take an altogether different view of the case, and to regard the author as handling his subject in the manner of De Foe, being perhaps all the time a resident in Samos or Athens. But although this view has more plausibility than the modern notion which represents Herodotus as a critic and antiquarian, it seems incompatible with another phenomenon which is observable on an attentive perusal of his work, namely, the incorporation of heterogeneous traditions,—of which several examples have been pointed out in the notes,—and even more so with the adoption of minor details which are out of keeping with the main outlines of the narrative into which they are introduced⁶⁸. Truth will, in this matter as in most others, probably lie between the extreme views. A candid reader who will read the history through, unhampered by any preconceived theory, simply putting himself in the position of a Greek of the fifth century before the Christian era, will probably not doubt that the author saw much with his own eyes, although perhaps he received more from the accounts of others; and while he will not feel surprised at the general assumption of the character of a narrator at first hand, he will not press this into a claim of extraordinary historical authority. The nearest parallel, perhaps, which can be adduced to the first six books, is to be found in the Travels of MARCO POLO, which in many respects present very curious analogies. Like the work of Herodotus, that book very early appeared in manuscripts which differed from one another to a considerable extent, some betraying marks of excision, others of interpolation; in the latter case the additions being sometimes apparently contemporaneous with the traveller, sometimes demonstrably of later date. The narrative, too, as in the case of Herodotus, possesses in the main an unmistakeably truthful character, and yet does not change its form when passing from the region of personal experience to the narration of particulars which undoubtedly rested on hearsay.

The object of the commentary being, as I have stated above, not simply to elucidate the text of the author, I have freely made use of the stores which were at hand in the notes of Valcknaer, Wesseling, Schweighaeuser, and Larcher (of whose commentary I have used the English translation by Mr. Cooley), as well as of the labours of Heyne, Lobeck, Mueller, and others, without thinking it necessary to notice the circumstance in particular instances. In fact, the accumulations of those worthies have now so long formed a part of the elementary knowledge of every classical scholar, that the acknowledgement of the obligation in each particular case is scarcely possible, and serves no other purpose than that of distracting the reader of a note from the point to which it is especially wished to fix his attention. When we owe, as we do, our whole power of taking any thing like a wide view of classical antiquity to having mounted upon the shoulders of our fathers, it seems absurd to repeat our thanks for each particular feature of the landscape. On the other hand, I have been particularly careful when resorting to ancient writers for the purpose of illustration, to keep in the eye of the student their character and authority; and thus to save him, so far as possible, from falling into the common error of mechanically putting together materials of the most heterogeneous description, in the notion that he is thereby increasing his knowledge of ancient history. The collations of the manuscripts have been entirely taken on the authority of Professor Gaisford's arrangement of them, and his text, from the circumstance of its being very widely used, has been followed where the contrary fact is not notified. This remark, however, does not apply to changes in the punctuation, which has been freely altered, and a large proportion of the stops removed for the sake of perspicuity.

a, b, c, d, e, f are six in the same, collated by Schweighaeuser. Of these, the first is of the 12th, the second of the 14th, and the third and fourth of the 15th century. The fifth is a mere fragment containing only i. 1—87, and the sixth contains mere excerpta. According to Schweighaeuser, A and c, B and b, and C and a, exhibit a striking agreement with one another.

K, a fragmentary manuscript of the 12th century in the Cambridge University Library, collated by Wesseling.

S, a manuscript of the 12th century, formerly belonging to Archbishop Sancroft, now in the Library of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, collated by Wesseling and Gaisford.

V, a manuscript of the same age with S, with which it has a remarkable agreement, at Vienna, collated by Wesseling.

They may be divided into three classes, each representing, with more or fewer minor variations, a common ancestor, thus—

I. M, F, P, and the fragmentary K.

II. S and V.

III. A, C, a and c.

The rest, B, b, d, e, f are sporadic in their character. The second class appears to show more grammatical care on the part of the transcribers than the others, but the inconstancy of all is shown in several instances in the notes.

I will only further add, that the task of annotating having been diffused over a considerable time^o, and performed in the short intervals which could be snatched from occupations of a different character, I fear there may be found some unnecessary repetitions, and probably not a few oversights which a continuous execution of the work would have prevented. These will, I hope, be judged with indulgence if I have at all succeeded in my main object,—that of illustrating, through the medium of the most fascinating of Greek prose writers, the habits and feelings of the time in which he lived, and awakening attention to the common motives of human action, exhibited in forms belonging to a state of things which has long since passed away.

⁶ καὶ δὴ καί. This, and καὶ δὴ, are expressions which Herodotus habitually uses to introduce that particular feature of a narrative which bears upon the purpose he has in hand. Here, for instance, he wanted to bring the Phœnicians to Argos, in order to connect their habits with the Hellenic legend of Io. Translate, "and, in fine, to Argos." The etymology of δὴ from ἥδη seems to furnish the best clue to its proper signification. The clause in which it occurs always contains a tacit reference to something previously related or understood to have happened. Thus, in the sentence next but one following, δὴ serves to direct the mind of the reader to what had just been said of Argos, the greatness of which was a part of the tradition. Translate, "Well, to this Argos the Phœnicians came, and set out their wares." So i. 9, ὁ μὲν δὴ τοιαῦτα λέγων ἀπεμάχετο, "well, he on his side by such-like arguments strove to get off." iv. 157: οὐ γὰρ δὴ σφέας ἀπείει· ὁ θεὸς τῆς ἀποικίης, πρὶν δὴ ἀπίκωνται ἐς αὐτὴν τὴν Λιβύην, "for, after all, the god refused to release them from the undertaken settlement, until, hindrance or no hindrance, they got to Libya itself."

⁷ κατὰ πρύμνην τῆς νεὸς. The vessel is supposed to be drawn up on the beach with her head to sea, ready therefore to be at once run out.

¹⁵ οὐδέ. Gaisford οὐτε.

¹⁶ τοὺς δὲ, προῖσχομένων ταῦτα. "And that they (the Trojans, the countrymen of Alexander) on the (Hellenes) putting forward their claims." The familiarity of the legend justifies the laxity of the style.

¹⁷ Μηδείης. Two of the MSS (S and V) retain here also the form Μηδίας.

But the others have the more common form.

¹⁹ τὸ δὲ μηδεμίαν . . . σωφρόνων. This clause is found in all the MSS; but it is difficult to conceive that it could have been the intention of the author, if it proceeded from his pen, to allow it to stand together with the preceding sentence, with which it is precisely identical in point of sense. If either of the two clauses be struck out, the rhetorical antithesis, which is obviously intended, is unimpaired. This is not the case, if both stand. It seems probable that here is an instance of a double reading introduced by the collation of two MSS, in the one of which the former clause was found, and in the other the latter. The former seems to have existed in the copy used by PLUTARCH (De Malignitate Herodoti, p. 856. F.).

²⁰ τὴν Ἀσίην . . . οἱ Πέρσαι. See, in illustration of this principle, the story of Artayctes (ix. 116). But this antithesis of Europe and Asia, as parallel to Hellenic and Barbarian, is doubtless later than the battle of Marathon. Before that time, or at least before the destruction of Miletus, the Hellenes of Asia were vastly more powerful than those of Europe. But after these had been crushed, and the check to the growth of Persia had been given by the Europeans, the vanity of the latter suggested such views as those which ÆSCHYLUS gives in the vision of Atossa (Persæ, 176—196), and which from that time forward passed current.

use of the word. It always contains a tacit reference to certain conditions; and may often be rendered by the English "then and not till then." i. 11, τότε μὲν δὴ οὕτως οὐδὲν δηλώσασα ἡσυχίην εἶχε, "well, at the time, she just as she was, gave no sign of observing, and kept still." ἢ αὐτὸν σὲ αὐτίκα οὕτω ἀποθήσκειν δεῖ, "or you yourself must die immediately, as you stand." CICERO (Pro Sexto Roscio, § xxvi. 71), of the punishment of parricides, which were sown up in a sack alive and thrown into a river, says: "Noluerunt feris corpus obficere, ne bestiis quoque quæ tantum scelus attigissent immanioribus uteremur; non SIC nudos in flumen dejicere, ne quum delati essent in mare, ipsum polluerent."

³⁵ παῖς παρὰ πατρός ἐκδεκόμενος τὴν ἀρχήν. Attempts have been made to reconcile this statement with probability, by interpreting it as merely meaning that the succession was on the hereditary principle. But nothing can be imagined more foreign to the habits of thought in the time of Herodotus than the interposition of such a remark would be. Hereditary succession was the rule in that time; and the long genealogy in a direct line presented to an uncritical age no difficulties whatever. Herodotus does not display the least surprise, on this account, at the hereditary succession of the Egyptian priests, which extended to 341 generations (ii. 143). The passages, ii. 65. 166, are no defence whatever for a loose interpretation of this one. The profession of arms was not hereditary in Hellas, and the priestly office only so in some cases.

δαίτερα. See below, note on i. 133, σπουδαιότατα.

³⁷ ἀπιστότερα. Not “less persuasive,” but “less trusted.” The sentiment is the same as that expressed by SENECA (ep. vi.): Homines amplius oculis quam auribus credunt,—not that of HORACE (A. P. 180):

Segnius irritant animos demissa per aures, Quam quæ sunt oculis subjecta fidelibus. See, however, ix. 98.

³⁹ ὁ μὲν δὴ. See note 6, above.

⁴⁰ μὴ τι οἱ ἐξ αὐτέων γένηται κακόν. According to the well-known rules as to the use of the subjunctive and optative

μη φοβεῦ μήτε ἐμέ, ὥς σεο πειρώμενον λόγον⁴¹ τόνδε, μήτε γυναῖκα τὴν ἐμήν, μή τι τοι ἐξ αὐτῆς γένηται βλάβος· ἀρχὴν⁴² γὰρ ἐγὼ μηχανήσομαι οὕτω, ὥστε μηδὲ μαθεῖν μιν ὀφθεῖσαν ὑπὸ

 μένης θύρης στήσω· μετὰ δ' ἐμὲ ἐσελθόντα παρέσται καὶ ἡ γυνή ἡ ἐμή ἐς κοῖτον. κείμεναι δὲ ἀγχού τῆς ἐσόδου θρόνος· ἐπὶ τοῦτον τῶν ἱματίων κατὰ ἐν ἑκαστον ἐκδύνουσα θήσει⁴³, καὶ κατ' ἡσυχίην πολλὴν παρέξει τοι θεήσασθαι. ἐπεὰν δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ θρόνου στείλῃ ἐπὶ τὴν εὐνὴν, κατὰ νότου τε αὐτῆς γένῃ, σοὶ μελέτω τὸ ἐνθεῦτεν ὅπως μὴ σε ὀφεται ἰόντα διὰ θυρέων." Ὁ μὲν δὴ, ὥς οὐκ ἐδύνάτο 10
 διαφυγεῖν, ἦν ἐτοιμός⁴⁴. ὁ δὲ Κανδαύλης, ἐπεὶ ἐδόκεε ὥρῃ τῆς after the conjunctions ὅπως, ὅφρα, μή, and ὅνα, we should expect here the optative γένοιτο instead of the subjunctive γένηται. But in fact the canons of Dawes and Monk, though applicable in the main, do not explain all the cases which occur. The subjunctive is appropriately used in the dependent clause, when the event expressed in that clause is regarded as either the probable or the direct result of a previous hypothesis; the optative, when the mere possibility or contingency of it is contemplated. The clause in the text should be rendered, "dreading that some mischief would come to him." If the optative had been used, the meaning would have been, "dreading lest some mischief might come to him." Gyges saw his own destruction as the direct and natural consequence of the transaction in which he was urged to take part. The following passage, which baffles the application of the formal rules, well illustrates the real principle which regulates the use of the two moods. EURIPIDES (Hecub. 1133, seqq.):

Ἔδισα μὴ σοὶ πολέμος λειφθεὶς ὁ παῖς Τροίαν ἀβροίσῃ καὶ ξυνοικίσῃ πάλιν, γνόντες δ' Ἀχαιοὶ ὧντα Πριάμιδων τινα, Φρυγῶν ἐς αἶαν ἀδῖος ἄρειαν στόλον, κέπειτα Θρήκης πεδία τρίβοιεν τάδε λεηλατοῦντες, κ.τ.λ.

"I dreaded that the boy would rebuild Troy [as a natural and direct consequence if he grew up to manhood]; and that, when the Achæans knew that one of the race of Priam was alive, they might again bring an armament into the land of the Phrygians," &c. This was a distant probability, contingent, first, on Polydorus rebuilding Troy; secondly, on the Achæans hearing of this; thirdly, on their anger being rekindled at the news. That there should be no exact rule for determining when the subjunctive and when the optative should be used, arises from the circumstance that there is no formal limit between probability and possibility.

⁴⁷ ἀναγκαίῃ ἐνδεῖν. The same expression is used ix. 16: ἐπόμεθα ἀναγκαίῃ ἐνδεδεμένοι.

⁴⁸ οὐκὼν δὴ ἔπειθε, “in fine, as he failed in persuading.” For the peculiar use of the word οὐκὼν, see note on v. 92, ult.

⁴⁹ φέρε ἀκούσω, “come, let me hear.” For this use of the subjunctive, see ΜΑΤΤΗΙΛ, Gr. Gr. § 516.

Ἔσχε δὲ τὴν βασιλῆην καὶ ἐκρατύνθη ἐκ τοῦ ἐν 13 Δελφοῖσι χρηστηρίου⁵²· ὥς γὰρ δὴ οἱ Λυδοὶ δευνὸν ἐποιοῦντο τὸ Κανδαύλῃα πάθος, καὶ ἐν ὄπλοισι ἦσαν, συνέβησαν ἐς τὸντὸ οἷ τε τοῦ Γύγεω στασιῶται⁵³ καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ Λυδοί, ἦν μὲν δὴ τὸ χρηστήριον ἀνέλη μιν βασιλέα εἶναι Λυδῶν, τὸν δὲ⁵⁴ βασιλεύειν ἦν δὲ μὴ, ἀποδοῦναι ὀπίσω ἐς Ἡρακλείδας τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀνεῖλέ τε δὴ τὸ χρηστήριον καὶ ἐβασίλευσεν οὕτω Γύγης· τοσόνδε μέντοι εἶπε ἢ Πυθίῃ, ὥς Ἡρακλείδῃσι τίσις ἤξει ἐς τὸν πέμπτον ἀπόγονον Γύγεω. τούτου τοῦ ἔπεος Λυδοὶ τε καὶ οἱ βασιλεῖς αὐτῶν λόγον οὐδένα ἐποιοῦντο, πρὶν δὴ ἐπετελέσθῃ.

⁵⁰ τοῦ καὶ . . . ἐπεμνήσθη. Wesseling considers this sentence an interpolation, but on no sufficient ground.

⁵⁵ ἀλλ' ὅσα μὲν ἀργύρου ἐν Δελφοῖσι. This passage is variously explained; but its difficulty has mainly arisen from erroneous interpunctuation, a colon being placed after the word Δελφοῖσι. Hence the whole clause has been taken to be in opposition to the words οὐκ ὀλίγα, and to complete the opposition; and, consequently, ἔστι οἱ πλείστα to mean, "he has most of any person." But the opposition to the words οὐκ ὀλίγα is not completed until the reader comes to the word ἀνέθηκεν. Gyges is represented to have πλείστα ἐν Δελφοῖσι, παρέξ δὲ τοῦ ἀργύρου, χρυσὸν ἄπλετον ἀνέθηκεν, ἄλλον τε καὶ (τοῦ μάλιστα μνήμην ἄξιον ἔχειν ἐστὶ) κρητῆρες οἱ ἀριθμὸν ἕξ χρύσειοι ἀνακέαται· ἐστᾶσι δὲ οὗτοι ἐν τῷ Κορινθίων θησαυρῷ, σταθμὸν ἔχοντες τριήκοντα τάλαντα· ἀληθεῖ δὲ λόγῳ χρεωμένῳ⁵⁶ οὐ Κορινθίων τοῦ δημοσίου ἐστὶν ὁ θησαυρὸς ἀλλὰ Κυψέλου⁵⁷ τοῦ Ἡετίωνος. οὗτος δὲ ὁ Γύγης πρῶτος βαρβάρων τῶν ἡμεῖς ἴδμεν ἐς Δελφούς ἀνέθηκε ἀναθήματα μετὰ Μίδην τὸν Γορδέω, Φρυγίης βασιλέα· ἀνέθηκε γὰρ δὴ καὶ Μίδης τὸν βασιλῆϊον θρόνον ἐς τὸν προκατίζων ἐδίκασε, ἐόντα ἀξιοθέτητον κεῖται δὲ ὁ θρόνος οὗτος ἔνθα περ οἱ τοῦ Γύγω κρητῆρες. ὁ δὲ χρυσὸς οὗτος καὶ ὁ ἀργυρὸς τὸν ὁ Γύγης ἀνέθηκε, ὑπὸ Δελφῶν καλέεται Γυγάδας ἐπὶ τοῦ ἀναθέντος ἐπωνυμίην. ἐσέβαλε μὲν νυν στρατιὴν καὶ οὗτος, ἐπεὶ τε ἥρξε, ἕς τε Μίλητον καὶ ἐς Σμύρνην, καὶ Κολοφῶνος τὸ ἄστυ εἶλε. ἀλλ' οὐδὲν γὰρ μέγα ἔργον ἀπ' αὐτοῦ ἄλλο ἐγένετο βασιλεύσαντος δυὼν δέοντα τεσσαράκοντα ἔτεα, τοῦτον μὲν παρήσομεν τοσαῦτα ἐπιμνησθέντες, Ἄρδους δὲ τοῦ Γύγω μετὰ Γύγην βασιλεύσαντος μνήμην ποιήσομαι· οὗτος δὲ Πιρινεάς τε εἶλε, ἐς Μίλητόν τε ἐσέβαλε· ἐπὶ τούτου τε τυραννεύοντος⁵⁸ Σαρδίων, Κιμμέριοι ἕξ ἠβέων ὑπὸ Σκυθέων τῶν Νομάδων ἐξαναστάντες, ἀπικέατο ἐς τὴν Ἀσίην, καὶ Σάρδις πλὴν τῆς ἀκροπόλεως εἶλον⁵⁹.

Ards took Priene, and invaded Miletus. In his reign the Cimmerian invasion occurred.

made many offerings of silver, but to have been chiefly distinguished by those of gold. The whole passage may be thus translated: "But Gyges, after becoming sovereign, sent off presents to Delphi, not few in number; on the contrary, among the offerings which are of silver he has very many at Delphi, but over and above the silver he presented an immense quantity of gold: among the rest—an offering which deserves especial mention—there are bowls, six in number, made of gold, standing as his" (ἀνακέαται οἱ). Herodotus seems to have been puzzled by the place where these were, and hence to have changed the form of the sentence, which in its normal form would have run, κρητῆρας ἕξ χρυσεύς, into one less decisively expressing who the donor was.

⁵⁷ Κυψέλου. The history of Cypselus is put into the mouth of a Corinthian by Herodotus, v. 92.

⁵⁸ ἐπὶ τούτου τυραννεύοντος. STRABO (in several places) says that the Cimmerian invasion in question was considered to have taken place in the time of Homer, or a little earlier. But from one passage (i. c. 2, p. 31) it is clear that this synchronism was due to the calculations of the chronologists. See note on iv. 11.

⁶⁰ Σαρδυνάττης. This form of the name (which seems undoubtedly the true one, being connected with Σάρδης as Ἀλυάττης is with Ἄλυσ, and both in the Lydian language being probably significant), was recovered by Mr. Long from a MS. in the British Museum. Gaisford has throughout Σαδυνάττης. See note on i. 22, Σαρδηνός.

⁶¹ Κναξάρη ἐπολέμησε. The origin and duration of this war is given by Herodotus below, §§ 73, 74.

has been suggested that the αὐλὸς ἀνδρ. and αὐλὸς γυν. correspond to the tibia dextra and tibia sinistra of the Roman double pipe, and also to the bass and treble clefs in modern harmonies. But there is no sufficient ground to suppose that in the time of Herodotus the musical scale extended over more than eleven notes at the very utmost; so that, if the hypothesis relative to the different pitches of the male and female flute be founded in fact, the difference cannot have been so great as is supposed. But it seems more likely that αὐλὸς γυν. does in this passage mean a flute blown by a female performer. The fact of Halyattes' army being thus attended, in all probability rests upon the interpretation by a Milesian cicerone of the friezes which existed in the temples of Assessus built by him. These temples were traditionally connected with the termination of the war and the formation of an alliance, no doubt cemented by religious ceremonies, in which the several rituals of the deities worshipped by the contracting parties would be embodied and symbolically represented by performers on their appropriate instruments. See the note on i. 60, ἡλαυνον εἰς τὸ ἔστυν.

of the colonies which sprang from her. The whole of the Euxine and the Propontis was full of them; and they were not confined to them. PLINY calls Miletus, Ioniae caput . . . super octoginta urbium per cuncta maria genetriz (N. H. v. 21). Among them may be enumerated the islands Icarus and Lerus, in the Aegean; Apollonia, Odessus, and Mesembria, on the coast of the Euxine, between Salmydessus and the mouth of the Ister; Istropolis, within the Ister; Abydos, Arisba, and Scepsis, in the Troad; Artace, Lampascus, and Cysicus, on the Propontis; Sinope, on the south coast of the Euxine; and Dioscurias, on the river Anthemus, in the extreme east of the same sea. It also possessed a temple at Naucratis in Egypt (ii. 178). The proverb, πάσαι πόλεις ἦσαν ἄλκιμοι Μιλήσιοι, was current at Athens in the time of ARISTOPHANES (Ptuf. 1076). Many different accounts of its origin are given (which are collected by ERASMUS in his Adagia), but there seems no reason to look for any special cause of the outgrowth of such a sentiment, beyond the fact that Miletus furnished far the most familiar instance of departed greatness to a Hellenic observer. It may be observed that some of the eighty towns referred to by Pliny were mere factories, such as those with which the Carthaginians covered the north coast of Africa. An example of these was Thynias, which was an outlying dependency of Apollonia, and probably a factory for the purpose of salting the tunny-fish (θύνους), the staple of those parts. It was, perhaps, from its supremacy over its dependencies that Miletus was once called Ἀνακτορία (PAUSANIAS, vii. 2, 6), although in after-times this name was derived as usual from an autochthonous king, Anax.

⁶⁷ πρὸς Ἐρυθραίους πόλεμον. Of this war, both the date and the occasion can only be matter of conjecture. It probably grew out of the rival mercantile interests of the two cities, Chios and Erythrae, which, especially in the early times, when piratical and commercial undertakings were not strictly defined, continually led to collision. Perhaps this particular war in its consequences may have produced the similarity of dialect between Chios and Erythrae, which Herodotus remarks (i. 142). If Erythrae was overwhelmed by its rival, probably there would be a considerable settlement of the victors in its territory, enough to ⁷⁰ προστιθεῖσι. The form προστιθέασι would be more in accordance with the use of Herodotus, but it seems rash to alter the text against the authority of the whole of the MSS.

⁷¹ τῷ τότε Μιλήτου τυραννεύοντι. ARISTOTLE (Polit. v. p. 1306, A, line 17) gives Miletus as an instance of a democracy being converted into a tyranny from the extent of the powers given to the Pry-tanls. He also remarks that in the ancient Republics, of which Miletus is an example, the tyrants almost always became so from demagogues, but demagogues who were successful, not as orators, but as commanders.

equivalent to κομάζειν, to join in a dachanalian procession. Thus THEOCRITUS says, κομάδω ποτὶ τὰν 'Αμαρυλλίδα (iii. 1), and Dionysus is himself called κομαστός by ARISTOPHANES (Nub. 606). The original idea of the Hellenic κῶμος and the Latin comessatio was, that it was a procession of the deity accompanied by his votaries. It was not confined to the Dionysus-worship, although the predominance of this and its adaptation to carnival-like processions gradually narrowed the meaning of the term. PLUTARCH (Vit. Ant. § 26), describing the voyage of Cleopatra down the Cydnus, says, κατέκειτο ὑπὸ σκιάδι χρυσόπαστῳ, κεκοσμημένη γραφικῶς ὥσπερ 'Αφροδίτη, . . καὶ τις λόγος ἐχώρει διὰ πάντων, ὥς ἡ 'Αφροδίτη κομάζοι παρὰ τὸν Διόνυσον.

σαντα. HELLANICUS and DICÆARCHUS (ap. Schol. Aristoph. Av. 1403) likewise attributed the invention of the dithyramb to Arion. But little more seems to follow from this, than that they followed the same local traditions in this matter which Herodotus does. Wherever there was Dionysus-worship carried to any ritualistic perfection, there no doubt it was a popular belief that the invention took place; and it would be attributed to the most celebrated musician with whom they might be familiar. Thus ANTIPATER and EUPHORION ascribed the invention to Lasus at Hermione (Schol. ad Aristoph. Av. l. c.). PINDAR, in three different passages, placed it at Thebes, Corinth, and Naxos (Schol. ad Pind. Olymp. xiii. 25). As to the dithyramb itself, it was a poem relating to the birth of Dionysus. (PLATO, Legg. iii. p. 700: καὶ ἄλλο, Διονύσου γένεσις, οἶμαι, διθύραμβος λεγόμενος), mimetically rehearsed by performers habited as satyrs. SUIDAS (εὐ

v. Ἀρίων) . . . λέγεται . . . πρῶτος χορὸν στήσαι καὶ διθύραμβον ᾤσαι καὶ ὀνομάσαι τὸ ᾄδόμενον ὑπὸ τοῦ χοροῦ, καὶ Σατύρους εἰσενεγκεῖν ἔμμετρα λέγοντας. Precisely parallel was the ritual of the Curetes, in which they mimetically represented the birth of Zeus. STRABO expressly compares the relation in which they stand to the deity as his πρόπολοι with that of the satyrs to Dionysus; and describes their proceedings, that they exhibit μῦθον τὸν περὶ τῆς τοῦ Διὸς γενέσεως, ἐν ᾧ τὸν μὲν Κρόνον εἰσάγουσιν εἰθισμένον καταπίνειν τὰ τέκνα ἀπὸ τῆς γενέσεως εὐθύς· τὴν δὲ Πέαν πεφωμένην ἐπικρύπτεσθαι τὰς ὁδούς, καὶ τὸ γεννηθὲν βρέφος ἐκποδὼν ποιεῖν πρὸς δὲ τοῦτο συνεργούς λαβεῖν τοὺς Κουρήτας κ.τ.λ. (X. p. 359, ed. Lips.) But as it was "the jolly god" (as Dryden calls him), "the intoxicator," to whom the dithyramb was sung, it was proper that both the poetry and the music should be of an orgiastic character. Hence, in the well-known fragment, ASCHILOCHUS professes to lead off the dithyramb ὄνῳ συγκεραννωθεὶς φρένας: and the very name of the performance (about which so much has been written, and so unsatisfactorily) was, it can hardly be doubted, a Hellenic form of an Egyptian word, ΤΙΤΗΛΑΜΒΟΣ (= furorem movens), an epithet of Dionysus, with reference to his operations. See JACOBS, Questiones Sophocleæ, vol. i. pp. 82, 83.

⁷⁹ ἀπειληθέντα. See BUTTMANN (Lexilogus, v. εἰλεῖν).

⁸⁰ ἐν τῇ σκευῇ πάσῃ. This was equivalent to placing himself under the protection of Apollo. The kernel of the whole story is the sacred character of the bard, who is represented in it as always under the eye of his patron deity. The narrative of HYGINUS (cxiv.) brings out the features which show this more fully. The servants of Arion conspire with the crew to kill him; but Apollo appears to him in a dream, and bids him put on his sacred garb and wreath, and trust himself to the aid which will appear to him. These are the dolphins. In his haste to get away when brought to shore at Corinth, Arion neglects to thrust his bearer back into the sea, and the fish accordingly perishes. The king of the country buries it, and, when the sailors appear, forces them to swear to the truth of their statement on the dolphin's tomb, in which Arion has been concealed. On his appearing, they confess their guilt by their confusion, and are punished by crucifixion. Apollo places both Arion and the dolphin among the constellations. The last part of this legend is doubtless later than the Alexandrine times; but the former portion has every mark of antiquity, and is a complete parallel to the well-known story of Ibycus and his cranes, the scene of which also is laid at Corinth.

⁸³ ἀνακῶς ἔχειν. See note on viii. 108.

⁸⁵ Ἀρίονος ἀνάθημα, "an offering set up by Arion." In the time of PAUSANIAS (iii. 25, 7) the human figure was said to be that of Arion himself. With regard to the group, it has been considered with great probability to have been really set up in commemoration of the colony sent out from Lacedæmon to Tarentum under Phalantus, which sailed from Tænarum. It appears in the Tarentine coins and the Methymnean also, and symbolically represents an Achaean-Dorian colony sent out by sea, the dolphin being the representative of Poseidon, the citharist of Apollo the Dorian deity (see note on viii. 41). In the temple at Delphi there was a figure group placed there by the Tarentines in commemoration of a victory gained by them over their barbarous neighbours the Peuceetians. Among the combatants were Taras, the eponymous hero of Tarentum, and Phalantus, and "not far from the latter" (says PAUSANIAS, x. 13. 10) "Phalantus's dolphin; for, before he went to Italy, Phalantus was shipwrecked in the Crissæan sea, and they say he was carried by a dolphin to shore." A similar tradition with regard to the body of Melicerta existed at the Isthmus of Corinth. It was said to have been brought thither by a dolphin, and buried by Sisyphus, who instituted the Isthmian games at the tomb in honour of Melicerta, under the name of Palæmon (PAUSAN. ii. 1, 3).

⁵⁶ ἐς Δελφοὺς κρητῆρα. The comparison of this passage with that in i. 20, Δελφῶν οἶδα ἐγὼ οὕτω ἀκούσας γενέσθαι, seems to show plainly that the story of Halyattes's campaigns against Miletus rests on the traditional narrative of a Delphic cicerone.

⁵⁷ Γλαύκου τοῦ Χίου ποίημα. This artist is placed by the chronologers at latest in B.C. 677. See SILLIG (Catalogus Artificum v. Glaucus). The statement of Herodotus may be reconciled with this date, and with the chronology commonly assigned to Halyattes, by supposing the pedestal here spoken of to have been made before the reign of Halyattes, and to have come into that monarch's possession. But it is perhaps more natural to suppose that the Delphians of Herodotus's time attributed the work to Glaucus from his great reputation as an artist. The expression, ἡ Γλαύκου τέχνη, was in the time of PLATO (Phædon. § 132) a proverbial one, applied to every thing requiring an extraordinary amount of skill. See note on i. 51. PAUSANIAS (x. 16, 1) describes the work in question. It appears to have been a hollow truncated pyramid, of which the sides were composed of strips of iron, that apparently wound obliquely up from the bottom to the top (like the reliefs on the column of Trajan). On this fillet were various figures; among others, insects and plants (HEGESANDER ap. Athenæum, v. p. 210) in relief, not attached by any mechanical means, such as pins, but soldered in, so that the whole formed one solid mass, although the figures had been wrought separately.

⁵⁸ ὃς δὴ Ἑλλήνων . . . ἔνθα δὴ οἱ Ἐφέσιοι. The particle δὴ serves here the purpose of insulating the attention of the reader, and directing it to the Ephesians among all the other people, and, as regards the Ephesians themselves, to the particular fact of their dedicating themselves formally to Artemis by the device related. See the note 6, above. It will be observed that, of the whole conquest of the Asiatic Greeks by Croesus, this is the only detail mentioned. This fact is scarcely an exception to the remark in note 52 on i. 13, if it be taken to be a part of the general history of Croesus, the whole of which seems evidently to proceed from a Delphic source. But at any rate it is a temple tradition. See note on § 92, τῷ Ἀπόλλωνι τῷ Ἰσμηνίῳ.

⁹¹ ἐπὶ Λυδῶν παῖδας σὺν ἵπποισι. The cavalry was the strong arm of the Lydians at this time (see i. 79). Hence the Lydians and Cilicians, the nature of whose country was unfavourable to cavalry operations, alone of all the nations of Lower Asia escaped being subdued by them (i. 28). HOMER gives the epithet ἵπποκορυσταὶ to the Mæonians (II. x. 431), who were identical with the Lydians. See i. 7, above.

εὔχεσθαι and ἦ. The words τί δοκεῖς ἄλλο refer to οἰκότα ἐλπίζων, and the whole sentence with the above omissions may be thus rendered: “and what else do you think that the islanders look for” [other than what is likely to happen, viz. the utter annihilation of Croesus’s fleet] “the instant they heard that you were going to build a fleet to attack them,—with their ardent wishes that they might only fall in with Lydians afloat, to requite you on behalf of the Hellenic settlers on the main, whom you have enslaved?” If the text originally ran thus, a copyist may have added ἦ εὔχεσθαι in the margin, imagining that this, and not ἦ οἰκότα ἐλπίζων, was the ellipse to be supplied, and thus possibly the words may have crept into the text.

⁹⁴ Λυδοί. It appears strange that this nation should be included among the number of those who had been subdued by Croesus, as they constituted his hereditary subjects. This difficulty may be got over by supposing that the catalogue of the whole of the subjects of the Lydian monarchy is intended to be given. But the details of this list present considerable difficulty. The Chalybes do not fall within the limit of the Halys. And from the geographical position of Pamphylia it is difficult to suppose that it can have been subdued, while both Lycia and Cilicia remained independent. Is it possible that we have here a list of the nations of which the traffic passed through Sardis, and that the transit-dues were, in an Asiatic monarchy, represented as tribute? If so, the steel-manufactures from the Chalybes would account for that tribe being enumerated among the dependencies. It will be observed that Pamphylians stand in the list after the Hellenic tribes. In the army of Xerxes they were armed in the Hellenic fashion (vii. 91), a circumstance which seems to indicate considerable commercial intercourse with Hellenic traders, even if they were not themselves partially hellenized.

TARCH (Solon. § 27) speaks of those who on this score had considered the story as fictitious. He adds: ἐγὼ δὲ λόγον ἐνδοξον οὕτω καὶ τοσοῦτους μάρτυρας ἔχοντα καὶ—δὲ μείζον ἐστὶ—πρίποντα τῷ Σόλωνος ἤθει, καὶ τῆς ἐκείνου μεγαλοφροσύνης καὶ σοφίας ἔξιν οὐ μοι δοκῶ προήσεσθαι χρονικοῖς τισὶ λεγομένοις κανόσιν, οὐς μυριοὶ διορθοῦντες ἄχρι σήμερον εἰς οὐδὲν αὐτοῖς ὁμολογούμενον δύνανται καταστήσαι τὰς ἀντιλογίας. It is quite certain that the same sense of ethopoeic propriety which prevailed with Plutarch exercised very many times more influence in the time of Herodotus, and if taken into account by commentators would save much trouble incurred in the vain attempt to give historical exactness to statements where a historical exactness was never contemplated.

⁹⁷ τῶν ἔθετο. This expression (as also θῆται in the next sentence) is considered to be a violation of the rule that θεῖναι νόμον is the proper phrase in the case of a legislator who frames a law, and θέσθαι νόμον in that of the people which accepts and ratifies it. But the exception is more apparent than real. If Solon had been framer of a constitution for another state than the one of which he himself was a citizen, the middle voice would have been undoubtedly inappropriate. But the reverse is suggested by its use on this occasion. The historian sinks the fact of Solon having originated the code in that of his having, as one of the people, put himself under it, and therefore says, not "framed," but "got passed."

¹⁰³ ὥς τὰ παρ' ἡμῖν, "as fortunes go with us," the standard of wealth being very different in Lydia.

ἀπέθανε κάλλιστα· καὶ μιν Ἀθηναῖοι δημοσίῃ τε ἔθαψαν αὐτοῦ τῆπερ ἔπεσε, καὶ ἐτίμησαν μεγάλως.”

¹⁰⁶ τὰ κατὰ τὸν Τέλλον, “Tellus and his story.”

¹⁰⁷ τεθνάναι μᾶλλον ἢ ζῶειν. PINDAR in a work now lost (see PLUTARCH, Consolati. ad Apollon. p. 109) related that Trophonius and Agamedes, who were the builders of the pentathlithal adytum in the Delphic temple (ΣΤΕΡΗ. BYZANT. v. Δελφοί), requested a reward from the deity. He told them that he would give them one in seven days’ time, and in the mean time desired them to indulge in festivity. On the seventh night they went to bed, and never woke again. The ethopoeic identity of this legend with that given by Herodotus is patent. See note 116, below.

representing the same subject, and including the car with the priestess in it (PAUSANIAS, ii. 20, 5). But in the time of Solon no statues existed in any other material than wood or hammered metal. In illustration of the accuracy of temple traditions respecting statues, it may be instructive to observe on the present occasion that, in this same temple of the Lycian Apollo at Argos, there was a figure of a man (said to be Biton) carrying a bull on his shoulders, and, according to the fiction of LYCEAS of Naucratis, this commemorated a feat of Biton's in carrying a bull from Argos to Nemea on the occasion of a feast to Zeus. But, in the time of PAUSANIAS, the Argives themselves took a very different view of the matter, and burnt fire before the figure, which they professed to represent Phoroneus, who in the Argive traditions took the place of Prometheus as the bestower of that element upon mankind (ii. 19, 5).

¹¹⁰ τὸ θεῖον πᾶν ἔδν φθονερόν τε καὶ ταραχώδες. See note on iii. 40.

¹¹¹ ἐν τῷ μακρῷ χρόνῳ, “in the long-run.” Compare SOPH. Ajac. 646:

ἄπανθ' ὁ μακρὸς κἀναρίθμητος χρόνος
φύει τ' ἔδηλα καὶ φανέρτα κρύπτεται.

¹¹² It is agreed on all hands that this computation of time by Solon is utterly erroneous; but whether this arises from a corruption of the MSS, or from a misunderstanding on the part of Herodotus, is not clear. The former hypothesis is rendered more probable by the circumstance, that PLUTARCH, in the tract De Malignitate Herodoti, does not censure this most patent error. It seems not unlikely that the difficulty mainly arises from the incorporation into the text of a marginal calculation made by an ignorant reader, who, being forgetful of the fact that Herodotus here (as he does in iii. 90, and as he praises the Egyptians for doing in ii. 4) makes the year to consist of 360 days, and, knowing the practice of the Athenians to correct their year (which was a lunar one) by the interpolation of a supplementary month, wrote in the margin the part which has been printed between brackets. This supposition is strengthened by the clause, ἵνα δὴ αἱ ὥραι συμβαίνωσι παραγινόμεναι ἐς τὸ δέον: for the intercalary month, which did effect this end in the Athenian calendar, would only increase the divergency if interpolated as the text requires. For a full explanation of the necessity of an intercalary month and of its operation, see EXCURSUS at the end of this book.

¹¹³ οὐ γάρ τοι ὁ μέγα πλούσιος. The remainder of Solon's speech shows strikingly the influence exerted by the sophistical ἐπιτελείς which began to be so fashionable in the time of our author. It is a washy essay on the contrast between the πλοῦσιος and the εὐτυχής, and might have proceeded from the mouth of Protagoras, or Hippias, or any other of the μερμηνηταὶ λόγων alluded to by Euripides in the passage quoted in the next note. A similar sophistical performance in the character of Croesus may be seen in iii. § 36. The words which PLATO puts into the mouth of Hippias, the celebrated sophist, admirably describe the type of that style of composition: καὶ ναὶ μὰ Δί', ὦ Ζῳκράτης, περὶ γε ἐπιτηδευμάτων καλῶν ἡ χρὴ τὸν νέον ἐπιτηδεύειν, ἐστὶ μοι περὶ αὐτῶν πάγκαλος λόγος συγκείμενος, καὶ ἄλλως εὖ διακείμενος καὶ τοῖς ὀνόμασι.

¹¹⁶ σκοπέειν δὲ χρή παντὸς χρήματος τὴν τελευτήν. This is the most general form of the celebrated ethical sentiment attributed to Solon, which in its more practical shape forms the beginning of one of Sophocles's plays (Trachiniae) and the end of another (Œdipus Tyrannus). It has been supposed that the historian actually derived the sentiment from the writings of the poet; and, if there were no alternative between adopting this view and accepting this narrative in the text as a faithful historical record, the supposition would certainly be the more tolerable of the two courses. But there can be little doubt that gnomic sentiments of this kind had been the common property of the Hellenic people for two or three centuries before the Peloponnesian war. They were attributed in common belief to one or other of the wise politicians who had gained reputation as σοφοί; and sometimes transmitted through the medium of fables (ἀπόλογοι), sometimes embodied in narratives of which the dramatis personæ were historical or mythological personages. See note 107, above. Some of them were inscribed in the vestibule of the temple at Delphi. Two of them, Μῆδ' ἐγὼν and Γῶδ' ἰσθύνον, are mentioned by PLATO (Protag. p. 342), who says, half in jest, that the so-called Seven Sages contributed each one as an offering to the god. Another favourite method of giving them publicity was to inscribe them on the Hermæ, which were placed in the streets. Thus we have μῆμα τὸδ' Ἰσθύνον στείχε δίκαια φρονῶν and μῆμα τὸδ' Ἰσθύνον μὴ φίλον εἶσθαι. Aristotle made a collection of these proverbs, which is unfortunately lost. He is said to have regarded them as fragmentary remains of ancient wisdom that had been swept away in the great revolutions of the human species, and as owing their own preservation to their brevity and pregnancy. See the note on § 155.

¹¹⁹ ἦν γὰρ δὴ κωφός. The rule has been laid down by EUSTATHIUS that by the word κωφός the early Greek writers understood a dumb person only, but that the later applied it also to denote a deaf one. Herodotus would be an exception to this rule, if the words διεφθαρμένον τὴν ἀκοήν (which occur below, § 38) are genuine. But it seems not improbable that they are an interpretation by a commentator who took the word κωφός in this place to mean deaf. It is quite clear from the story of the son miraculously speaking (i. 85) that it was his dumbness which was his characteristic in the story concerning him. No doubt he might have been deaf too, as total deafness, when congenital, almost invariably produces dumbness. But the rule of Eustathius seems to be only so far well founded, that in the early times κωφός expressed that deficiency of perception which is exhibited by those who are both deaf and dumb, ἀνεπαίσθητα. (See Etymologicum Magnum, v. κωφός). As dumbness is the most observable phenomenon arising out of this condition, the term at first always referred to this. Afterwards, when the want of perception came to be resolved into its component parts, κωφός was applied to the one or the other defect, because both were included in its original meaning of "senseless."

¹²¹ συμφορῇ ἐχόμενος καὶ οὐ καθαρὸς χεῖρας ἔων. These words describe the case of a person who had committed an involuntary homicide, and in consequence was a proper subject for the process of purification and ultimate restoration to his civil rights; which would not be the case with a wilful murderer. The idea which formed the foundation of the whole ceremonial, was, that the blood of the slain man clave to the hand of the slayer (μύρος), bringing a curse both upon himself and all who should hold any converse with him. The term which technically expressed this condition was παλαμναῖος. Supposing the homicide to be of a kind falling short of wilful murder, the criminal betook himself to a neighbouring country and applied for protection, not merely as an ordinary suppliant (ἱκέτης), but as one seeking purification (προστροπῆς). As converse with him would convey the contagion of his guilt, he uttered no words, but entered the house carrying an olive-branch tied with a fillet of wool, and took up his station at the hearth in silence. If the host chose to comply with the mute request, he was said to compassionate him (αἰεῖσθαι), but the two held no communication with one another until purification had taken place. The guest had food served to him at a separate table, and ate it in silence. Orestes (who is the mythological representative of a παλαμναῖος) thus describes his reception at Athens:—

παρόσχον, οἶκον ὅστις ἐν ταῦτ' ὀστέει, σιγῇ δ' ἐτεκτήναυτ' ἀπόφθεγκτόν μ', ὥπως δαιτὸς γενόμεν πάματος τ' αὐτῶν δίχα· κατὰ 'ξελέγξαι μὲν ξένους οὐκ ἤλουν, ἤλουν δὲ σιγῇ καθόκουσιν οὐκ εἰδέναι, μέγα στενάδων, οὐρεκ' ἦν μητρὸς φονεὺς.

EURIPIDES, Iph. Taur. 949, seqq.

But after his purification, when he appears at Athens before the statue of Athene (Æsch. Eumenid. 445) seeking for further protection, the ban has been removed, and, although still a ἱκέτης, he says of himself:—

οὐκ εἰμι προστροπῆς, οὐδ' ἔχει μύσος πρὸς χειρὶ τῇ 'μὴ τὸ σὺν ἐφημέρῃ βρέτας τακμήριον δὲ τῶνδ' εἰ σοὶ λέξω μέγα· ἔφθογγον εἶναι τὸν παλαμναῖον νόμος, ἔς τ' ἂν πρὸς ἀνδρὸς αἵματος καθαροῦ σφαγαὶ καθαυμέεωσι νεοθῆλου βοτοῦ.
πάλαι πρὸς ἄλλοις ταῦτ' ἀφιερῶμεθα οἴκοισι καὶ βοτοῖσι καὶ βυτοῖς πόροις.

The form of purification was for the suppliant to stand upon the fleece of a black sheep. A jet of blood from a young sucking-pig was made to fall upon his hand, and this was washed off into the fleece by a stream of water poured upon it. This symbolized the removal of blood-guiltiness, and the fleece with the blood (λόματα) was buried in the earth. Müller (by whom this subject was first thoroughly elucidated, in his edition of the Eumenides) shows very clearly that the whole proceeding is one grafted on to the old Pelasgian worship of Demeter Krinya. A very beautiful description of the purification of Jason and Medea after the slaughter of Absyrtus, is given by APOLLONIUS RHODIUS (iv. 685—717).

¹²⁸ πρὸς ὦν τὴν ὄψιν ταύτην, "having regard then to this vision."

¹²⁹ ἐπὶ τὰ παραλαμβανόμενα. Schweig-häuser interprets this expression to mean, "to the matter I have in hand." A better version would be "to the matter of which news is brought me." παραλαμβάνειν is, quite as much as παραδέχεσθαι, the correlative term of παραδίδουαι, and properly means "to receive any thing which is passed on from others." The identification of the news with the thing which is the subject of the news belongs to the modes of thought of Herodotus's time. See the note on § 209.

¹³⁰ διεφθαρμένον τὴν ἀκοήν. See above, note 119.

¹³¹ τὸ δὲ οὐ μαυθάνεις ἀλλὰ λέλθῃ σε τὸ ὄνειρον, "but the point which you do not comprehend, and where the vision escapes your interpretation." It is not a true explanation of this construction to say that κατὰ is to be understood with τὸ. The words κατὰ δ are to be in-here and in iii. 153, has the form φήμιν, which Eustathius notes as especially Ionic. But in v. 72 all the MSS have the common form φήμη.

¹³⁴ περιημεκτέων. This word is used by Herodotus nearly as the equivalent to δυσφορών. It may generally be rendered by the English word “chafing,” or the Latin “stomachans.” See iii. 64: περιημεκτῆσας τῇ ἀπόρῃ συμφορῇ. viii. 109: οὔτοι μάλιστα ἐκπεφυγόντων περιημεκτέων, ὁρμάτο τε ἐς τὸν Ἑλλήσποντον πλάθει.

¹³⁵ τὸν καθήραντα ἀπολωλεκὼς εἶη. A strange difficulty has been found here, from the erroneous supposition that the word ἀπολωλεκὼς expressed necessarily the destruction of animal life. But nothing is more common than for it to mean “having been the ruin of,” as here. The expression which follows, φονεὺς δὲ τοῦ καθήραντος, is more violent; but, although not literally exact, it is in keeping with the feeling which may be supposed to have animated Adrastus, that he should represent himself as the slayer of the father through the only son.

¹³⁷ φονεὺς δὲ τοῦ καθήραντος. See note 135.

Croesus is diverted from his grief by the growth of the Persian power, and consults the oracles.

¹³⁹ καταλαβεῖν αὐξανομένην, "crush in its growth." See note on v. 21, κατέλαβε σοφίᾳ.

¹⁴⁰ τῶν τε ἐν Ἑλλήσι καὶ τοῦ ἐν Λιβύῃ. The manuscripts S and V have τοῦ ἐν Δελφοῖσι (or Δελφίσι) καὶ τοῦ ἐν Λιβύῃ, and then proceed (with § 53) thus: τοῖσι δὲ πεμπομένοισι κήρυξι μετὰ δῶρων τοιαῦτα ἐνετέλλετο ἑρωτᾶν εἰ στρατεύηται ἐπὶ Πέρσας Κροῖσος, κ.τ.λ., in this manner entirely omitting the story relative to the trial of the oracles. See note on i. 53, ἀμφοτέρων.

¹⁴¹ ἐς Ἄβας. The temple of Apollo at Abae was more ancient than that at Delphi (STEPH. BYZANT. voce Ἄβαι), and prior to the Persian war seems to have vied with it in importance. See what Herodotus relates of its wealth, viii. 33. Hence the Phocians, after their victory over the Thessalian invaders (viii. 27) divided their thank-offerings equally between the two temples. The oracle was consulted on behalf of Mardonius, while he was in winter-quarters in Thessaly, together with those of Apollo Ismenius and Apollo Ptous, and also, as in the case of Croesus, responses were obtained by him from the shrines of Amphiaraus and Trophonius (viii. 134).

¹⁴² παρὰ τε Ἀμφιάρειω καὶ παρὰ Τροφώνιω. For the nature of these oracles, see note on i. 52, τῷ δὲ Ἀμφιάρειω.

¹⁴⁵ ἐν ἑξαμέτρῳ τόνῳ. This phrase is very difficult to explain. The word τόνος, as a musical term, is equivalent to the English "pitch;" but there are four passages in Herodotus (viz. i. 62. 174; v. 60, and the present) in which the meaning it requires corresponds to the English "measure." Of three of these passages, it is remarkable that they fall in portions of the text which are not included in the manuscripts S and V, and in all these the reference is to words which were spoken. If only these three existed in which the phrase was used, it would be more easily intelligible; for, as the oracles were delivered in a chant, ἑξαμέτρος τόνος and τρίμετρος τόνος might be taken to mean notes in which the voice was pitched, for the recitation of the hexameter and the senarian iambic severally. But the fourth passage (v. 60) refers not to oral recitation, but to an inscription on a tripod. If, therefore, the words be not an interpolation in that passage (which exists in S and V as well as in the other MSS.), the word τόνος must in it be taken as simply equivalent to "metre," notwithstanding the tautologous expression which results therefrom.

¹⁴⁹ τοῦ μαντήϊου. These words appear to be a gloss. The use of Herodotus is to speak of Amphiaras himself, not of his shrine. Thus viii. 134: ἐκέλευσέ σφας ὁ Ἀμφιάρεως διὰ χρηστηρίων ποιεόμενος. Above, § 46: ἐπέμποντο παρὰ τε Ἀμφιάρεων καὶ παρὰ Τροφόνιον. Below, § 52: τῷ Ἀμφιάρεω. . . ἀνέθηκε σάκος χρύσεον πᾶν. In the text, if τοῦ μ. were not an interpolation, we should probably have τὴν τοῦ Ἀμφ. μαντήϊου ἀπόκρισιν. But, even if grammatical usage were consistent with the phrase τ. Ἀ. τ. μ. ἀπ., it would not be in accordance with the idea of Amphiaras to speak of his oracle as separate from himself. See note on i. 52, τῷ δὲ Ἀμφιάρεω. If the words are not an interpolation, τοῦ μαντήϊου ἀπόκρισιν must be taken together as one word signifying "an oracular response."

¹⁵⁴ λευκοῦ χρυσοῦ, "white gold," by which is probably meant that compound (one-fifth of silver and four-fifths of gold) to which the name of ἤλεκτρον was given. Sardis was the staple of this commodity, as appears from SOPHOCLES (Antigone, 1036), where it is coupled with the gold from India:

κερδαίνειτ', ἐμπολάτε τὸν πρὸς Σάρδεων ἤλεκτρον, εἰ βούλεσθε, καὶ τὸν Ἰνδικὸν χρυσόν, κ.τ.λ.

This alloyed mass formed a convenient shape for exporting the gold-dust which was washed down by the Tmolus (v. 101). Gold, too, is sometimes found combined with silver, and this mixture may have acquired a traditional value, and added to the other motives for alloying the pure metal when exported.

¹⁵⁴ ἐπεὶ τε κατεκαίετο ὁ ἐν Δελφοῖσι νηὸς. This conflagration is placed by Clinton (on the authority of PAUSANIAS) in the year 548 B.C. It is noticed by Herodotus (ii. 180; v. 62), but without any other definition of the time than that it was when Amasis was reigning in Egypt.

Samian" is put by PLATO (Ion. § 4), together with Dædalus and Epeus, two artists who belong more to mythical than historical times. PLINY (N. H. xxxv. 12. 15) places him "long before" the expulsion of the Bacchiadæ from Corinth,—an event which Clinton assigns to the year 655 B.C. Plato speaks of him as an ἀνδριαντοποιός, and Pliny as one who with Rhæcus "plastice invenit." This last is no doubt an inaccurate expression, as it was metal-casting, and not sculpture, which Rhæcus and the ancient Theodorus invented. The most natural supposition seems to be, that the Delphians attributed the vase Herodotus speaks of to the Theodorus to whom Plato alludes, he being the most celebrated artist of the name. Whether it was really by him is quite another matter. The Lycians exhibited a brazen bowl in the temple of Apollo at Patara, which they asserted to be the offering of Telephus and the work of Hephestus, "forgetting apparently," says PAUSANIAS (ix. 41. 1), "that Theodorus and Rhæcus, the Samians, were the first who cast in brass" (see note 87). The remark which Herodotus himself makes in confirmation of the Delphian account may serve to show the kind of reasoning which would be most operative with his informants.

by Sylla. It was so large and heavy that it was broken into pieces for removal. PLUTARCH (Sylla, § 12).

¹⁶³ τῆς ἀρτοκόπου τῆς Κροίσου εἰκόνα. PLUTARCH (Cur Pythia non reddat carmine, p. 401, E) relates a tradition that Croesus's life was saved by this female, who gave him information of poison having been mixed in his bread by the machinations of a stepmother. But, whether this were the case or not, it seems impossible that such a story should have prevailed at Delphi in the time of Herodotus, or he would hardly have omitted it. The Delphians probably gathered that the figure represented Croesus's "bread-chipper," from some instrument held in the hand. The story of Plutarch is hardly of better authority than many of those related by Ptolemy Hephæstion (see note 162). There is, however, no reason to object to the word ἀρτοκόπος as designating an Asiatic official, or to desire to change it into ἀρτοποις or ἀρτοπόπος. The duties attaching to the office were probably analogous to those belonging to the "carver" at the baronial tables in feudal times.

¹⁶⁴ τῷ δὲ Ἀμφίρῳ. It does not appear from the words of Herodotus whether the offering of which he speaks was made at a shrine of Amphiarus, forming a part of the temple of the Ismenian Apollo at Thebes, or at the place where the response was obtained, and from thence transferred to Thebes. In fact, it is not clear, from this passage or that in § 46, to what locality he refers when he says that Croesus sent to Amphiarus. In South Boeotia alone there were at least three localities assigned as the spot where Amphiarus was swallowed up with his chariot; one on the right of the road from Potniæ to Thebes (PAUSANIAS, ix. 8. 3), a second at Harma, hard by Mycalessus, on the road from Thebes to Chalcis (ID. ix. 19. 4), and a third twelve stades from Oropus (ID. i. 34. 1). In all these the same legend prevailed, and the same mode of consulting the hero, who was supposed to hold communion with his votary in dreams, without the intervention of any πρόμαντις. The ritual of Amphiaras is substantially identical with that of Faunus (described by VIRGIL, Æn. vii. 80–100). Both the one and the other, and indeed Trophonius also, belong to the ancient system of elemental worship,—a pantheism broken up into polytheism,—which prevailed among the earliest population of the Italian and Hellenic peninsulas. In the time of Herodotus,—with the exception of Arcadia and a few insulated spots,—this religion was every where overlaid and much modified by the mythology brought in by the supervening Hellenic tribes; the early ritual being often taken up, and the ancient deities incorporated into the new system by a legend connecting them with the recently imported. The preface of the Pythian priestess in the Eumenides of Æschylus is an excellent example of this.

¹⁶⁵ τῆσι λόγχῃσι. The plural number here seems to refer to the sharp butt of the lance (properly called σφυραστήρ), by which it was fixed in the ground, as well as to the point.

¹⁶⁶ ἐν τῇ νηῇ τοῦ Ἰσμηνίου Ἀπόλλωνος. See note 141.

¹⁷⁰ εἰ στρατεύηται καὶ . . . εἰ . . . προσθέοιτο, “if he must make a warlike expedition against the Persians, and whether (in that case) to take any allies.” On the first or main point the decision of the oracle was imperatively demanded, but the putting the second point was a mere contingency. See note 40. See also ΜΑΤΤΗΙΑΣ, Gr. Gr. § 516. 3.

¹⁷¹ ἀμφοτέρων. If S and V represent a different διασκευή of the work from that which the other manuscripts exhibit, and are not derived from the fuller text by a process of excision, this word must in them refer to the two oracles at Delphi and the Oasis of Ammon (see note 140). In the others, it must be considered to refer to those of Apollo at Delphi, and of Amphiaras. See i. 52, and the various readings of i. 92.

De Div. ii. 56) is given by DIONORUS SICULUS, and other later writers, as the actual oracle. It seems, however, most probable that this hexameter is merely made up out of the phrase which Herodotus gives as containing the ambiguous portion of the answer received by Croesus. The aorist καταλύσαι, instead of the future καταλύσειν, shows that the substance, and not the very words in the form in which they were uttered, is related: "telling Croesus beforehand of his pulling down a great empire, supposing him to attack the Persians." If the future be adopted, the passage must be rendered, "that he would pull down," &c.

¹⁷⁴ πέμψας . . . ἐνεφορέετο αὐτοῦ. All this passage is omitted in the manuscripts S and V, which join the middle of § 54

to that of § 55 thus, ἡπερήσθη τε τοῖσι χρηστηρίοισι τάχῃ τε ἐλπίσας καταλύσειν τὴν Κύρου βασιλῆην καὶ δὴ καὶ ἐς Δελφούς χρηστηριαζόμενος ἐπήρῳτα, κ.τ.λ., thus leaving out all mention of the present to the Delphians, and of the privileges in consequence conferred upon the Lydians, and producing an extremely loose and slovenly construction. See note 136.

¹⁷⁶ ἐνεφορέετο αὐτοῦ, "he took his fill of it;" a metaphor derived from persons eating greedily.

Ἄγετε τὸν ἄβρδν δῆποτ' ἐν Τροίᾳ πόδα νῦν δ' ὄντα δοῦλον (Troad. 506).

Compare Deuteronomy xiviii. 56, ἡ τρυφερὰ, ἥς οὐχὶ πεῖραν ἔλαβεν ὁ ποὺς αὐτῆς βαίνειν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς διὰ τὴν τρυφερότητα. And, contrariwise, to go without shoes was the most obvious exponent of asceticism. See ARISTOPHANES (Nub. 103):

Gaisford reads, with the other MSS., ταῦτα γὰρ ἦν τὰ προκεκριμένα ἔοντα τὸ ἀρχαῖον τὸ μὲν Πελασγικὸν, τὸ δὲ Ἑλληνικὸν ἔθνος. For ἔοντα, Dobree and Person proposed to read ἔθνεα. But the transposition of two words and a corrected punctuation remove all the difficulty. Translate, "for these were the leading nations of olden time, being, the one a Pelasgian, the other a Hellenic tribe." The word προκεκριμένους corresponds to the German vornehm.

That the first part at least of the passage omitted in S and V is an addition, incorporated subsequently, seems indisputable, from the circumstance that, as the text stands, the word Πελασγικὸν ought (according to the usage of language) to refer to the Doric race, and Ἑλληνικὸν to the Ionic, whereas in fact the author intends the reverse. But it by no means follows that it is to be regarded as an interpolation by another hand. It may very well be an extract from the collections of the author, written in the manner of a note in an interleaved copy by himself.

¹⁷⁹ τὸ μὲν οὐδαμῇ καὶ ἐξεχώρησε. A good deal of difficulty has been occasioned unnecessarily by the application of these words to the Πελασγικὸν ἔθνος, whereas they are in fact referred to the Ἰωνικὸν γένος, and of these especially to the Athenians, whose pride in their professed aboriginal character is well known. Hence the orator, in vii. 161, speaks of his countrymen as μοῦνοι ἔόντες οὐ μετανάσται Ἑλλήνων. But, even if the expression were necessarily referable to the Pelasgians, the difficulty would not be so great as has been supposed. The word ἐξεχώρησε does not express the kind of migration which takes place when a swarm is thrown off, but that when a whole people moves away from one territory into another. And this last character is not attached to the Pelasgians by Herodotus. It was so, perhaps first of all, by Ephorus, the popularity of whose work made it the basis of all subsequent histories of Greece (mediately or immediately) even down to the last generation. But, from the account which STRABO (v. cap. 2, p. 357, seqq.) gives of Ephorus's statements, it is plain that his view rested on no positive authority, but was a mere hypothesis to account for the existence of Pelasgian traditions in many widely scattered places. There is nothing related of the Pelasgians by Herodotus which is incompatible with the theory that they were a primitive people, who long antecedently to the historical times overspread a great portion of what was afterwards called Hellas (at which period the Athenians themselves were Pelasgian, and called ΚΡΑΝΑΙ, viii. 44). In the time of Herodotus, all traces of them were obliterated in the greater part of Hellas; but a few insulated populations remained, in Arcadia, Acte, Lemnos, Imbros, Creston, Placie, Scylace, Antandros;—and Pelasgian names and rituals in many other places.

¹⁸² χρεόν. Gaisford, with most MSS, has χρεών.

¹⁸³ τῶν ὑπὲρ Τυρσηνῶν Κρηστῶνα πόλιν. NIEBUHR considered that this name was corrupt, and wished to read Κροτῶνα, regarding the city as Cortona. But, independently of the boldness of this alteration, it seems unlikely that Cortona in Tuscany should be coupled together with Scylace and Placie in the Hellespont. The solution of the difficulty is not easy if we retain Κρηστῶνα (see the note on v. 3, Κρηστωναίων), unless we take Τυρσηνῶν to mean the Tyrrhene Pelasgians of Athos. See note 186.

¹⁸⁴ τῶν. An emendation of Dobree's. Gaisford with the MSS has τῆν.

¹⁸⁵ οἱ σύνοικοι ἐγένοντο Ἀθηναίοισι. In another passage (ii. 51) the Pelasgian immigrants into Attica are represented as coming from Samothrace. If it be considered that the populations of all these Pelasgian localities were ethnically identical, it is not strange that one should take the place of another in traditions orally transmitted. It is more probable that two legends should vary from one another in this way, than that the true view should be that which results from the mechanical combination of the two. Here, for instance, it may be said, the immigration was of a multitude coming partly from Placie and Scylace and partly from Samothrace. But, if so, why should the author have omitted the mention of one half of the colonists in the one case, and the other half in the other? See the note on ii. 51, ad fin.

¹⁸⁶ ὅσα ἄλλα Πελασγικὰ ἔοντα πολισμάτα. The towns referred to are perhaps those mentioned by THUCYDIDES (iv. 109) as lying in Acte, the peninsula terminating in the mountain Athos, separated from the main by Xerxes' canal. This was filled with small towns inhabited by a mixed race of barbarians speaking two languages. "There was a small element of Chalcidians among them, but they were mostly Pelasgians, some of the Tyrrhenians who formerly inhabited Lemnos and Athens, and Bisaltæ, Crestonians, and Edones" (THUCYD. l. c.).

¹⁸⁷ ἦσαν οἱ Πελασγοὶ βάρβαρον γλῶσσαν ἰέντες. This observation must not be taken for more than it is worth, and used to prove that the Pelasgian language differed etymologically from the Greek. The language of these towns doubtless sounded strange to the ear of Herodotus, as the dialect of Coniston does to an East Anglian. But, although differing so much from the current Hellenic as to necessitate the use of two languages (see the last note), it should be remembered that whatever is common to the Latin and τικὸν ἔθνος, ἐὼν Πελασγικόν, ἅμα τῇ μεταβολῇ τῇ ἐς Ἑλληνας καὶ τὴν γλῶσσαν μετέμαθε. καὶ γὰρ δὴ οὔτε οἱ Κρηστωνιῆται οὐδαμοῖσι τῶν νῦν σφεας περιρικεύοντων εἰσὶ ὁμόγλωσσοι, οὔτε οἱ Πλακιηνοί· σφίσι δὲ ὁμόγλωσσοι δηλοῦσί τε, ὅτι, τὸν ἡνείκαντο γλώσσης χαρακτῆρα μεταβαίνοντες ἐς ταῦτα τὰ χωρία, τοῦτον ἔχουσι ἐν φυλακῇ. The Hellenic race from its first origin has always retained its language. Has been increased by assimilating many barbarous nations.

Greek languages as they exist must have existed in their common parent. What was this if not Pelasgian? If the dialect of Placie and Scylace differed only as much from the Hellenic of commerce in the time of Herodotus as the Dutch of the present day does from English, a traveller would not hesitate to call it foreign, although a philologist would consider the connexion an extremely close one. Possibly Herodotus may have formed his judgment of the dialect of Scylace and Placie from natives of those places which he met with at Cyzicus, in the immediate neighbourhood of which Scylace was (Hecataeus ap. Steph. Byzant. sub v.), or even may have taken the word of the Cyzicenes for its character.

¹⁸⁸ ἐς πλῆθος πολλόν. The MSS have ἐς πλῆθος τῶν ἐθνέων πολλῶν (or πολλῶ). If τῶν ἐθνέων be genuine, it must be interpreted of "the nations of which the Hellenic race is notoriously composed." But the words seem to be a gloss from the hand of some one who supposed that the aggregation of barbarous tribes presently mentioned was referred to.

ficult. It would naturally have ended with ἡξήθη, but the infinitive has taken the place of the subjunctive as if the sentence had begun ἐμοὶ γοῦν δοκεῖ. But it is not easy to find a motive for such slovenliness of writing. See note 136 and the variations in the manuscripts S and V there noted.

¹⁹⁰ διεσπασμένον. The Athenians may be said to have been "divided by Pisistratus" from the circumstance of his having exiled the Alcmaeonid faction, and thus crippled the resources of the state. See below, i. 64; v. 62. But it is a common idiom in Greek to construct grammatically two phrases in the same combination with a third, although in point of sense only one of them can, strictly speaking, be combined with it. Thus SOPHOCLES, Aj. 1034 :—

ἄρ' οὐκ Ἑρμῆς τοῦτ' ἐχ' ἄλκευσε ξίφος κακείνον [sc. (ωσπῆρα)] Ἀιδῆς δημι-ουργὸς ἄγριος;

and Elect. 435 :—

So, in vi. 43, Mardonius comes from Susa to the Cilician seaboard πολλὸν μὲν κάρτα περὶ δὲ ἅμα ἀγόμενος πολλὸν δὲ ναυτικόν, where Casanbon endeavours to explain ναυτικόν as "sailors," στρατὸν being a portent.

Ἱπποκράτεος τούτου τὸν χρόνον τυραννεύοντος Ἀθηναίων. Ἱπποκράτει γὰρ, ἔοντι ἰδιώτῃ καὶ θεωρέοντι τὰ Ὀλύμπια, τέρας ἐγένετο μέγα· θύσαντος γὰρ αὐτοῦ τὰ ἱρὰ, οἱ λέβητες ἐπεστεῶτες, καὶ κρεῶν τε ἔοντες ἐμπλεοὶ καὶ ὕδατος, ἄνευ πυρὸς ἔξεσαν, καὶ ὑπερέβαλον. Χίλων δὲ ὁ Λακεδαιμόνιος¹⁹¹ παρατυχὼν καὶ θεσάμενος τὸ τέρας συνεβούλευε Ἱπποκράτει πρῶτα μὲν γυναῖκα τεκνοποιὸν μὴ ἄγεσθαι ἐς τὰ οἰκία, εἰ δὲ τυγχάνει ἔχων, δεύτερα τὴν γυναῖκα ἐκπέμπειν καὶ εἴ τις οἱ τυγχάνει ἐὼν παῖς, τούτου ἀπείπασθαι· οὐκων¹⁹² ταῦτα παραινέσαντος Χίλωνος πείθεσθαι θέλει τὸν Ἱπποκράτεα, γενέσθαι οἱ μετὰ ταῦτα τὸν Πεισίστρατον τούτου δς, στασιαζόντων τῶν παράλων καὶ τῶν ἐκ τοῦ πεδίου Ἀθηναίων, καὶ τῶν μὲν προεστεῶτος Μεγακλῆος τοῦ Ἀλκμαίωνος, τῶν δὲ ἐκ τοῦ πεδίου Λυκούργου Ἀριστολαίδεω, καταφρονήσας τὴν τυραννίδα¹⁹³, ἤγειρε τρίτην στάσιν. συλλέξας δὲ στασιώτας, καὶ τῷ λόγῳ τῶν ὑπερακρίων προστάς¹⁹⁴, μηχανᾶται τοιάδε understood. But it would have been scarcely more difficult for him to find ships in Persia than sailors. The true solution is to infer ἔχων from ἀγόμενος. See note on vi. 97, ἀλλὰ πέρην.

pression of two different readings (καταφρονήσας and φρονήσας τὴν τυρ.) into one.

¹⁹⁴ τῷ λόγῳ τῶν ὑπερακρίων προστάς, "professing himself the representative of the highland party." Herodotus represents this as a new party watchword assumed for the occasion by Pisistratus. There appears no sufficient reason for supposing that the revolution effected by him consisted (according to the account followed by Herodotus) in the elevation of a distinct tribe to higher political privileges than it had hitherto enjoyed. On the contrary, the opposite seems to follow from the expression, οὐτε τιμὰς τὰς εὐστας συνταράξας οὐτε θέσμια μεταλλάξας. ARISTOTLE too is most decisive in representing the opportunity of usurpation as furnished to Pisistratus by his success in war, and the confidence of the commonalty as being reposed in him from the hostility he exhibited to the rich. οἱ προστάται τοῦ δήμου, ὅτε πολεμικοὶ γέγονον, τυραννίδι ἐπετίθεντο· πάντες δὲ τοῦτο ἔβρων ὑπὸ τοῦ δήμου πιστευόντες, ἡ δὲ πίστις ἦν ἡ ἀπέχθεια ἡ πρὸς τοὺς πλουσίους, οἷον Ἀθηῆνσι Πεισίστρατος στασιάσας πρὸς τοὺς πεδιακοὺς (Polit. v. p. 1305, A, line 20). These expressions of Aristotle are quite compatible with the statement of Herodotus, if we suppose that the troops with which Pisistratus was successful were mainly highlanders organized as infantry, a comparatively new arm of war (see note on v. 77). Such, most useful in the mountainous Megaris, would of all others be most likely to be hampered with debt to the wealthy plainmen, just as the small freeholders of the Roman commonwealth were to the patricians. In this case Pisistratus would be likely to advocate the interests of his followers, as Cromwell did those of his troopers, and thus profess himself as τῶν ὑπερακρίων προστάτης. But such a view is a very different one from that of PLUTARCH (Solon. § 13). It is worth remarking that Philaidæ, the deme to which Pisistratus belonged (PLUTARCH, Solon. § 10) was probably not in the highlands of Attica, but in the immediate neighbourhood of Brauron, as Philæus (its eponymous hero) was said to be buried there. The site of Brauron is fixed by LEAKE at the head of a marsh near the harbour Livadhi, on the east coast, about lat. 37° 55'.

¹⁹⁵ ἐν τῇ πρὸς Μεγαρέας γενομένη στρατηγίῳ. The details of this war are most uncertain. Herodotus does not attempt to describe them. PLUTARCH, who does, gives the most varying accounts, showing decisively that popular tradition was the only authority for them existing, long after the conclusion of the war (Solon. §§ 8, 9). The only part which he makes Pisistratus play in reference to them is the encouraging the Athenians to listen to the advice of Solon.

¹⁹⁷ ὁ Μεγακλῆς, ἐπεκηρυκεύετο Πεισιστράτῳ. The eponymous ancestor of the Alcmaeonidæ (Alcmaeon) was said to have been a descendant of Nestor, and, on the invasion of Peloponnesus by the Heraclidæ, to have migrated to Athens (PAUSANIAS, ii. 8). Pisistratus also is said by Herodotus to have been originally a Pylion and Neleid (v. 65). But it is singular that Pausanias, who brings all the other Nestorids to Athens, should especially except Pisistratus. Perhaps this results from the circumstance, that after the expulsion of the Pisistratids from Athens, and the growth of democratic feeling, it became an object to obliterate all traces of the important position which they once held. See note 201.

¹⁹⁹ ἐν τῷ δήμῳ τῷ Παιανεί. This deme was, according to LEAKE, in the immediate neighbourhood of Philaidæ, the deme of Pisistratus.

²⁰⁰ ἔχουσα. All the MSS have ἔχουσα, and so has Gaisford. I should be rather disposed to change it to the dative case. The final letter of ἔχουση might have dropped out in an uncial MS, where the ι adscript is rarely written.

HeracL. 849). The procession, therefore, in which Phye took part was probably regarded as symbolizing a progress of Athene from the temple at Pallene to that on the Acropolis (see the note 73 on i. 21). If this procession was attended by a formidable demonstration of the inhabitants of the Mesogæan villages on the eastern side of Hymettus (which, according to Leake, is very thickly covered with ancient remains), the reception of Pisistratus may not have taken place solely on superstitious grounds. See the note 210, on i. 62. But, perhaps, the truer way of looking at this extraordinary procession is to regard it as a pageant in honour of the return of Pisistratus. That Athene should be the deity selected on the occasion as the patron of the dynast, harmonizes with the circumstance that the institution of the greater Panathenæa has been ascribed to him, probably with justice. But in later times the memory of Pisistratus was at that festival as much as possible extruded by the special celebration of Harmodius and Aristogiton. See the note 197, above.

³⁰³ παίδων οἱ ὑπαρχόντων νεηνιέων. There is a good deal of difficulty in assigning the date of this first return of Pisistratus. Hippias was an old man, with his teeth loose, at the time of the battle of Marathon (vi. 107; THUCYD. vi. 59), which happened B.C. 490. This was thirty-seven years after the death of Pisistratus, and to this period must be added ten complete years for the time of his second exile (i. 62), and the periods (whatever they amounted to) during which the second and third intervals of his tyranny lasted. A closer definition of the time than this cannot be gathered from Herodotus's statements alone; but this would bring the marriage with Megacles' daughter up at least as early as B.C. 539 or 540. If we admit the notice of ARISTOTLE (Politic. v. 1315, n. line 30) that "the whole time from the usurpation of Pisistratus to his death was thirty-three years, and that of this his two exiles took up sixteen years;" as a statement belonging to the same account as that followed by Herodotus, we shall get the marriage with Megacles' daughter as happening not earlier than B.C. 553 or 552. Between these two limits the assignment of the date is a matter of pure conjecture. For the varying accounts of the fortunes of the Pisistratids, and an attempt to explain them, see note on v. 65, παρέστησαν . . . ἐκχωρῆσαι ἐκ τῆς Ἀττικῆς.

³⁰⁴ λεγομένων ἐναγέων εἶναι τῶν Ἀλκμαιωνιδέων. See v. 71.

³⁰⁵ γνώμῃ. Gaisford and some MSS have γνώμην. But γνώμη is more likely to have been changed into γνώμην than the converse, from the next word beginning with ν. The accusative, however, might stand.

³⁰⁶ ἤγειρον δατίνας, "collected subscriptions." The word δατινάειν is used by Herodotus in the same sense, ii. 180.

³⁰⁷ προηδέατο. This word is again used in the same sense, iii. 140, τίς ἐστι Ἑλλήνων εὐεργέτης ὃ ἐγὼ προαἰδεύμαι, where see the note.

³¹⁰ ἐκ τῶν δήμων, "out of the demes." The boroughs here referred to were probably those lying in that part of Attica called Mesogæa, which would seem to have been favourable to the cause of Pisistratus. If a line be drawn along the axis of Mount Hymettus, and produced, Marathon, as well as Pæania and Philaidæ, will lie on the eastern side of it, and all the plain of Athens on the western; and Pallene will form the natural point for the concentration of Pisistratus's forces in order to march upon Athens, on the supposition that a considerable portion of them was collected in the demes under Hymettus. But, if he had moved in full force from Marathon, the entrance into the plain of Athens would have been at the modern Stamata, considerably to the north (see LEAKE, Appendix to Athens and the Demi of Attica, vol. ii. p. 210). Thus the inaction of the Athenians may be accounted for. If they had marched to Marathon by Stamata, they would have exposed themselves to be taken in the rear by the force issuing from Mesogæa by Pallene. But, after the expulsion of the Pisistra-tids and the complete triumph of the other party, no account of the war which made a large portion of the population of Attica favourable to the cause of the tyrant would be palatable, and the adherence of a number of villages would be represented as the act only of individuals among them, who "preferred despotism to liberty." See note 214, below.

³¹¹ ἐπὶ Παλληνίδος Ἀθηναίης ἱρόν. This would be quite out of the direct road from Marathon to Athens, but would be a proper movement for taking in the rear the Athenian force marching into Mesogæa by Pallene. The position of the armies, and their operations will be excellently described by the oracle, if we suppose, first, the Pisistratids from Mesogæa marching upon Pallene; next, the Athenian force advancing to meet these, and opposing an obstacle to their advance; thirdly, the Pisistratids from Marathon, by a night-march from Stamata round the foot of Mount Brilessus, coming upon them about dinner-time. Then the Mesogæan force would be aptly denoted by the ἰκτυον (or seine), the Marathonian corps by the βόλος (or drop-net), and the Athenians by the σελήνη (or moon). The brightness of the mid-day, the critical time for the attack, is symbolized by the epithet σεληναία applied to νύξ: night (not a bright, but a dark one) being the proper time for fishing, after the manner common in Greece, where the represent Louis Napoleon as becoming president of the French Republic, in consequence of the victory of General Changarnier over the allies at the battle of Waterloo; yet it was not for want of more correct representations of the matter. See the first note on v. 66.

²¹⁴ καὶ ἐπέτρεψε Λυγδάμῳ. ARISTOTLE (Politic. v. p. 1305, A. I. 41) gives the fate of the oligarchy of Naxos as an instance of the destruction which awaits such governments, when the members of them indulge in outrages upon the commonalty,—who, to revenge themselves, readily join any leader, especially when they can find one among the members of the oligarchy itself; “as in the case of Lygdamis, ὃς καὶ ἐτυράνευσεν ὅσπερ οὖν τῶν Ναξίων.” The outrage to which he alludes here, he described more fully in his Ναξίων πολιτεία (cp. Athen. viii. p. 348). A number of drunken young men made an attack as a kōmos upon a popular individual named Telestagoras, and grossly ill-treated himself and two marriageable daughters. The Naxians, in indignation, took up arms, προστα- τοῦντος αὐτῶν Λυγδάμιδος, ὅς ἐπὶ ταύτης τῆς στρατηγίας τύραννος ἀνε- φάνη τῆς πατρίδος. According to this view of the Naxian revolution, Lygdamis would appear rather as a successful dynast or general in the way to become such, assisting an ally embarked in a kindred cause; and such a view is in keeping with the way he is mentioned above (§ 61). But doubtless, in after-times, Athenian vanity would be piqued at such a representation of the relation of Pisistratus to Lygdamis, and a new turn (such as that in the text) would be given to the story (see the first note on v. 31). Po-

LYGDMUS (i. 23, 2) represents Polycrates as acquiring the dynasty of Samos by the aid of Lygdamis's troops, but nothing of this kind appears from Herodotus's account. With reference to the chronology of the Naxian revolutions, see the first note on v. 30.

²¹⁴ τὴν νῆσον Δήλον καθήρας. THUCYDIDES (iii. 104) confirms Herodotus's statement relative to Pisistratus's purgation of a portion of the island. The Athenians repeated the operation much more thoroughly in the sixth year of the Peloponnesian war.

²¹⁷ ἐπιτροπεύσαντα Λεωβώτῳ. This passage is quoted by PAUSANIAS (iii.

ἀδελφιδέου μὲν ἑωυτοῦ βασιλεύοντος δὲ Σπαρτιητέων, ἐκ Κρήτης ἀγαγέσθαι ταῦτα. ὥς γὰρ ἐπετρόπευσε τάχιστα, μετέστησε τὰ νόμιμα πάντα, καὶ ἐφύλαξε ταῦτα μὴ παραβαίνειν μετὰ δὲ, τὰ ἐς πόλεμον ἔχοντα, ἐνωμοτίας καὶ τριηκάδας καὶ συσσίτια, πρὸς τε τούτοις τοὺς ἐφόρους²¹⁸ καὶ γέροντας ἔστησε Λυκούργος. Οὕτω 66

2. 3), who identifies Leobotes with the more common form Labotas, the son of Echestratus, king of Sparta. CLINTON (from the difficulties, chronological and genealogical, which result) considers the text corrupted. But in fact Herodotus appears here to be following the same data which were followed by ERATOSTHENES and APOLLODORUS (the Alexandrine chronologers) in determining the succession of the Spartan kings; for they made Lycurgus much more ancient than the first Olympiad. Still no doubt these διαδοχαί were not based on contemporaneous records; for, otherwise, ARISTOTLE would not, as he did (Plutarch. Vit. Lyc. § 1), have considered the fact of Lycurgus's name appearing on the discus of Iphitus at Elis as conclusive of the date of his life. If the διαδοχαί had furnished a certain basis for chronology, such a kind of argument would have been quite superfluous. The uncertainty of the whole matter is obvious from the direct testimony of PLUTARCH in the opening sentence of the Life: περὶ Λυκούργου, τοῦ νομοθέτου καθόλου μὲν οὐδὲν ἔστιν εἰπεῖν ἀναμφισβήτητον, οὐ γὰρ καὶ γένος καὶ ἀποδημία καὶ τελευτὴ καὶ πρὸς ἅπασιν ἡ περὶ τοὺς νόμους αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν πολιτείαν πραγματεία διαφόρους ἔσχεν ἱστορίας ἥκιστα δὲ οἱ χρόνοι, καθ' οὓς γέγονεν δ' ἀνὴρ, δμολογοῦνται. Under these circumstances it ought not to surprise that ARISTOTLE should make Charillus the king to whom Lycurgus was guardian (Polit. ii. p. 1271, line 25), in which he seems to agree with the native Cretan traditions (BROUARD ap. Strabon. x. p. 382), while here Leobotes should be represented as his ward and nephew; or, again, that in some of the lists of Spartan kings Leobotes should appear as an Eurystheneid, and Lycurgus as a Procleid. Before the reigns of Leon and Hegesicles, just mentioned by Herodotus, the history of Sparta is in the highest degree uncertain, and it is not until the reign of Leonidas (i. e. just before the battle of Marathon) that the chronology becomes perfectly definite. Even Eratosthenes and Apollodorus, although they both adopted the same basis (i. e. the διαδοχαί) varied in the date they assigned to Lycurgus by no less than sixty years, the former placing it as high as B.C. 884 (see CLINTON, F. H. vol. ii. Appendix, p. 409). The only points relative to the date of Lycurgus, which seem made out beyond all question, are the following: (1). That Lycurgus, and Iphitus, the restorer of the Olympian festival, were contemporaneous. This was asserted by ARISTOTLE (ap. Plutarch. l. c.), and was also the universal belief of antiquity (ATHENÆUS, xiv. p. 635). (2) That the institutions with which Lycurgus's name was popularly identified had existed in Lacedæmon for a little more than four centuries at the end of the Peloponnesian war (THUCYDIDES, i. 18). (3) That, in the belief of the Eleans, the restoration of the Olympian festival by Iphitus was followed by a regular registration of the victors, of which the first was Coræbus, B.C. 776 (PAUSANIAS, v. 7. 5, segg.). But, as the Lacedæmonian διαδοχαί made Lycurgus much older, TIMÆUS the Locrian endeavoured to reconcile the varying accounts by supposing two Lycurguses (Plutarch. Lycurg. § 1) just as Clinton endeavours to achieve the same result by the machinery of two Iphituses. It is worth remarking, that Aristotle no where expresses the relationship of Lycurgus to his ward Charilaus, neither does Simonides. Aristotle, indeed, in one passage (Polit. iv. p. 1296), calls Lycurgus, like Solon and Charondas, a man τῶν μέσων πολιτῶν, although he qualifies this strange phrase by adding (if the words be not an interpolation) οὐ γὰρ ἦν βασιλεὺς.

²¹⁸ πρὸς τε τούτοις τοὺς ἐφόρους. ARISTOTLE (Polit. v. p. 1313, line 27) makes the Ephoralty to have been an institution, not of Lycurgus, but of Theopompus (of whom Herodotus makes mention, viii. 131, as the grandson of Charillus, and, consequently, two generations at least later than Lycurgus). He relates that the king, having been reproached by his wife with leaving the kingly office to his children in an inferior condition to

rodotus here seems to represent the Arcadian wars as growing out of the elation of the Spartans at their prosperity under Lycurgus's institutions. ARISTOTLE, on the other hand, distinctly represents the wars with the Argives, and afterwards with the Arcadians and Messenians as having produced such an effect on the Lacedæmonians as to render the legislation of Lycurgus more easy: ἔξω γὰρ τῆς οἰκείας διὰ τὰς στρατείας ἀπεξεργάζοντο πολὺν χρόνον, πολεμοῦντες τὸν τε πρὸς Ἀργεῖους πόλεμον καὶ πάλιν τὸν πρὸς Ἀρκάδας καὶ Μεσσηνίους· σχολάζαντες τιωτικὸν βίον (πολλὰ γὰρ ἔχει μέρη τῆς ἐπιχειρήσαι τὸν Λυκούργον ἐπὶ τοὺς νόμους, ὡς δ' ἀντίκρουον, ἀποστήναι πάλιν (Po-littic. ii. p. 1270, line 1). Herodotus scarcely mentions the early Messenian wars at all (see note on iii. 47), neither does he any with either Argos or Arcadia antecedent to the Lycurgean legislation.

²²⁰ ὅσοι αὐτῶν ἐξωγήθησαν. PAUSA-NIAS (x. 9. 5) describes a large group of statues set up at Delphi by the Tegeates in commemoration of this event. He ascribes them to four artists, who are placed by SILLIG (Catalogus Artificum, v. v. Pausanias, Dedalus of Sicyon, Antiphames, and Samolus) quite at the end of the fifth century B.C. It is not likely, therefore, that the monument existed at Delphi at the time of Herodotus's visit there; and his account of the war appears on other accounts to be taken from a Tegean tradition. Perhaps this monument, and also the Argive one (on which see note on i. 82), was set up during the hollow truce between Athens and Sparta (B.C.
421—417) at a time when the diplomatic arts of Alcibiades were employed in the attempt to organize Arcadia and Argos against Lacedæmon. See note on viii. 27, οἱ μεγάλοι ἀνδριάντες.

²²¹ Ἀλέης Ἀθηναίης. The goddess Athena was worshipped under this name at Mantinea and at Alea (hard by Stym-phalus) as well as at Tegea. The temple at this last place was an ancient sanctuary for the whole of Peloponnesus. Two La-coedæmonian kings, Leotychides and Pausanias, found refuge there; and so also did Chryseis, the Argive priestess, when the Heraeum was burnt down owing to her falling asleep (PAUSANIAS, iii. 5. 6). In Laconia she was worshipped at Therapne. As a divinity she was undoubtedly of the time antecedent to the Heraclide invasion. The image of the Tegean Athene which Pausanias found there (viii. 47. 1) had been brought from Manthreia, a village in Arcadia, where it had the surname not of Alea, but of Hippia. But the Athene Hippia (worshipped at Colonus and Acharnæ in Attica, and at Elis) is, from the combination in which she is found with Poseidon, the Dioscuri, and Pan, obviously Acharnæan. See note on v. 72, ἦτε ἐς τὸ ἄδυτον τῆς θεοῦ, and the next to it.

²²² Ἀναξανδρίδῳ τε καὶ Ἀρίστωνος βασιλῆϊν. Anaxandrides was the son of Leon. He was dead at the time Aristagoras arrived in Sparta to solicit the aid of the Lacedæmonians against Persia (v. 39). By the comparison of this passage with § 65, it appears that Herodotus places the unsuccessful expedition against Tegea in the reign of Leon. Ariston was the father of Demaratus, respecting whose birth Herodotus tells the strange story (vi. 61, seqq.).

²²⁴ τὰ Ὀρέστω τοῦ Ἀγαμέμνονος ὅστέα. A Spartan local legend made Orestes king of Lacedæmon in addition to his paternal dominions, and he was said to have brought from the Tauri the wooden image (ξέανον) of Artemis Orthia, in the Limnæum of Sparta, in honour of whom, before the time of Lycurgus, human victims were sacrificed, and subsequently youths were scourged, in accordance with the command of an oracle "to shed human blood on her altar" (PAUSANIAS, iii. 16. 7). But the Arcadian traditions made Orestes emigrate from Mycenæ, not to Sparta, but to Arcadia (PAUSANIAS, viii. 5. 4). From the circumstance of Herodotus bringing his bones thence, and from that of his mentioning the fetters hanging up in the temple of Athene Alea, it seems that in this insulated story he is following a local Tegean tradition.

²²⁶ Τεγέης ἐπιτάρβηθος ἔσση. This expression occasions a good deal of difficulty, as ἐπιτάρβηθος (or its equivalent ἐπὶρβηθος) signifies "a helper" or "defender," especially in the case of a deity who assists in war, whereas here the sense of a victor over the city seems required. But there is no authority for the word possessing such a sense; and perhaps the passage may be explained without resorting to it. The meaning of the oracle seems to be, that the possession of the bones of Orestes would put the Lacedæmonians in the position of θεοὶ ἐπιτάρροθοι as regarded Tegea; i. e. they would have it in their hands to let it stand or destroy it. It is a curious circumstance, that the “cineres Orestis” were one of the seven sacred fetishes, which were considered as securing the imperium Romanum (SERVIUS ad Virg. Æn. vii. 188). This, if there were nothing else, would be an indication that one of the elements of the population of early Rome was ethnically identical with the race which in the time of Herodotus remained in Arcadia.

²²⁷ μὴ ἐλυνέειν. These words, which are equivalent to σφεδῆειν, perhaps are a portion of the formula of instructions to the Agathoergi.

²³¹ ἀπὸ τούτου τοῦ χρόνου. The dedication of a fane to Orestes would not be without political significance. He was a hero belonging to the Tyndaride mythology; in other words, he was an object of reverence to the Achæan or ante-Dorian population of Laconia. These were, in a great measure, of the same blood as the Arcadians, and possibly the previous want of success arose from their indifference to the cause. But, soon after the event mentioned in the text, it is certain that the Achæan element in the Lacedæmonian population acquired considerable importance. (See notes on v. 72, and v. 75.)
It is far from unlikely that the dedication in question was the formal inauguration of some changes in the constitution by which this portion of the community was elevated,—perhaps some modification of the royal marriage-laws. (See the third note on v. 41.)

²³² κατεστραμμένη. The historical notices of the Lacedæmonians are resumed in v. 39.

²³³ δῶρά τε φέροντας. The manuscripts
S and V connect these words with § 66.
See the note 178, above.

²³⁴ τὸν Ἑλληνα, "the Greek." Possibly this was the exact phrase of the oracle, of which the expression τοῦτο Ἑλ-λήνων δυνατῶτάτους. (§ 63) may be a paraphrastic explanation.

²³⁵ ἐς ἀγαλμα βουλόμενοι χρῆσασθαι.
It does not follow from these words, as some have supposed, that the Lacedæmonians wished to form the gold into an image. TIMOPOMPUS (cp. Athen. vi.
p. 231) says that they wanted it "to gild the face (χρυσῶσαι τὸ πρόσωπον) of the image of Apollo at Amyclæ." The oldest images of the gods in the Hellenic temples were of wood, and, when the taste for art sprang up, it was opposed by an unwillingness to substitute new forms of a nobler material for the old idols, to which a peculiar sanctity was attributed. A union of the two principles was attempted by draping the ancient figure, and affixing head, hands, and feet of marble (what PAUSANIAS calls ἀκρόλῑθοι). A very archaic specimen of this kind is the statue of Apollo at Phigalia, described by STACKELBERG (Der Apollo Tempel zu Bassæ, p. 98). Another method was to cover a portion, or the whole of the original figure, with a crust of gold or ivory. These are what the chorus in EURIPIDES (Troades, 1074) allude to when they speak of χρυσέων ξοδῶν τύποι. It must be remembered that, when Theopompus speaks of gilding the face of the Apollo statue, he does not mean the application of gold-leaf, but of a solid mask, beaten by the hammer into shape. Neither must this practice be confounded in its origin with one which grew up under the Roman emperors, of making moveable head-dresses for the portrait-statues, in order that they might, like their originals, follow the fashion of the day. The gold and ivory were in the early times intended to be fixtures, and Phidias was the first (in the case of the Athene Parthenos, a new statue) who contrived that they should be moveable. The ancient idol was preserved under the influence of the same feeling which induced the more lax Christians of Germany to allow the images of the pagan idols to remain in the masonry of their church-walls. (See GRIMM, Deutsche Mythologie, p. 691.) St. Gallus found three such in an oratory of St. Aurelia at Bregenz, and broke them up and threw them into the lake of Constance. The people said of them, "Isti sunt dii veteres et antiqui hujus loci tutores, quorum solatio et nos et nostra perdurant usque in præsens."

²²⁶ ἐν Θόρνῳ. The image of Apollo here was of the same kind with that at Amyclæ, which latter was more highly venerated by the Lacedæmonians; and PAUSANIAS states, that the gold which Croesus sent for the former statue was appropriated by the Lacedæmonians to the decoration of the latter (iii. 10. 8). This one he describes as being extremely archaic and rude, and except for the countenance, the hands, and the extremities of the feet, resembling a column of brass. (See the account of the Paphian Aphrodite in the note on i. 105.) He adds, ἐχει δὲ ἐπὶ τῇ κεφαλῇ κρένος, λόγχην δὲ ἐν ταῖς χερσὶ καὶ τόξον. It was apparently about thirty cubits in height. If it was any thing like this, a considerable amount of gold must have been requisite for the face, and the conjecture of Quatremère de Quincy, that it was used for ornamenting the throne on which the idol was placed (which was more recent, and of a highly elaborate character), becomes perfectly gratuitous.

²²⁷ ἦσαν ἐτοῖμοι ἐπαγγεῖλαντι. "Closed with his proposition." ἐτοῖμος εἶναι implies, not merely the existence of an inclination to do a thing, but the expression of it in words. Thus Gyges (i. 10): ὡς οὐκ ἔδυνάτο διαφυγέειν ἢν ἐτοῖμος, "consented." SOPHOCLES, Antig. 264, seqq.:

ἦμεν δὲ ἔτοιμοι καὶ μύθρους αἶρειν χερσὶν καὶ πῦρ διέρπειν, καὶ θεοὺς δρκαμοτεῖν τὸ μῆτε δρᾶσαι μῆτε τφ ξυνειδέναι.

"we offered to take hot iron in our hands." This idiom seems to have arisen from ἐτοῖμος εἶμι, being a colloquial phrase to denote consent.

²⁴⁰ χώρην ἔχοντες τρηχείην. This is only a true description of a portion even of Persia Proper. And, after the transfer of the resources of the Medes to the Persians, it was impossible to continue using the argument of Sandanias. Neither does Persia Proper lie outside the region of Asia where the vine is cultivated. This insulated narrative therefore seems rather to belong to the same class of stories as those on which XENOPHON based his Cyropædia. Of the same kind is the anecdote related ix. 121.

²⁴³ ὃς ῥέει ἐξ Ἀρμενίου οὗρεος διὰ Κιλικίων. It is impossible to reconcile the aggregate notices by Herodotus of the course of the river Halys with geographical facts, and not easy to understand the origin of his errors, except by supposing that he not only confuses two rivers, but confounds two ranges of mountains. The Halys really rises in the ridge called Anti-Taurus, and, after flowing a considerable distance in a w. s. w. direction, takes a turn to the north-west, to about 40° N. lat. Thence it runs towards the N.E., falling into the Black Sea something east of Sinope. But between the ridge where it takes its rise, and the range of Taurus which runs along the south coast of Asia Minor, is an extensive plain entirely surrounded by mountains, the waters from which have no outlet, but terminate in inland lakes of large size, some of them extremely salt. Through this tract (Lycaonia or Tyanitis) the great military road of the Persians ran, two points of which were Critalla (supposed to be Ercle, lat. 37° 30', long. 31° 20') and Celæne, where the Meander rose; and between these two places Herodotus makes the road pass the Halys, at a place where there was a strong fort and a barrier (v. 52; vii. 26). It is impossible to suppose that here one of the rivers of the central plain is not meant;

and, if we take it to be a stream terminating in the lake near Ercle, perhaps we have a clue to the error of Herodotus. He apparently supposed the river crossed to be the real Halys, and he knew that river to be the boundary of the two empires. The Ercle river, on which is Bor (πόρος?), does really flow from that chain of mountains which belong to Armenia, and also διὰ Κιλικίων, for anciently the Cilicians inhabited both sides of Taurus. (See LEAKE, Asia Minor, pp. 62–64.) It is indeed too small to be itself mistaken for the real Halys, but it seems not unlikely that the word Halys contains the same root as the Hellenic ἄλς, and signified (like the African Bahr) either a river or any other large quantity of water. Thus PLINY places Archelais upon a Halys (vi. 3); and it seems quite certain that the true emplacement of this site is the modern Ak-Serai (lat. 38° 20'), which is upon a stream called the Bayán Sú, flowing from the south into the great salt lake of Lycaonia. FIRUZABADI, too, the author of the Arabic Lexicon Kámus, gives Alis as the name of a river in Cilicia, one day's journey from the city Tarsus. The word Al also is said to mean in Persian the mirage, or the appearance resembling water often seen in the desert. It, therefore, appears far from improbable that the authorities followed by Herodotus mistook an appellative for a proper name. See note 256, below, and on ii. 111, Φερών.

²⁴⁸ γῆς. The manuscripts S and V

have γῆν ἐπιθυμῶν ἡμερον προσκτήσασθαι, and then proceed with ἡμέρῳ, &c.

²⁵⁰ εἴλη ἀνδρῶν. The manuscripts S and V leave out these words and all that follows until § 75, ὅς δὲ ἀπῆκετο ἐπὶ τὸν Ἄλυν. See note 136, above.

²⁵¹ τὴν τέχνην τῶν τόξων. This characteristic of the Scythian race is indicated in the legendary account of their origin from Heracles, which Herodotus gives (iv. 9), and also in the present which they send to Darius (iv. 131, 132).

²⁵² ἐβούλευσαν. Some MSS have the medial form ἐβουλεύσαντο, which is defended by ἐβουλεύετο (viii. 101) and τὸ εἰδέναι (vii. 10). But the active form, which is supported by the majority of MSS, appears in vi. 52, Λακεδαιμονίους . . . βουλευσάσι βασιλεῖα τὸν πρεσβύτερον τῶν παιδων ποιήσασθαι. In iii. 84, the two forms are so used that it seems impossible to draw a distinction between them, except, perhaps, that where the notion of making a proposition or adopting a proposition predominates the active form is preferable to the medial; and that where mere deliberation, without any reference to distinct propositions made or adopted, is intended to be described, the medial form is more appropriate than the active.

solar eclipse here mentioned must have happened on September 30th, in the year 610 B.C. It furnishes, therefore, a fixed point for a chronology of Herodotus's narrative.

²⁵⁵ Θαλῆς ὁ Μιλήσιος . . . ἔσεσθαι. There is no antecedent improbability in this statement, but at the same time it should not be forgotten how strong the tendency was with the Greeks to attribute to great names a share in every thing remarkable. Thus, in the next section, a great engineering work (or one supposed to be such) is attributed to Thales. And his reputation was not confined to matters of physical science. ERHORS (ap. Strabon. x. c. 4, p. 380) says that the pæans and other local chants of Crete were ascribed to Thales. This tradition probably grew up in a colony from Miletus (of the same name), which existed on the north-east coast of the island. It is curiously illustrative of the plastic nature of popular traditions, that in it Thales's character as a physical philosopher is entirely ignored, and he is represented as a μελοποιὸς ἀνὴρ καὶ νομοθετικὸς, and as the contemporary and instructor of Lycurgus the Spartan legislator.

See note on i. 109, θαλῆσει.

³⁵⁸ τὸ αἷμα ἀναλείχουσι ἀλλήλων. TACITUS describes a similar practice as prevailing in Armenia (Annal. xii. 47): "Mos est regibus, quoties in societatem coeant, implicare dexteras pollicesque inter se vincire nodoque praestringere: mox ubi sanguis artus extremos suffuderit, levi ictu cuorem eliciunt atque invicem lambunt." Compare the practice of the Scythians (iv. 70).

³⁵⁹ εἰ στρατεύηται ἐπὶ Πέρσας. These words are governed by the words, ἐς τὰ χ. ἔπεμπε, which are equivalent, or nearly so, to ἐχρήστηνιδέετο.

³⁶⁰ The manuscripts S and V here resume the thread of the narrative which was broken off in § 73. See note 250, above.

³⁶¹ κατὰ τὰς ἐούσας γεφύρας. It can scarcely be doubted that Herodotus here is speaking of the same place of transit he describes in v. 52; but this would not have brought Croesus any where near to Sinope. See note 243.

³⁶² ἐξ ἀριστερῆς χειρὸς . . . ἐκ δεξιῆς ῥέειν. From this phrase it would appear that, in the mind of the narrators of this story, the river on which the operation was performed could not have been the real Halya, at least at its first passage. Croesus, marching from Sardis to that river, would find it ἐκ δεξιῆς ῥέοντα, and consequently the effect of the engineering of Thales would be to make it καὶ ἐκ ἀρι-

στέρῃς ῥέειν. But the expression would be a natural one if the river, like that which falls into the lake near Erclè (see note 243) ran from north to south. If, however, the Erclè river is intended, this story cannot have been found by Herodotus in connexion with the operations which he makes follow it; for the river in the neighbourhood of Sinope is the real Halys.

²⁶³ τὴν Πτερίην καλεομένην. This is the only place in which this town is mentioned. From Croesus attacking it, we may suppose that it was inhabited not by a Hellenic, but by a Cappadocian population. And its name is probably significant in the Aramaic languages, as Πτερά was the name (according to some authorities) of the "acropolis" (i. e. citadel) of Babylon, and Πτέριον or Πτερία the name of a Median city (STEPHANUS BYZANTIN. sub v., who adds that the ethnic adjective of the Median city was Πτερινός, but that of the town near Sinope Πτέριος). The vagueness of the description in the text is unfavourable to the supposition that Herodotus himself was at Pteria; nor does it appear that he was even at Sinope. But he undoubtedly was at Phasis (ii. 104), which was in commercial communication with Sinope (see notes on i. 104; ii. 34), and might there have heard the account of the battle at Pteria.

Καὶ τὰ μὲν στρατόπεδα ἀμφοτέρα οὕτως ἡγωνίσαστο, Κροῖσος δὲ μεμφθεὶς²⁶⁷ κατὰ τὸ πλῆθος τὸ ἐνωτοῦ στρατεύμα· (ἦν γὰρ οἱ ὁ συμβαλὼν στρατὸς πολλὸν ἐλάσσω· ἢ ὁ Κύρου) τοῦτο μεμφθεὶς, ὡς τῇ ὑστεραίῃ οὐκ ἐπειράτο ἐπιῶν ὁ Κύρος, ἀπήλαυε ἐς τὰς Σάρδεις, ἐν νόφ ἔχων, παρακαλέσας μὲν Αἰγυπτίους κατὰ τὸ ὄρκιον, (ἐποιήσατο γὰρ καὶ πρὸς Ἀμασιν βασιλεύοντα Αἰγύπτου συμμάχιν πρότερον ἢ περὶ πρὸς Λακεδαιμονίους,) μεταπεμφόμενος δὲ καὶ Βαβυλωνίους²⁶⁸, (καὶ γὰρ πρὸς τοὺς αὐτῷ ἐπεπολιήτο συμμάχιν· ἐτυράννευε δὲ τῶν Βαβυλωνίων τὸν χρόνον τοῦτον Λαβύνητος²⁶⁹.) ἐπαγγέλλας δὲ καὶ Λακεδαιμονίους παρεῖναι ἐς χρόνον ῥητὸν, ἀλλίως²⁷⁰ τε δὴ τοὺς καὶ τὴν ἐνωτοῦ συλλέξας στρατιήν, ἐνέκωτο τὸν χειμῶνα παρὲς ἅμα τῷ ἡρι στρατεύειν ἐπὶ τοὺς Πέρσας. καὶ ὁ μὲν ταῦτα φρονέων, ὡς ἀπίκετο ἐς τὰς Σάρδεις, ἔπεμπε κήρυκας κατὰ τὰς συμμαχίας προερέοντας ἐς πέμπτον μῆνα συλλέγεσθαι ἐς Σάρδεις, τὸν δὲ παρῶντα καὶ μαχεσάμενον στρατὸν Πέρσῃσι, δς ἦν αὐτοῦ ξεινικός, πάντα ἀπείς διεσκέδασε, οὐδαμὰ ἐλπίας μή κοτε ἄρα ἀγωνισάμενος οὕτω παραπλησίως Κύρος ἐλάσει ἐπὶ Σάρδεις. he returns to Sardis, and plans an expedition on a grander scale in the next spring;

Ταῦτα ἐπιλεγόμενῳ Κροίσῳ τὸ προάστειον πᾶν ὀφίων ἐν-επλήσθη φανέντων δὲ αὐτῶν, οἱ ἵπποι μετιέντες τὰς νομάς νέμεσθαι φοιτέοντες κατήσθιον. ἰδόντι δὲ τοῦτο Κροίσῳ, ὥσπερ καὶ ἦν, ἔδοξε τέρας εἶναι. αὐτίκα δὲ ἔπεμπε θεοπρόπους ἐς τῶν with which view he dismisses his existing army.

²⁶⁷ μεμφθεὶς. This word is used in the sense of μεμφόμενος not only here, but in iii. 13; vii. 146.

²⁶⁸ μεταπεμφόμενος δὲ καὶ Βαβυλωνίους. This phrase is appropriate to the sending for levies from Babylon to form a part of the invading army, which was to rendezvous at Sardis in five months (ἐς πέμπτον μῆνα συλλέγεσθαι ἐς Σάρδεις). But a glance at the map will show the impossibility of such a plan of operations, as in fact the Babylonians would have had to pass through the enemies' country for many hundred miles to get to Sardis. The real service which Cræsus would have expected from the Babylonians (and probably from the Egyptians also) would have been to divert the attention of the Persians by a simultaneous advance into their territory. But strategics of this kind were unfamiliar to the Greeks; and the authority here followed by Herodotus seems to have conceived a gathering like that which the Lacedæmonians used to arrange before making one of their expeditions. (See the contemptuous description of the Hellenic tactics put into the mouth of Mardonius, vii. 9.) And from this circumstance, and the Lacedæmonians being named together with such very disparate allies as Egypt and Babylon, one is led to conjecture that the author is here following a Lacedæmonian authority, or that of some one connected, in some relation or other, with Lacedæmon.

²⁷¹ ἐς τῶν ἐξηγητέων Τελμησσέων. There is an ellipse of μαντείον or some equivalent word. Herodotus appears here to refer to a kind of college of diviners, situated sixty stadēs from Halicarnassus (POLEMO ap. Etym. Magn. v. Τελμησσέες). There was also a Telmessus on the borders of Caria and Lycia, and a Ter-messus (which is probably only another form of Telmessus) near the pass which led through Taurus into the interior. That the tutelary deity of these cities was identical with the possessor of the oracle to which Herodotus refers is very likely. The coins of Telmessus have on the one side the Sun-god with head surrounded with rays, and on the reverse Apollo stole, sitting on a tripod on which his left hand rests, the right holding a bow. Behind his shoulder are two arrows (HOFFMANN, Griechenland, p. 1745). The eponymous ancestor of the Telmissians was said to be the son of Apollo and a daughter of Antenor (Etym. Magn. l. c.), a genealogy which gives an Asiatic origin for the Telmessus deity; and accounts both for a Lydian king consulting the oracle, and for the circumstance which has been observed by travellers, that there is a great resemblance between the monumental remains at Ter-messus and at Persepolis. The MSS

²⁷² ἀναπλῶσαι ἐς τὰς Σάρδεις. This expression indicates that the narrator was ignorant of the geographical bearing of Sardis with respect to the μαντείον. The real messengers could hardly have returned otherwise than by land. But of the general consultants of the oracle,—the Hellenic settlers along the coast of Asia Minor,—the expression would be appropriate. Perhaps Herodotus is telling the tale as he heard it at the fane, and retains the very expression used by the narrator.

²⁷³ πρὶν ἢ τὸ δεύτερον . . . τὴν δύναμιν. This clause stands very variously in the MSS. The Sancroft MS has ὅπως πρὶν ἢ τὴν δύναμιν ἀλίσθῃναι τὸ δεύτερον τῶν Λυδῶν αὐτὸς ἐπικαταλάβοι, and the Vienna Codex, which almost always agrees with it, although omitting the words αὐτὸς ἐπικαταλάβοι, exhibits the trace of them by retaining ὅπως at the beginning of the clause. Other MSS agree with S, except in placing δύναμιν as it stands in the text, one of them too having καταλάβοι instead of ἐπικαταλάβοι. It is so unlikely that one of these readings should have been altered into the other, that it is easier to suppose the two genuine.

Battle of Sardis.

Stratagem of Cyrus to frighten the Lydian cavalry by his camels.

²⁷⁴ αὐτὸς ἄγγελος Κροίσῳ ἐληλύθει. The length of the marches of which the Persians of the present day are capable is almost incredible. In the end of May 1831, a force consisting of three regiments of foot, five guns, a howitzer and 1000 horse, accompanied by a British detachment, marched between the parallels of 29° and 30°, no less than 112 miles in five days, being too at the time ill supplied with provisions. The cavalry at a later period (June 14th—16th) returned to Kirman from whence the expedition set out, performing 106 miles in two days and a half, and arriving before mid-day. The reason of these long marches is, that the only alternative to them is to encamp half-way in some place destitute of water. In the great plains of Persia the villages are very widely scattered, and the necessity of conveying the produce of their lands (usually upon asses) for sale or barter to distant villages makes the peasantry unrivalled for the endurance of fatigue. (Journal of the London Geographical Society, Vol. ix. pp. 136—156.)

²⁷⁷ "Ἴλλος. This river and the Hermus are combined in Iliad xx. 392, where the hero Iphition, the son of Otryntes and a Naiad, is said to have been born 'in Hydè, under snowy Tmolus,' ἐπὶ λίμνῃ Γυγαίῃ, ὅθι τοὶ τέμενος πατρίων ἐστίν, "Ἴλλῳ ἐν Ἰχθυόεντι καὶ Ἑρμῷ διήεντι. (See note on i. 93, καλεῖται δὲ αὐτὴ Γυγαίη.)

²⁷⁸ Μητρὸς Δινδυμήνης. From the variation of the MSS between Δήμητρος, Δινδυμήνης, and Δινευμήνης (of which, however, the two first are the only genuine varieties), a suspicion arises that both are glosses. Herodotus, when he speaks of the same goddess (iv. 76), calls her ἡ μήτηρ τῶν θεῶν. It may be observed, that the local name of the goddess at Sardis was Κυβήβη (see note on v. 102), from which one may gather that Herodotus gained his information of the source of the Hermus from some other locality than Sardis; perhaps from Cyzicus, the centre of the Cybele-worship in his time.

* Φωκαίην. See note on § 142, Φωκαία.

²⁸² τὰς γὰρ Θυρέας ταύτας. The use of the plural form Thyreæ in immediate juxtaposition with the singular form Thyreæ is very strange, and suggests the conjecture that the narrative of the battle may be a subsequent addition, perhaps by the hand of the author himself,—although here, as in many other places, the last polish remains to be given, and the addition is still to be regarded rather in the light of a note than as incorporated into the text. The phrase ἡ μέχρι Μαιῶν ἡ πρὸς Ἰσπέρην is a singular one. The narrator speaks as a Lacedæmonian might do in describing the coast between Helos and Maleæ. 'The western bank of the Eurotas was always ours. But cross the river, and then the coast as far as Maleæ, west of the cape, formerly belonged to the Argives, not merely on the main but also in Cythera, and the other islands too.'

²⁸² καὶ ἡ Κυθηρίη. Gaisford and the MSS add νῆσος. But the form which Herodotus uses for the name of the island is always τὰ Κῶθηρα. See below, i. 105; vii. 235. In this passage the word is an adjective agreeing with χώρα. See the last note. The "other islands" perhaps include those on the east coast of the Peloponnese, mentioned as being Argive, like Cythera, although they are not a portion of the πρὸς ἑσπέρην χώρα.

²⁸⁴ ἐν τῇ τάξει εἶχε ἑωυτόν. STRABO (viii. c. 6, p. 207) makes Othryades the leader of the Spartan three hundred. In the course of time the picturesque feature was added to this story, that Othryades inscribed the trophy with his own blood (LUCIAN, Consepl. § 24). Hence STRATIS says, "Lacedæmonium Thyre lectura cruorem" (Theb. iv. 48). See the first note on vi. 105.

²⁸³ ὡς ἑωυτῶν πλεῖνες περιγεγόνασι. PAUSANIAS (x. 9. 12) mentions a brazen horse among the offerings at Delphi, set up by the Argives, as having been victors in this battle. It was said to be the work of Antiphanes the Argive, and, if so, would hardly have been set up at the time of Herodotus's visit to the temple. See note 220.

²³⁶ ἀπὸ τούτου κομᾶν. A festival (the Gymnopædia) was instituted at Lacedæmon in honour of this battle, at which a chorus of beautiful youths, and another of men distinguished for valour, sang the songs of Thales (see note 256) and Alcman and the pæans of Dionysodotus the Lacedæmonian. The officials who superintended wore crowns of palm-leaves called θυρατικοὶ στέφανοι (Sosibius, De Sacrificiis ap. Athenæum, xv. p. 678). In the poetical effusions of these occasions it is not difficult to recognize the source of many of Herodotus's tales. Thyres is the Hellenic "Otterburn," and the details of the battle probably are about on a par, historically, with those of "Chevy-Chase."

²³⁸ Μάρδος. The Mardi are represented as one of the four nomad Persian tribes (below, § 125). The word also occurs as the termination of the name Ἀριόμαρδος in Æschylus:

δ τ' ἐσθλὸς Ἀριόμαρδος Σάρδεσι
πένθος παρὰσχών. (Persæ, 321.)

²³⁹ ἐπειράτο προσβαίνων. "Made a trial of getting up." So περίδοθαι ἀποσχίζων, vi. 9.

²⁴⁰ δικασάντων. The use of this word for the promulgation of an oracular saying is derived from the time when diviners were resorted to for purposes of civil life, and when they decided all cases in which religious considerations had any weight. Hence the continual resort to Delphi for arbitration: as, for instance, after the murder of Candaules. In fact the idea of the oracle as a judgment-seat is perhaps the earliest of all. Thus Deborah, "the prophetess," "judged Israel."

²⁹¹ κατηλόγησε ταύτην. Bekker reads ταῦτο. The accusative is used below, § 144; and iii. 121; but the circumstance that the construction would, by its adoption here, run more regularly is a presumption against the change having been made by transcribers to the genitive.

²⁹² ἔστι δὲ πρὸς τοῦ Τμώλου τετραμμένον τῆς πόλιος. The sense is not the same as would be required if the article τὸ were inserted after δέ. That would be, "and it is that part of the city which looks in the direction of Tmolus." The real meaning is, "and it looks towards Tmolus in its bearing from the city." (See notes on § 110 and vi. 22.) The place in question is a sort of ridge or "striding-edge," called from its configuration πρίων, which connected the citadel with Tmolus. The city, according to COCKERELL (op. Leake, Asia Minor, p. 342), was built on one of the roots of Tmolus, looking northward over the valley of the Hermus. South of the city, in a small plain watered by the Pactolus, stood the temple of Cybele. The western front was on the bank of the river, the eastern under the impending heights of the Acropolis. See v. 101, 102.

²⁹³ αὐτός. This is the reading of all the MSS, but is altered by Gaisford to οὗτος. But the change is unnecessary. The words ὁ Μάρδος seem to be a gloss; and αὐτὸς ἰδὼν to mean, "having seen with his own eyes."

²⁹⁴ ὁ αὐτός τε. Bekker omits the article. If any change were made, I should rather be disposed to read οὗτος. But by the expression ὁ αὐτός Herodotus seems rather to express that it was that same Hyriades who had observed the descent of the Lydian after his helmet, who the next day led the scaling party.

²⁹⁵ κατ' αὐτόν. "Observing his way," "treading in his footsteps."

²⁹⁶ οὕτω δὴ Σάρδιές τε ἠλώκεσαν. The account given by CTESIAS of the capture of the town is different from that of Herodotus, but not incompatible with it. He represents the garrison as being scared from their quarters by the stratagem of elevating on long poles the armour of some Persians, so that it appeared as if a force had already scaled the walls. If we conceive a considerable body of men stealing up unperceived in the way Herodotus describes, and forming a lodgment under the wall (while a diversion was made in another part), and, when mounted in sufficient force, making use of the stratagem which Ctesias and Polyenus relate, the two accounts are compatible with one another and with probability. The garrison quitting their quarters for the moment in a panic would give the scaling party time to establish themselves on the rampart, and then the town would be won. LICYNIUS and HERMESIANAX in after-times adopted another form of the story more favourable to poetical requirements; viz. that the town was betrayed by Nanis, a daughter of Croesus, on condition of Cyrus marrying her.

εὐθνή, obviously from a gloss. The word εὐεστῶ is a poetical one, and is used by ÆSCHYLUS (Agam. 647, χαίρουσαν εὐεστοὶ πόλιν). The form ἀπεστῶ, in the sense of “exclusion from,” is used in ix. 85, unless the passage be corrupt. συνεστῶ in vi. 128 can hardly be considered the true reading.

³⁰⁰ μὴ βούλευ. This is Gaisford's reading, but there is at least equal manuscript authority for the common form βούλου.

³⁰¹ ἴην. This word is used by ÆSCHYLUS (Pers. 934, κακομέλετον ἰὰν Μαρνανδουὸ θρηνητῆρος). It is an appropriate term for the oracle to use, for it was the cry used in the invocations of Apollo (ἡ παῖων). Its use in the Rhesus (553, σύ-ργγος ἴη) is very suspicious, as all trace of the original meaning seems lost.

³⁰² μὲν μιν. Most of the MSS and Gaisford have μὲν νυν. S μὲν νυν. A similar substitution of μὲν νυν is found in i. 183 in several of the MSS.

³⁰⁴ δις ἐπτὰ Λυδῶν παῖδας. The poetical character of the expression Λυδῶν παῖδας (which also occurs above, § 26) is heightened by δις ἐπτὰ for τεσσereσκαῖδεκα.

³⁰⁸ ἐνθαῦτα λέγεται ὑπὸ Λυδῶν. The account given by Ctesias (who drew from Persian sources, although probably modified by Hellenic intercourse) of the rescue of Croesus by Apollo is equally miraculous in its character. On Sardis being taken, Croesus flies to the temple of Apollo within the city. He is put in chains there, but three times released by an invisible hand. Afterwards he is removed from the temple and loaded with irons in the royal palace; but his release again follows, accompanied with earthquakes and thunderings. (Compare the release of Dionysus in the Bacchæ of Euripides.) Cyrus, recognizing in this the favour of the gods for Croesus, makes him ruler over a great city (Barene) in the neighbourhood of Agbatana. It is to be remarked that in Ctesias's account the expedition of Cyrus against the Sacæ was represented as taking place before that against Sardis (ap. Photium, Biblioth. p. 36).

The burning of the captives is rather in harmony with the Belus-worship of Babylon than with the Persian religion of Cyrus's time. (See below, § 132.) Many centuries afterwards (in the time of Hadrian) human sacrifices appear to have been offered to Mithras (Cædwen, Symbolik. i. p. 258), but then not by vivi-combustion. The proceeding therefore can hardly be explained as a trait out of the Median ritual. It is much more in keeping with the notions of an Asiatic Greek. Thus Achilles sacrifices twelve Trojan captives on the pyre of Patroclus (Iliad xxiii. 175). I should look for the origin of the narrative in some Apollo-worshipping city which was in commercial relations with Lydia. See note on § 109.

³⁰⁹ δυναμένους δὲ οὐκέτι καταλαβεῖν. The same use of καταλαμβάνω is found in Joh. Evang. i. 6, τὸ δὲ σκότος αὐτὸ οὐ κατέλαβε, where the English version is very bad.

³¹⁰ κάτισέ τε ἐγγὺς ἐωντοῦ. This phrase is an oriental feature in the tale. To sit near the sovereign at table would be the most significant mark of favour in an Eastern court. See 1 Sam. xx. 25; 2 Sam. ix. 7. 11; 1 Kings xviii. 19.

³¹¹ συννοίῃ ἐχόμενος, “pondering.” So below, § 141, ὀργῇ ἐχόμενος, “angry.”

Ταῦτα ἀκούων ὁ Κύρος ὑπερήδετο, 90 ὥς οἱ ἐδόκεε εὖ ὑποτίθεσθαι αἰνέσας δὲ πολλὰ, καὶ ἐντειλάμενος His wrath against Apollo. τοῖσι δορυφόροις τὰ Κροῖσος ὑπεθήκατο ἐπιτελέειν, εἶπε πρὸς Κροῖσον τάδε· "Κροῖσε, ἀναρτημένου σεῦ ἀνδρὸς βασιλέως χρηστὰ ἔργα καὶ ἔπεα ποίειν¹¹³, αἰτέο¹¹⁴ τὴν δόσιν ἣν τινα¹¹⁵ βούλεαι τοι γενέσθαι παραντίκα;" ὁ δὲ εἶπε "ὦ δέσποτα, ἑάσας με χαριεῖ μάλιστα τὸν θεὸν τῶν Ἑλλήνων τὸν ἐτίμησα ἐγὼ θεῶν μάλιστα ἐπέλρεσθαι πέμψαντα τάσδε τὰς πέδας, εἴ ἐξαπατᾶν τοὺς εὖ ποιεῦντας νόμος ἔστι οἱ;" Κύρος δὲ εἶρετο ὃ τι οἱ τοῦτο ἐπηγορεύων

¹¹² οἳ λεγόντων. This expression is equivalent to καὶ οἱ τοὶ λεγέτωσαν, "who must peremptorily say."

³¹⁶ κατέβαινε αὐτὶς παρατεόμενος, “he ended by again imploring.” So below, § 116, κατέβαινε ἐς λιτάς τε καὶ συγ-νώμην ἑωυτῷ κελεύων ἔχειν αὐτόν, “he ended by resorting to supplications and urging indulgence towards himself;” § 118, κατέβαινε λέγων κ.τ.λ., “he ended by saying,” &c. &c. The idiom seems derived from the practice of the agora, where the speaker on ending his speech “got down” from the bema.

³¹⁷ τούτῳ. This reading is sanctioned by the majority of MSS. Gaisford adopts τούτων on very slender authority.

³¹⁸ εἰ ἀχαρίστοις νόμος εἶναι τοῖσι Ἑλληνικοῖσι θεοῖσι: For εἶναι one MS has εἴη and another ἐστὶ,—corruptions which are due to an ignorance of the construction. This would be in full εἰ νόμος [ἐστὶ] τ. Ἑλλ. θ. εἶναι ἀχαρίστοις.

³¹⁹ πέμπτον γονέος. Croesus was fifth from Gyges, reckoning, after the manner of the Greeks, both extremes. His fall fulfilled the Delphic oracle (see above, § 13), of which no note was taken until the fulfilment.

³²⁰ ἐπισπόμενος. The majority of MSS have ἐπισπόμενος. But some have the reading in the text, which is well defended by Odyss. iii. 215:

ἐπισπόμενοι θεοῦ ὀμφῇ,

and by SOPHOCLES (Electr. 967):

ἀλλ’ ἦν ἐπίσκη τοῖς ἐμοῖς βουλευμασιν.

Other offerings of Cræsus to Hellenic temples.

³²¹ τὰ εἶπε. The two manuscripts S and V omit these words.

³²² συνέβαλε. This, which is the reading of almost all the MSS, is altered by Gaisford after others into συνέλαβε. But the sense is not improved by the change. The argument of Apollo is, that the oracle about "the mule" would have helped Cræsus to understand the former one, but that he failed to put it together with that former one,—a sense for which συνέβαλε is requisite. The form συνεβόλετο is used (vi. 107) of Hippias in his interpretation of his own dream.

³²⁴ τῷ Ἀπόλλωνι τῷ Ἰσμηνίῳ. In this temple too were to be seen the golden shield and spear which Cræsus had sent as an offering to Amphiaræus (above, § 52), and three tripods, upon which inscriptions in Cadmean letters, very nearly resembling the Ionic character, were found. (See notes on v. 59.) The former of these two passages does not exist in S and V, the latter does. MÜLLER (in Bættiger's Amalthea, i. p. 129) considers it quite certain that this temple was a colony from that at Delphi.

³²⁵ αἱ τε βόες αἱ χρύσαι καὶ τῶν κίωνων αἱ πολλαί. This expression (by the use of the articles αἱ βόες and τῶν κίωνων) shows that Herodotus addresses himself to persons to whom these objects were well known, at least by reputation. This would be the case with most; for Ephesus was the port at which all travellers from the East by the great road connecting Susa and Sardis would embark for Europe. (See v. 54, and Act. Apost. xix. 1.) Of course no one having the opportunity would omit to visit a temple which was one of the wonders of the world, and thus the details of it would become matter of notoriety all over Hellas. Herodotus puts it together with the temple of Here at Samos (ii. 148). There can be little doubt that he visited it himself; for, although this does not necessarily follow from the words ἔτι ἐς ἐμὲ ἦν περιέοντα, yet his description of the alluvial character of the neighbourhood of Ephesus is quite that of an eye-witness (ii. 10); and the incident of the dedication of the city to Artemis in the war with Croesus (i. 26) is undoubtedly a temple-tradition, either Delphic or Ephesian.

³²⁷ Προνηὶς τῇς ἐν Δελφοῖσι. This, although not the reading of all the MSS (some of which have Προνηὶς τοῖς ἐν Δ.), seems certainly to be the true one. Æschylus (Eumen. 21) makes the priestess at Delphi, in her enumeration of the local deities, invoke Athene under this title, Παλλὰς προναία δ' ἐν λόγῳ προσβέταται, where there is no variation in the MSS. The only difficulty arises from the apparent strangeness of describing the goddess, when first mentioning her, by a mere local epithet. But this seems susceptible of an explanation. Herodotus had just mentioned the temple of the Ismenian Apollo. Now in this there was an Athene προναία (PAUSANIAS, ix. 10. 2), the recollection of whom would at once be suggested by the mention of it. Accordingly, just as if he had actually spoken of the goddess (compare viii. 37), the author goes on to speak of the same similarly located, only at Delphi.

³²⁷ τὰ τῶν ἀναθημάτων. These words as they stand are undoubtedly corrupt, and Schweighäuser considers them a gloss. Schaefer and Gaisford omit τὰ, but this seems an arbitrary proceeding. The next sentence, too, as it stands, has no verb. I should be almost disposed to suspect the text originally ran thus: ταῦτα μὲν καὶ ἔτι ἐς ἐμὲ ἦν περιέοντα τῶν ἀναθημάτων, τὰ δὲ ἐξαπόλωλε· ταῦτα δ' ἐν Βραγχιδρσι τῇσι Μιλησίων ἀναθήματα Κρ. κ.τ.λ. The offerings in the temple were given up by the priests to Xerxes, who burnt the temple afterwards, and hence Herodotus could only speak of them by hearsay (STRABO, x. chap. i. p. 165). With regard to the gender of Βραγχιδρσι, see note on § 158.

³²⁸ ἐπὶ κνάφου ἔλκων, "by drawing him over a rack" (set with points like a fuller's comb). The engine is described by SUIDAS as ὄργανόν τι ἐν κύκλῳ κέντρα ἔχον, δι' οὗ τοὺς βασανιζομένους κτείνουσι. Perhaps it is substantially the same with the "harrows of iron" mentioned 2 Sam. xii. 31.

ἐν δὲ ἔργον πολλὸν μέγιστον παρέχεται, χωρὶς τῶν τε Αἰγυπτίων ἔργων καὶ τῶν Βαβυλωνίων. ἔστι αὐτόθι Ἀλυάττω τοῦ Κραίσου πατρὸς σήμα, τοῦ ἡ κρηπὶς μὲν ἔστι λίθων μεγάλων τὸ δὲ ἄλλο σήμα χῶμα γῆς. ἐξεργάσαντο δὲ μιν οἱ ἀγοραῖοι ἄνθρωποι, καὶ οἱ ^{Legend of its origin.} χειρῶνακτες, καὶ αἱ ἐνεργαζόμεναι παιδίσκαι· οὖροι δὲ, πέντε ἔοντες, ἔτι καὶ ἐς ἐμὲ ἦσαν ἐπὶ τοῦ σήματος ἄνω καὶ σφι γράμματα ἐνεκεκόλαπτο ³²⁹, τὰ ἕκαστοι ἐξεργάσαντο· καὶ ἐφάνετο μετρεόμενον τὸ τῶν παιδισκῶν ἔργον ἓν μέγιστον. τοῦ γὰρ δὴ Λυδῶν δήμου αἱ θυγατέρες πορνεύονται πᾶσαι ³³⁰ συλλέγουσαι σφίσι φερνὰς, ἐς δ' ἂν συνοικήσωσι τοῦτο ποικεύουσαι· ἐκδιδῶσαι δὲ αὐταὶ ἑωντάς. ἡ μὲν δὴ περίοδος τοῦ σήματος εἰς στάδια ^{Its dimensions.} ἕξ καὶ δύο πλέθρα· τὸ δὲ εὐρὸς ἔστι πλέθρα τριακαίδεκα. λίμνη δὲ ἔχεται τοῦ σήματος ³³¹ μεγάλην, τὴν λέγουσι Λυδοὶ ^{Gygean lake.}

³²⁹ καὶ σφὶ γράμματα ἐνεκεκόλαπτο. Before forming any theories relative to the existence of letters at a particular epoch from this passage, it is requisite to be certain that here the author is speaking of what he saw close and was able to interpret. But both here and in a similar case this is doubtful. See note 331 and on ii. 106. And at any rate a different legend respecting the origin of the tamulus existed; for CLAUDIUS, a scholar of Aristotle's, in his Erotica, related that the monument (which in his time went by the name of τῆς ἑταίρας μνήμα) was built by Gyges (who for the purpose impressed the whole force of the country) in honour of a deceased concubine of his. If the Sardin deity Cybele was, as seems probable (see note on v. 102), a mere variety of the Syrian goddess described by Lucian, it is probable that this tamulus was connected with her ritual, and was constructed in times earlier than those of which any distinct record remained in the time of Herodotus. If so, there would be a very good reason both for the variation of details in the stories which accounted for its existence, and for the retention, in each one, of a reference to the peculiar character of the goddess. See the story of Cheops's daughter related by the author, ii. 126.

³³⁰ πορνεύονται πᾶσαι. STRABO (xi. cap. 14 ult.) relates exactly the same practice of the Armenians, where it obviously was a Mylitta-worship which gave rise to the proceeding, and the most illustrious persons in the country dedicated their daughters. In the time of Herodotus Hellenic civilization had done much for Asia Minor; and probably only the ἄλγος, the representatives of the old race, retained the characteristics of the Cybele-worship, as it was first brought to Sardis. See note on v. 102.

³³¹ λίμνη δὲ ἔχεται τοῦ σήματος. STRABO describes the topography rather differently. He says this lake is forty stadia from the city, that it was called Γυνία by Homer, but subsequently Κολή; and that a temple of Artemis Coloëne is there, and the tombs of the kings surround the lake. Then he says, πρὸς δὲ ταῖς Σάρδεσιν ἔστι τὸ τοῦ Ἀλυάττου ἐπὶ κρηπιδὸς ὀψιλής χῶμα μέγα (xiii. c. 4, p. 152). He is here probably following Demetrius of Scepsis, who was familiar with the locality. It is rather remarkable that Herodotus should not mention the tombs of the kings about the lake; but this may be explained on the hypothesis that he (or his informant) merely passed through Sardis, and just saw the mound and the lake from a distance. "Adjoining [the tumulus of Halyattes] among the hills, in a situation invisible from below, are countless tumuli, the forms of which are still quite perfect. The Turks call them Bin-bir Teppi, or 'the Thousand and One Hills.'" (FALKNER, Museum of Classical Antiquities, Art. xv.) See also note 329. Strabo says that according to some accounts the lake was an artificial reservoir to prevent mischief from the floods of the river.

³³² καλέεται δὲ αὕτη Γυγαίη. The lake is mentioned by this name in the Iliad: xx. 392 (cited in note 277, above). The Villosion scholiast on that passage seems to show that the text of Herodotus hereabouts must have suffered some change. κῆμη ἐστὶ Λυδίας Ἀλαδα, ἐνθα φησὶν Ἡρόδοτος βωμὸν Ἰφίτιονος καὶ ἑταῖμα λίθινον κολοσσικὸν ἡκρωτηριασμένον ἀρχαίᾳ τύπῃ ἐργασμένον· καὶ τοὺς περὶ τὴν λιμνὴν καλάμους συνδονεῖσθαι ἐλιθίδιαις. See note 323.

³³⁴ πρῶτοι δὲ καὶ κάπηλοι ἐγένοντο. The general merchant resident in an entrepôt of traffic would be a κάπηλος, as opposed to an ἐμπορος or trader who brought the wares he sold from a distance. Sardis was an entrepôt for Hellenic and Asiatic traffic. The wool produced in Phrygia (πολυκροβατωτάτη, v. 49) was brought there to be dyed (PLINY, N. H. vii. 47), and the purple dye produced from the κοχλίαι, taken at Límna, a spot on the southern coast of the Propontis, which was the best in the world (STRABO, xiii. c. 1), found its way thither by water-carriage. It was likewise a mart for the precious metals. The Spartans sent thither to purchase some gold (i. 69), probably ingots formed from the grains brought down in the sand of the Pactolus. SOPHOCLES, too, speaks of the electrum which came from Sardis (Antig. 1037: cited in note 154, above). The anecdotes told by Herodotus of Periander (iii. 48) and of Hermotimus (viii. 105) show that Sardis was also a great slave-market. It would also lie conveniently for shipping the dyed goods of the Phrygian Hierapolis, the waters of which possessed such remarkable qualities as to enable the vegetable dyes of that place to compete with the marine productions of Tyre or of the Propontis (STRABO, xiii. c. 4). Under such circumstances a standard of value would in very early times be necessary; and hence minted coins would very soon appear. It does not, however, necessarily follow from what Herodotus says that the Lydian sovereigns coined on their own account, and there are some reasons to believe that they did not. See note on iv. 166.

³³⁵ τούτων γὰρ ὦν. The MSS S, V, b, d omit what follows until the words δομασθῆναι Τυρσηνίδος, nearly at the end of the chapter.

 i. 28), by quoting the substance of this account, shows that he used a copy in which this paragraph appeared. That the tradition is a genuine Sardian one is plain from the pleadings of the authorities of the city before the Roman senate in the time of Tiberius (TACITUS, Annal. iv. 55).
 Its historical accuracy is quite a different question. XANTHUS, the historian, did not mention it. HORACE uses it for the purpose of a compliment to Mæcenas (Sat. i. vi. 1):

"Non quia, Mæcenas, Lydorum quidquid Incoluit fines, nemo generosior est te;"

and VIRGIL, for whom a recondite tradition always had attractions, speaks of the "Lydius Tybris" (Æn. ii. 782); but these allusions imply no real belief in the legend on which they are based. The substantial truth which lies at the bottom of the story seems to be the affinity between the Etruscan and the early Lydian racés, as being two swarms of the same tribe whose tutelary deity was worshipped with orgiastic and impure rites. This affinity is expressed by making the eponyms of the two nations children of a common ancestor, who himself is the hierophant of the goddess. (See note on

 v. 102.) The ancestors of the Etruscans probably passed by Lampsacus and the Hellespont into Thrace, where Atys became Otys or Cotys, and the goddess Cotytto (ÆSCHYLUS, Fragment 54, ed.
 Dindorf), and thence descended into the north of Italy in course of time. Those of the Lydians on the other hand spread through Phrygia into the valleys of the Mæander, Hermus, and Cayster. When we get to the historical times, Herodotus distinctly asserts that the Pho- cæans were the discoverers of Tyrrhenia

³²³ ὡς ἂν Περσέων μεταξέτεροι λέγουσι. It must not be assumed from this expression that Herodotus derived his account of Cyrus from Persian sources direct. He may very well have heard the story he adopts (as well as the other three he knows) from merchant-travellers at Phasis; and these may have reported it (with more or less authority for so doing) as derived from Persian traditions. Herodotus criticizes it with reference to its likelihood rather than the external evidence on which it rests. See notes on § 189, and on ii. 43, τὸ οὐνομα τοῦ Ἡρακλέους.

³²⁶ ἐπ' ἕτεα εἴκοσι καὶ πεντακόσια. This is an interval of time as long as that from the death of Edward I. to that of George IV., as that from the establishment of the republic to the consolidation of the empire of Rome, or that from the very first dawn of traditional history in Hellas to its absorption by Rome. Yet all that Herodotus says of this time is, that during it the Assyrians were dominant in Upper Asia. Surely there is here very strong evidence of the absence of any thing like authentic records of the period accessible to the author; and, if so, it is hazardous to attempt to reconcile, by arbitrary hypotheses, his chronology with the entirely distinct traditions of Cressus and others. The Assyrians spoken of had Nineveh for the seat of their empire. See § 102, below.

³⁴³ προκατίζειν ἐδίκασε. An expression derived from the simple usage of early times, when the judgment-seat was a stone in front of the dwelling of the sovereign. See Exodus xviii. 13; 2 Samuel xix. 8.

³⁴⁴ περὶ τῶν κατηκόντων, “about the actual state of things.” τὰ καθήκοντα are those matters which touch a person, as contradistinguished from those which being at a distance do not affect him. The fundamental idea appears in the technical use of the word in the Stoic philosophy, where τὸ καθήκον is equivalent to the Latin officium, that which stands in an immediate relation with man as a moral agent.

³⁴⁵ τὸν τινα. This is the reading in Gaisford. If correct, it is equivalent to ἄνθρωπος, which is found in some copies. But perhaps the true reading is, τὸ τίνα στήσονται β., “on proposing the question, whom were they to make king?”

³⁴⁶ ἦν πολλὸς ὑπὸ παντὸς ἀνδρὸς καὶ προβαλλόμενος καὶ αἰνεόμενος, “was zealously by every one both proposed and lauded.” See vii. 158, πολλὸς ἐνέκειτο, “zealously urged;” ix. 91, ὡς δὲ πολλὸς ἦν λισσόμενος, “as he was pressing in his solicitation.”

He causes them to build Agbatana, surrounding it with seven ramparts.

Its magnitude.

³⁴⁷ καὶ τοῦτο περιστέλλοντας, "and bestowing their pains on securing this." Compare ἰσχυρῶς περιστέλλοντες, ii. 147; τὸν νόμον περιστέλλοντες, iii. 31.

³⁴⁸ ταῦτα τὰ νῦν Ἀγβάτανα κέκληται. It does not appear from this expression that this was the original name of the town or fortress. RAWLINSON (London Geographical Journal, vol. x.) conjectures that the name signified "a place of strength for treasures." Its meaning appears from the form Akmetha (the Chaldaic form for Agbatana, where m takes the place of b or p, as in μεμβρὰς for βεμβρὰς, δμμα for the Æolic δμμα, μετὰ for the Æolic πεδὰ, μόρος for a form βόρος, which has left a trace of itself in the word βροτός). This word Akmetha is derived by Hebraists from a root signifying "to collect together;" so that the word seems equivalent to συνοικία, a most appropriate name for a city formed as Athens was by Theseus, or Megalopolis by Epaminondas, by a centralization of strength. The modern form of the word is said to be Ahmethán in Syrian, and Hamadán in Persian; but it does not follow (especially if the meaning of the word be what we have supposed) that the modern Hamadán is the Agbatana of Herodotus's Deiocees. It probably is that of POLYBIUS (i. 27), who describes the citadel as an artificial elevation.

³⁴⁹ κατὰ τὸν Ἀθηνέων κύκλον. It has been inferred, most gratuitously, from these words and the minute description of the walls, that Herodotus had visited Agbatana. But the vagueness of its site and dimensions should have guarded against this conclusion. Rawlinson fixes it not at Hamadán, but at Takti-Soleimán, where there is a very striking hill rising to 150 feet above the plain, still fortified, and about three quarters of a mile in circuit. This is sufficiently near to the acropolis at Athens to allow of comparison in a caravanserai story, but the circuit of the Agbatana of DIODORUS (xvii. f.), 250 stadia, cannot be brought into agreement either with the whole of Athens within fortifications, which was, in the time of Thucydides, 174½ stadia (LEAKE, p. 273), or with the circuit of the ἀκρον, which was forty-three. But the mere hill of the citadel would be much less, only this precinct would be inaccurately described by the word κύκλος.

* ³³¹ ὁ δὲ κατακεχρυσωμένους. RAWLINSON remarks that the seven colours mentioned by Herodotus are those employed by the Orientals to denote the seven planetary bodies. He quotes a poet (Nisáms) who describes a palace of seven colours like those of Herodotus. In this the palace dedicated to Saturn was black; that to Jupiter, orange (sandal-wood colour); that to Mars, scarlet; that to the Sun, golden; that to Venus, white; that to Mercury, azure; and that to the Moon, green (which the Orientals regard as the hue of silver). These circumstances would induce one to regard the story in Herodotus as proceeding originally from Chaldean sources. But it does not seem easy to suit the order of the walls in the narrative to that of the heavenly bodies in the disposition of their orbits, according to Chaldean or Egyptian notions,—or to discover any principle in the deviation from that order. If, indeed, we suppose that by an inadvertence (from whatever source arising) the colours of the first and second ramparts, and those of the third and fifth, have been interchanged in the description, we shall get an order corresponding with that of the deities presiding over the days of the week. See note 349.

³³² ταῦτα μὲν δὴ ὁ Δηϊόκης ἐνωτῷ τε ἐτέλχεε. DIODORUS, who professes to give a careful comparison of the diverse statements of Herodotus and Ctesias relative to the overthrow of the Assyrian supremacy by the Medes, relates, on the alleged authority of Herodotus, that after this event took place no attempt to gain the supremacy was made for many generations, but that, at last, after many years had passed by, ἀπεθῆναι βασιλέα παρὰ τοῖς Μήδοις ἐνθρα δικαισόνην

διάφορον, βρομα Κυαξάρην (ii. 32). This is taken by Wesseling and others as a slip of memory on the part of Diodorus; and such is not an improbable solution of the difficulty. But the emphasis which Diodorus lays upon the length of time during which the isonomy existed contrasts strongly with the entire absence of any such statement in Herodotus, as the text exists at present; and it seems also not improbable that the MSS. to which Diodorus had access varied in this respect. (See note on § 180, τριπόρων.) If so, it is very possible that in them a Cyaxares, and not Deiocea, was represented as the founder of the Median monarchy. (See above, note 332.) It is to be remarked that in the Armenian traditions, as represented by MOSÉS of Chorene, five Median sovereigns are interposed between the overthrow of the effeminate Chonus Concoelus (= Sardanapalus) and the reign of Deiocea.

³³⁴ ἀντίον καὶ ἅπασιν εἶναι τούτῳ γε αἰσχρόν. The words καὶ ἅπασιν are to be taken both with ἀντίον and with αἰσχρόν. Herodotus represents it as an institution of Deiocea, that to laugh or to spit, not only in the presence of the sovereign, but of any person whatever, should be a breach of decorum, and held so not only by courtiers, but by all persons whatever. XENOPHON (Cyropædia, i. 2. 16) speaks of a similar decorum prevailing among the Persians, and brings it forward as an evidence of the dedicating effect of their corporal training that such a custom should have become possible. See below, § 133.

³³⁶ Δηϊόκης μὲν νυν. S, V, b, d here resume the thread of the narrative. See note 340.

³³⁷ Παρητακηνοί. The manuscripts S and V have Παρηκοντακηνοί. It has been conjectured that these people are the same with the Paricani mentioned in iii. 94. But there is nothing to shew whether the γένηα here are local tribes, or castes, or houses in the Hellenic sense. The vagueness of Herodotus's information appears from his statement (vii. 62) that the Medes were anciently called Ἀριοι (a word which is interpreted by orientalists as equivalent to 'worshipful'), and that the name Μῆδοι came from Medea. STRABO's indefiniteness in laying down a boundary for Ariana (xv. c. 2), perhaps comes from a similar mistake of a personal attribute for a gentile name, in some of his predecessors.

³³⁸ Φραόρτης. This name appears, according to RAWLINSON, on ancient inscriptions in the arrow-headed character. Its genuine form is Fráurtiāh. It is to be observed that the father of Deioces was named Phraortes, which accords with the Hellenic fashion to name the grandson after the grandfather. See above, § 96.

* οὐκ ἀπεχρέετο, "was not contented." See above, note 126.

He reigns fifty-three years over the Medes alone. His son Phraortes conquers the Persians, and with their aid other nations of Asia. He is slain in a fruitless attack on Nineveh, after reigning twenty-two years.

³⁵⁰ Κυαζάρης. RAWLINSON says that this name is a compound of the Persian Kei (a royal epithet applied to the early kings of Persia), and Arares. This last is the Hellenic form of the name Khsyarsa, with the definite article Al prefixed. Without this prefix the name is equivalent to the Hellenic Xerxes; with it, to Arares, Assuerus, or Ahasuerus.

³⁵¹ ὅτε νύξῃ ἡ ἡμέρῃ ἐγένετο. See above, § 74, note 254. This sentence connects the Median list of kings with the Lydian traditions.

³⁵³ συλλέξας δὲ τοὺς ὑπ' ἑωυτῷ κ.τ.λ. The manuscripts S, V, δ, d omit from these words inclusive to nearly the end of § 106. See note 374.

³⁵⁴ ἐκ δὲ τῆς Κολχίδος οὐ πολλὸν ὑπερβῆναι ἐς τὴν Μηδικὴν. Herodotus, or at any rate an individual with whom he identifies himself, was himself among the Colchians on the Phasis (see ii. 104), and doubtless got this information from the merchants there. The town at the mouth of the river was a great emporium; flax, hemp, wax, and pitch being exported from thence, and also manufactured linen. It was only two or three days' sail from Sinope and Amisus. The river was navigable up to a place called Σαραπανῶν ἔρυμα, from whence there was a road by which, in four days, loaded wagons reached the river Cyrus (the modern Kuru or Koura) (STRABO, xi. c. 2). If in the time of Herodotus the eastern traffic which passed this way was carried on in Median bottoms through the Caspian Sea and along the Cyrus (a route which ARISTOBULUS, op. Strab. xi. c. 7, p. 427, asserted that it did take), the statement which he gives above would be commercially, although not geographically, correct. The travelling merchant would have to pass no frontiers except those of the Saspire, which one will probably be right in considering to be some portion of the tribes inhabiting the mountain ribs which branch from the southern side of the main Caucasian range, possibly that district which Strabo calls Iberia. No difficulty will be presented either by this passage or the one in iv. 37, if we consider Herodotus as merely speaking on the authority of a Phasian mercantile itinerary. See notes on iv. 40 and iv. 86, and the last note on vi. 9.

The Scythians beat the Medes and overrun Asia.

They proceed towards Egypt, and are bribed off by king Psammithicus.

³⁶⁴ οὐ μέντοι οἱ γε Σκύθαι ταύτην ἐσέβαλον. Here (I conceive) is a union of two different traditions. The Scythians known to the merchants of Herodotus's time, and who attacked the Cimmerians, are the inhabitants of the plains to the north of the Black Sea and Sea of Azof; whereas the invaders of the Median story are nomads from Independent Tartary, and the east of the Caspian,—the two being distinct swarms of the same race, whose home is to be looked for in the steppes of central Asia. (See note on iv. 11.) A glance at the map shows the difficulty of the route here assigned to the former. The road along the western coast of the Caspian would oblige them to cross a vast number of rivers, among them the Cyrus itself. But from the nature of the country it is likely that a nomad tribe, immediately on passing the eastern spur of the Caucasus, would have spread up the valley of the Cyrus, where they would find abundance of pasture for their herds,—i. e. would have turned towards the Saspire, instead of pursuing the track along the sandy coast, where they would find no food, till they reached Media. See note on iv. 12.

³⁶⁵ τὴν κατύπερθε ὁδόν. The road attributed to the invaders would, in every sense of the word, have been a lower one than the track which an unencumbered traveller would take. But it would be farther from the coast of the Euxine, and therefore would be described in these terms by a Phasian merchant, ignorant of its particular character. See first note on iv. 40.

³⁶⁶ ἐν Ἀσκάλωνι πόλει. Ascalon, Azotus (Ashdod), Ekron, Gaza, and Gitta (Gath), are the five confederate states of the Philistines mentioned Josh. xiii. 3; 1 Sam. vi. 17. The name under which Aphrodite was worshipped at Ascalon appears to have been originally Derceto, a female form of Dagon, who was the tutelary deity of Azotus. These two deities stood to one another in the same relation as Janus (Dianus) and Diana, Mithras and Mitra, Hecatus and Hecate, Comabubus and Cybebe. (See note on v. 102.) They were symbolized by a figure half-human half-piscine. The legend followed by Ctesias (ap. Diodor. Sic. ii. 8) makes Derceto a priestess of Aphrodite, changed into a fish, just as the Arcadian legend made Callisto an attendant on Artemis, changed into a bear, and the Pylian legend Menthe a concubine of Hades, changed into the plant mint (STRABO, viii. p. 156). Semiramis is in the same tradition made the daughter of Derceto, and changed into a dove. But the dove and the fish, the one from its salaciousness, the other from its enormous power of reproduction, were appropriate symbols of the particular characteristic assigned to Aphrodite, and no doubt originally represented Aer. It

On their homeward march some sack the temple of Aphrodite at Ascalon, and bring a curse on their descendants.

After twenty-eight years' tenure of Asia, they are crushed by Cyaxares, who re-then became the function of a poetic mythology to frame narratives accounting for the symbols. (See note 164, above.) Atargatis, the name which STRABO (xvi. c. 1, p. 351) gives to the Syrian goddess at Hierapolis, is etymologically identical with Dereto.

³⁶⁷ καὶ τὸ ἐν Κυθήροισι. HERODOTUS (Theog. 192) makes Cythera the first place touched by Aphrodite after her birth from the foam of the sea, and sends her thence to Cyprus. Τὸ ἐν Κύπρῳ ἱρόν is doubtless the temple at Paphos: but it must not be assumed that Herodotus was necessarily there, because he quotes the assertion of the Cyprians, that the ritual came thither from Ascalon. It is a curious circumstance that the figure of the goddess at Paphos was a stone of the shape of a sugar-loaf (TACITUS, Hist. ii. 3), like the ὀμφαλὸς at Delphi, a simplicity which bespeaks very high antiquity. The stone at Delphi probably belonged to the ritual of the πρωτόμαντις γαῖα (ÆSCH. Eumenid. 2).

³⁶⁸ τοὺς καλέουσι Ἐναρέας οἱ Σκύθαι. Here there seems to be a reference to some Scythian word, perhaps one etymologically equivalent to the Latin venerens. This to Hellenic ears might sound as if connected with the words ἐν ἁρᾷ, just as the oblique cases of Μαλλέις reminded the Romans of male ventum, and induced them to change the name to Beneventum, for the sake of the omen. From this circumstance, I should infer that the story in its existing form is possibly due to Greek merchants, whose transactions both took them to Egypt, and brought them into contact with the Scythians on the shores of the Euxine. HIPPOCRATES says that the sufferers are called ἀνάνδρις, which seems to be another misapprehension, aided by the apparent symptoms of the disease, of the same word. He also says that they attribute their sufferings to the anger of Aphrodite—as might naturally be expected—but makes no reference to any special offence. See the citation in note on iv. 67.

³⁶⁹ γὰρ. The MSS and Gaisford have παρ.

³⁷⁰ τὸ ἐκάστοισι ἐπιβάλλον, "the sum which each was rated to pay." See iv. 115, ἀπολαύοντες τῶν κτημάτων τὸ ἐπιβάλλον: vii. 23, ὅσον αὐτοῖσι ἐπέβαλλε. The MSS have ἐπέβαλλον, which Gaisford retains.

³⁷¹ χωρὶς δὲ τοῦ φόρου. These words appear to Dobree to be an alternative reading to χωρὶς μὲν γὰρ φόρων, and to have passed from the margin into the text. He would retain παρ in the last line and erase the words ἥρπαζον . . . ἕκαστοι. But the slight alteration I have adopted shows the distinction between the tribute imposed by the authorities and the arbitrary exactions of individual plunderers.

³⁷² καταμεθύσαντες. This feature in the legend points to the well-known in-covers his power and takes Nini-veh, subduing all Assyria except Babylon.

After reigning forty years he is succeeded by his son Astyages, whose daughter Mandane marries Cambyzes, son of Cyrus, a Persian, in consequence of a dream of her father's.

A second dream alarms him yet more, and he determines to kill her temperance which characterized the nomad races of Asia, and continued among their descendants, so that "Threicia amystis" was a proverbial expression in the time of Horace. For the probable basis on which this particular story rests, see note on § 211.

³⁷⁵ ἐν ἐτέροισι λόγοισι δηλώσω. See note on i. 184.

³⁷⁶ Κναζάρης μὲν. The manuscripts S, V, b, d here resume the thread of the narrative, having omitted the episode relative to the Scythian invasion. See note 362. They omit too the words σὺν τοῖσι Σκύθαι ἤρξαν.

³⁷⁷ Κναξίρεω παῖς. Some of the MSS which Gaisford follows prefix δ.

³⁷⁸ If the Median and the Lydian history belong to the same cycle of traditions, the mother of Mandane will have been Argenis, sister of Croesus. See § 74.

³⁷⁹ ἐδόκεε—ἐν τῷ ὕπνῳ. This vision of Astyages is said (by Tertullian, De animâ, § 46) to have been related by CHARON of Lampsacus, who wrote two books of Περσικά (SUIDAS, sub v.). See note 482.

³⁸⁰ ὑπερθέμενος. This is a conjectural reading (all the MSS having ὑποθέμενος), but is adopted by all the editors since Wesseling. And no doubt ὑπερθεσθαι is the common phrase that would be used, if what Astyages did was to recount his dream as it happened. But the words which follow (παρ' αὐτῶν αὐτὰ ἕκαστα μαθών) raise the suspicion that the transaction was one like that related in DANIEL (ii. 3, seqq.); and that, on the king merely stating that he had had a vision, the soothsayers supplied all the details. For this case the word ὑποθέμενος seems not inappropriate, and I should be inclined to replace it; as then the meaning of the author would be that Astyages told the fact of his fright to the magians, as a basis upon which to employ their art.

³⁷⁹ ὑπερθέμενος. Two MSS here have ὑποθέμενος. But ὑπερθέμενος is in this instance undoubtedly the true reading; for all that the soothsayers did was to interpret the meaning of the vision, not relate its particulars.

³⁸⁰ ἐπίτεκα. The nominative ἐπιτέξ occurs below, § 111.

³⁵¹ οἰκῆιον, not merely “an intimate friend,” but “one of the same house,” for, as appears from the next section, the child was a συγγενὴς to Harpagus.

³⁵² ἐξ ὑστέρης. The same expression is used in v. 106; vi. 85. The substantive understood is probably πλῆγῃς, the metaphor being taken apparently from the riposte made by a swordsman after parrying his enemy’s blow.

³⁵³ τε. Gaisford and the MSS δέ.

³⁵⁴ τὴν ἐπὶ θανάτῳ. Understand σπολήν, “with the garb of death upon it.” The description of the sumptuous nature of the child’s dress below is no objection to this interpretation. It was to be buried as a royal infant, and as such, according to Greek notions, would have been arrayed χρυσῷ τε καὶ ἐσθῇι ποικίλῃ. See below, §§ 111, 113. It would not occur to a Phasian merchant that gold, as the symbol of fire, would not by a Persian be used as an ornament for a corpse (STRABO, xv. c. 3, p. 328), although for the same reason it was the favourite ornament of the living. Compare note 308, above.

Translate “No; for my safety's sake, indeed.”

³⁸⁷ πρὸς βορέω τε ἀνέμου τῶν Ἀγβατάνων, “in a northerly direction from Agbatana.” See note 292.

It will be observed that the geographical bearings are the same as those in iv. 37 and § 104, above. The word Σπακὼ too is said not to be Median, but Hyrcanian, i.e. belonging to the country to the s. e. of the Caspian Sea, but n. of the Elbruz mountains.

³⁸⁸ πρὸς Σασπείρων. See note 363, above.

³⁸⁹ καὶ ὑψηλὴ τε . . . πᾶσα ἄπεδος. In the manuscripts S and V these words are omitted, and the next sentence goes on thus: σπουδῇ οὖν καλεόμενος ἀπύκετο καὶ ἔλεγε. So it does in the MS δ, but the preceding sentence is not left out.

³⁹⁰ τὸ μήτε ἰδεῖν ὄφελον μήτε κοτὴ γενέσθαι. It is observable here that the relative τὸ is to be taken as the accusative case in the first clause of the sentence, but as the nominative (with the ellipse of ὄφελε) in the second.

μήτε κοτὲ γενέσθαι ἐς δεσπότης τοὺς ἡμετέρους. οἶκος μὲν πᾶς Ἀρπάγου κλαυθμῷ κατείχετο, ἐγὼ δὲ ἐκπλαγεῖς ἦια ἔσω ὥς δὲ τάχιστα ἐσῆλθον, ὁρέω παιδίον προκειμένον, ἀσπαῖρόν τε καὶ κραυγανόμενον, κεκοσμημένον χρυσῷ τε καὶ ἐσθῇτι ποικίλῃ³⁹¹.

"Ἄμα δὲ ταῦτα ἔλεγε ὁ βουκόλος καὶ ἐκκαλύνφας ἀπεδείκνυε· ἡ δὲ 112 ὡς εἶδε τὸ παιδίον μέγα τε καὶ εὐεῖδὲς ἔδν, δακρύσασα καὶ λαβομένη τῶν γουνάτων τοῦ ἀνδρός, ἔχρηζε μηδεμιῇ τέχνῃ ἐκθεῖναι μιν ὁ δὲ οὐκ ἔφη οἷός τε εἶναι ἄλλως αὐτὰ ποιέειν· ἐπιφουιτήσειν γὰρ κατασκόπους ἐξ Ἀρπάγου ἐποψομένους· ἀπολέεσθαι τε κάκιστα ἦν μὴ σφεα ποιήσῃ· ὡς δὲ οὐκ ἔπειθε ἄρα τὸν ἄνδρα, δεύτερα λέγει ἡ γυνὴ τάδε· "ἐπεὶ τοίνυν οὐ δύναμαί σε πείθειν μὴ ἐκθεῖναι, σὺ δὲ ὥδε ποίησον, εἰ δὴ πᾶσά γε ἀνάγκη³⁹⁴ ὀφθῆναι ἐκκείμενον· τέτοκα γὰρ καὶ ἐγὼ, τέτοκα δὲ τεθνεὺς· τοῦτο μὲν φέρων πρόδες, τὸν δὲ τῆς Ἀστυάγεω³⁹⁵ θυγατρὸς παῖδα ὡς ἐξ ἡμέων ἔοντα τρέφωμεν· καὶ οὕτω οὔτε σὺ ἀλώσσαι ἀδικέων τοὺς δεσπότης, οὔτε ἡμῖν κακῶς βεβουλευμένα ἔσται· ὃ τε γὰρ τεθνεὺς βασιλεὺς

Cyno, the wife of Mitradates, persuades him to expose her own still-born child in the place of the living one, and to bring the latter up as his own.

³⁹¹ κεκοσμημένον χρυσῷ τε καὶ ἐσθῇτι ποικίλῃ. A similar phrase occurs in the description of the bridal dress of Apries's daughter (iii. 1).

³⁹² πρόκατε. The same form (instead of the ordinary πρόκα) is used in Herodotus below, vi. 134; viii. 65. 135.

³⁹³ Ἀστυάγεω. The MSS vary between this form and Ἀστυάγεος. Gaisford adopts the former, principally on the authority of S, although in the next section he selects the other form, under similar circumstances.

³⁹⁴ πᾶσά γε ἀνάγκη. Some of the best MSS leave out the particle γε, and thus the phrase appears in several other passages. ii. 22. 35; iv. 179; v. 52. But an additional force seems to be given by the insertion of the word to the inevitability of the necessity; and the other being the more usual expression is not likely to have been wilfully altered by a copyist.

³⁹⁵ Ἀστυάγεω. Gaisford with the majority of MSS has Ἀστυάγεος. See note 303.

- 113 ταφῆς κυρήσει, καὶ ὁ περιεὼν οὐκ ἀπολέει τὴν ψυχὴν." 114 At the age of ten years the child afterwards called Cyrus discovers himself by his conduct in play with his companions.

³⁹⁶ ἥϊε ἐς πόλιν. From this phrase, which recurs throughout the narrative, it would seem that, in the tradition which Herodotus is here following, the name of the royal city (Agbatana) did not appear, but that the mountainous region was represented in its immediate neighbourhood.

³⁹⁷ προβόσκων. This word, if not corrupt, would seem to mean "under-herdsmen." But it is a strange phrase. Possibly Herodotus wrote προβατοβόσκων, after the analogy of αἰγοβόσκων, which word itself is supposed by Valckenaer to have stood here. See note 454, below.

³⁹⁸ δορυφόρων. Harpagus is made below to call these messengers εἰνηνοχοί (§ 117) an expression much more in accordance with Asiatic usages. The δορυφόροι belong to the Greek notion of a prince.

³⁹⁹ οὐνομα ἄλλο κού τι καὶ οὐ Κῦρον. By this expression it would seem that the story followed by Herodotus did not give any particular name imposed upon the child by his foster-mother. In later times when the account came to be criticized with reference to its probability, he was positively said to have been called Agradates, and to have changed that name for Cyrus at Pasargade (STRABO, xv. c. 3, p. 320). But in Herodotus's narrative his grandfather's name is Cyrus, and according to Greek habits he would naturally be called by that same name. See note 358, above.

⁴⁰⁰ ὀφθαλμὸν βασιλέως. This is probably the literal rendering of the Persian phrase for the royal inspectors mentioned above, § 100. It was an expression become familiar to Hellenic ears at the beginning of the Peloponnesian war, and furnishes ARISTOPHANES with a jest in the Acharnians (v. 91), where a sham Persian envoy is introduced with a mask, of which the eyes are so gigantic as to suggest the notion of the painting on the cat-heads of a ship:

He flogs the child of a man of high rank, Artembares. πειθόμενον δὲ τῶν παιδίων, ὁ Κῦρος τὸν παῖδα τρηχέως κάρτα περιέσπε μαστιγέων ὁ δὲ, ἐπεὶ τε μετεῖθῃ τάχιστα, ὥς γε δὴ ἀνάξια ἐνυτοῦ παθὼν μᾶλλον τι περιημέκτεε, κατελθὼν δὲ ἐς πόλιν⁴⁰³ πρὸς τὸν πατέρα ἀποκτιζέτο τῶν ὑπὸ Κύρου ἤντησε, λέγων δὲ οὐ Κύρου, (οὐ γάρ κω ἦν τοῦτο τοῦνομα,) ἀλλὰ πρὸς τοῦ βουκόλου τοῦ Ἀστυάγεος παιδός· ὁ δὲ Ἀρτεμβάρης ὀργῇ, ὡς εἶχε, ἐλθὼν παρὰ τὸν Ἀστυάγεα καὶ ἅμα ἀγόμενος τὸν παῖδα, ἀνάρσια πρήγματα ἔφη πεπονθῆναι, λέγων “ὦ βασιλεῦ, ὑπὸ τοῦ σου δούλου βουκόλου δὲ παιδὸς ὧδε περιῦβρίσμεθα,” (δεικνὺς τοῦ παιδὸς τοὺς ὤμους.) Ἀκούσας δὲ καὶ ἰδὼν ὁ Ἀστυάγης, θέλων τιμωρῆσαι τῇ παιδί τιμῇ τῆς Ἀρτεμβάρεος εἵνεκα, μετεπέμπετο τὸν τε βουκόλου καὶ τὸν παῖδα· ἐπεὶ τε δὲ παρήσαν ἀμφοτέροι, βλέψας πρὸς τὸν Κῦρον ὁ Ἀστυάγης ἔφη “σὺ δὴ ἐὼν τοῦδε τοιοῦτου ἔντος παῖς, ἐτόλμησας τὸν τοῦδε παῖδα ἔντος πρώτου παρ’ ἐμοὶ ἀεκέειν⁴⁰⁴ τοιγδε περισπεῖν;” ὁ δὲ ἀμαίβετο ὧδε “ὦ δέ- His bold bearing when brought before Astyages causes him to be recognized. σποτα, ἐγὼ δὲ ταῦτα τοῦτον ἐποίησα σὺν δίκῃ· οἱ γὰρ με ἐκ τῆς κόμης παῖδες, τῶν καὶ ὧδε ἦν, παίζοντες σφέων αὐτῶν ἐσθήσαντο βασιλέα· ἐδόκεον γὰρ σφί εἶναι ἐς τοῦτο ἐπιτηδεώ- τατος. οἱ μὲν νυν ἄλλοι παῖδες τὰ ἐπιτασσόμενα ἐπετέλουν, οὗτος δὲ ἀνηκούστες τε καὶ λόγον εἶχε οὐδένα, ἐς ὃ ἔλαβε τὴν δίκην· εἰ ὦν δὴ τοῦδε εἵνεκα ἀξίός τευ κακοῦ εἰμὶ, ὧδε τοι πάρεμι.” Ταῦτα λέγοντος τοῦ παιδός, τὸν Ἀστυάγεα ἐσθῆι

In Æschylus (Persæ, 380), the chorus, speaking to Xerxes of one of the slain, call him τὸν σὺν πιστὸν πάντ’ ὀφθαλμῶν, μυρία, μυρία πεμπαστάν.

⁴⁰¹ τὰς ἀγγελίας ἐσφέρειν. This office (ἀσγγελεῖν) was a servile one, although in a despotic government that would be compatible with high honour. It appears to have been filled by eunuchs (iii. 77).

⁴⁰² διαλαβεῖν, “to secure him,” i. e. by some seizing hold of each arm, and others of each leg, so as, in a manner, to separate him. See iv. 68, and iv. 94. So the term διαλεημῆτος is applied by Aristo- phanes (Eccles. 1090) to a young man whom two old women are dragging in different directions. The use of the word below, § 190, is easily referable to the original notion of διαλαβεῖν.

⁴⁰³ κατελθὼν δὲ ἐς πόλιν. See above, note 396.

⁴⁰⁴ ἀεκέειν, Gaisford reads ἀεκέειν, but the text is sanctioned by the majority of the MSS, and this form is the only one given in i. 73, which falls however in a part where S is deficient. See note on iii. 160, ἀεκέειν.

Harpagus, being summoned, relates what he did.

Ἀστυάγης δὲ, τοῦ μὲν βουκόλου τὴν ἀληθείην ἐκφώναντος, λόγον ἤδη καὶ ἐλάσσω ἐποιέετο· Ἀρπῶγ δὲ καὶ μεγάλως μεμφόμενος, καλέειν αὐτὸν τοὺς δορυφόρους ἐκέλευε. ὡς δὲ οἱ παρὴν ὁ Ἀρπαγος, εἶρετό μιν ὁ Ἀστυάγης· “Ἀρπαγε, τέφ δὴ μόρῳ⁴¹⁰ τὸν παῖδα κατεχρήσαο τὸν τοι παρέδωκα ἐκ θυγατρὸς γεγονότα τῆς ἐμῆς;” ὁ δὲ Ἀρπαγος ὡς εἶδε τὸν βουκόλον ἔνδον ἔοντα, οὐ τρέπεται ἐπὶ ψευδέα ὁδὸν, ἵνα μὴ ἐλεγχόμενος ἀλίσκηται· ἀλλὰ

⁴⁰⁵ ἐς ἑαυτόν. This is the reading of Gaisford and some of the MSS. But others have ἐς αὐτόν, and, if either of these has been changed by a transcriber into the other, this appears to have the best claim to be original. αὐτόν must refer to the parents of Cyrus, Cambyses and Mandane, who have not been mentioned in this part of the narrative as it stands: there is therefore no inducement for adopting the reading which would influence a copyist, but there is for changing it into ἑαυτόν.

⁴⁰⁶ μουνωθέντα δὴ. The MSS vary between μουνωθέντα δὲ, μουνωθέντα δὲ τῷδε, μουνωθέντα τῷδε and μόνονθεν τῷδε, which last Gaisford adopts, punctuating μῦνος μόνονθεν, τῷδε. But μῦνος μόνονθεν can hardly mean “alone face to face,” and either the reading in the text (which is the conjecture of Valcknaer), or μουνωθέντα τῷδε, seems the most probable correction.

⁴⁰⁷ τοῖσι δορυφόροις. See note 398.

⁴⁰⁸ ἀρχόμενος δὴ. This is the reading of the manuscript S. Gaisford and others have ἀρχόμενος δὴ. But this particle would be out of place here. See note 6, above.

⁴⁰⁹ κατέβαινε. See note 316.

⁴¹⁰ τέφ δὴ μόρῳ τὸν παῖδα κατεχρήσαο; “By what death, illegible, was it you despatched the child?" See note 6, above.

⁴¹¹ ἐπεὶ τε. This Ionic form stands in the same relation to ἐπεὶ as πρόκατε to πρόκα. See above, note 392.

⁴¹² ὅκως σοὶ τε ποιήσω κατὰ νόον, καὶ . . . εἶην αὐθέντης. The combination of the subjunctive ποιήσω with the optative εἶην under the common regimen of the particle ὅκως is to be remarked. It is peculiarly appropriate; although the different shades of meaning conveyed by the employment of the different moods cannot be exhibited in another language without periphrasis. Harpagus, by his answer, represents the performance of his master's behest as the direct object of his care, the other as a remote and contingent one.

Hence the change of mood. (See note 40, above.) But there is another delicacy of expression to observe, viz. the substitution of εἶην for the word which would express what Harpagus really had in his mind, such as νομιζόμεν. Court etiquette forbade him to use any expression implying caprice in the monarch, or censure of the results of such caprice, supposing it to arise at any future time. Translate, Sire, as soon as I took the infant, I deliberated how to act as you desired, while at the same time I hoped keeping clear of offence towards you, neither in your daughter's presence nor in yours ever to stand a homicide.

⁴¹⁵ καὶ ἀρεστὸν εἶναι πᾶν τὸ ἂν βασιλεὺς ἔρδῃ. This same answer is put by William of Malmesbury into the mouth of the son of Ethelwold, to whom King Edgar shewed his father's corpse, after slaying him in the royal forest. Similarly, the story of Zopyrus was adapted by Italian legend-writers to Sextus Tarquinus.

rank of Mitrdates." It is to be observed that the Pontine kings who bore this name professed to be descended lineally from one of the seven conspirators who slew the Magian usurper, and to have held their kingdom hereditarily from the time of Darius Hystaspes (POLYBIUS, v. 43). The presumption therefore is, that the name was a noble one in the Persian highlands. APPIAN makes the kings of Pontus to be Achæmenids of the royal house of Persia (Mitr. § 9). It is not unlikely however, if the habits of the genuine Persians were so simple as is stated, and if the Persian nation were vassals of the Median crown, like the old Swiss cantons of the house of Hapsburg, that a Persian chieftain would be described in Median traditions, in such a way as to turn him into "a royal herdsman." If, in addition to this, a new locality were given to the story of the infancy of Cyrus, by placing the adventure in the immediate neighbourhood of the Saspirens (above, § 110), the real position of Mitrdates would be entirely lost sight of, and such a phrase as that in the text might readily be used.

⁴²⁰ [ὡς ἐπίθοντο]. These words are certainly out of place here, although they are found in all the MSS. It seems not improbable that they originally stood one line back, between οἰκία and ἐδέξαντο.

⁴²¹ ἐπιστάσθαι μὲν γὰρ, "for that he made sure," in the same sense in which the word is used of Cyrus's parents just before.

⁴²² κατέβαλον φάτιν ὡς ἐκκείμενον Κύρον κύων ἐξέθρεψε. It is not the Persian but the Median language in which, according to Herodotus's story, the word Σπακὼ signifies a dog (§ 110). Therefore, unless the two languages were identical, the name of Cyrus's foster-mother could not help the reception of the miraculous nature of his escape among the Persians. And, in fact, the word is said to belong to a country on the northern side of the Elbruz mountains (see note 387); consequently, far away from the Persia of the Achæmenids. But the parallel case of Romulus would induce one to prefer the theory that the poetic form of the narrative is the original one,—that the fostering "bitch" was rationalized into the female Spako, rather than the woman Spako poeticised into an animal.

⁴²³ ἐπιτρεφόμενον, "growing up as a successor to him." This is the force of the preposition. See above, § 109, εἰ δὲ θελήσει, τοῦτον τελευτήσωτος, ἐς τὴν θυγατέρα ταύτην ἀναβῆναι ἢ τυραννίς. The effect of the compound is similar to that in the words ἐφεδρος and ἐφέζεσθαι, which are applied to the athlete who, in a wrestling match, sits out, waiting to engage the victor of two champions already competing. See the phrase ἐφεδρον βασιλέα, v. 41.

¹²⁴ ἅτε τῶν ὁδῶν φυλασσομένων. This feature in the narrative was probably suggested by some barriers which existed in the great road from Media to the south. RAWLINSON (Journal of the Geograph. Soc. ix. p. 34) describes such a one, called Taki-Girrah (the arch which holds the road), as standing in a pass which in all ages must have been the thoroughfare between Media and Babylonia. It is “a solitary arch of solid masonry, built of immense blocks of white marble, which is met with on the ascent of the mountain; it is apparently very ancient, and the name and position suggest the idea of a toll-house for the transit-duty upon merchandise crossing the Median frontier.” The Taki-Girrah is placed by Rawlinson in about lat. 34° 20', long. 46° 30'. It constitutes “the gate of Mount Zagros.”

⁴²⁶ ἀντὶα σευ. This is the reading of Gaisford with some of the MSS. Others have ἀντήσαι, which seems not unlikely to be an original reading.

⁴²⁷ γενόμενοι πρὸς σέο, "having come over to your side." See πρὸς βορέω ἀνέμου above, § 110, and the note 292.

The uncertainty of dialectal forms in the MSS is illustrated by the circumstance, that the same copies which have the contracted form σεῦ three lines back here have the open form σέο.

⁴²⁸ "νῦν τε," ἔφη λέγων, "ὦ Πέρσαι. Gaisford, who follows most of the MSS, reads νῦν, ἔφη τε λέγων, δ Π., which necessitates a full stop after ἀποδεικνύναι. The reading in the text rests on the authority of the Sancroft MS.

⁴²⁹ συχνὰ γένεα. The expression γένεα instead of φύλαι here seems to arise from the circumstance, that the idea of common descent was more strongly preserved in the Oriental than the Hellenic tribes. Indeed it is very probable that the three principal Persian γένεα were the descendants of distinct, although cognate, races. A parallel case to this would be the division at Cyrene related by Herodotus, iv. 161.

⁴³⁰ Πασαργάδαι, Μαράφιοι, Μάσπιοι. Herodotus makes mention of individuals belonging to the two former of these tribes in iv. 167. The third is not mentioned elsewhere, and some MSS of credit here read Μάσπιοι. It seems not impossible that the word Ἀριμασπιοί (iii. 116) may have some etymological connexion with Μάσπιοι, as Ἀριμασπός with Μάρδος. It is to be observed that there is no trace to be found in Herodotus of the city Pasargadæ, and the tomb of Cyrus there, of which Strabo speaks (xv. c. 3) on the authority of Aristobolus, who was there with Alexander.

⁴³¹ ἄλλοι δὲ Πέρσαι εἰσὶ οἷδε. Herodotus appears to separate the three first tribes from all the rest, as being in the position of a dominant race compared with the others. The words ἄλλοι δὲ, &c. seem to answer to τὰ μὲν αὐτῶν, and the meaning of the author to be, that the revolt of Cyrus extended to the Pasargadæ, Maraphii, and Maspii alone.

νοι. STEPHANUS BYZANTINUS has for the first of these Περσιῶδες, and for the third Καρμάνιοι. The Saneft MS has Πανθήλαιοι. Whatever reading is adopted, nothing is known of the people denoted by the first two names. The third probably refers to tribes inhabiting that district afterwards called Καρμανία (whichever reading be adopted), i. e. from Cape Jask at the entrance of the Persian Gulf, northwards to the desert, and north-eastwards to the boundaries of Persis Proper. NEARCHUS (ap. Strabon. xv. c. 3) remarked that its inhabitants were in most of their habits and their language identical with the Medes and Persians.

The name Γερμάνιοι has been considered as etymologically identical with the modern “German,” and this idea has been confirmed by a comparison of several words in the two languages. But, whatever was the original seat of the Teutonic races which subsequently over-spread Europe, there can be little doubt that the word “German” is equivalent to “armatus,” “heer-man,” “war-man,” personified in the warrior Arminius, and in the deity Ermin. And, if the Γερμάνιοι had been so called from their warlike character, they would hardly have been put last of the three tribes.

⁴³ Δάοι, Μάρδοι, Δροπικοί, Σαγάρτιοι. These tribes seem not to be nomads of the same kind with the Scythians. The second apparently are the mountaineers leading a pastoral life in the hills between Media and Persia (ARRIAN, Indic. 40), and expert in climbing. See above, § 84. The Sagartii on the other hand are an equestrian people, who went to war armed with the laaso. See vii. 85. In the fiscal scheme of the Persian monarch they are included in the fourteenth nome, which comprises also the islands at the mouth of the Euphrates (iii. 93). Perhaps they are to be looked for in the plains on the eastern bank of the lower Tigris. Of the Dai and Dropici nothing whatever is known, except that the former are perhaps the same as the Dae, a name which STRABO (xi. c. 7, p. 425) says was given in his time to the tribes on the eastern shore of the Caspian, separated by a desert from Hyrcania.

⁴³⁴ τάδε ἐς χεῖρας ἄγεσθαι, "to take this cause in hand." The expression is used in iv. 79: μέλλοντι δὲ οἱ ἐς χεῖρας ἄγεσθαι τὴν τελετήν, and in vii. 8: ὥς ἔμελλε ἐς χεῖρας ἄγεσθαι τὸ στράτευμα τὸ ἐπὶ τὰς Ἀθήνας.

⁴³⁵ βούλεται. This is the reading of S. Most MSS have βουλήσεται, a reading adopted by Gaisford.

⁴³⁶ ἐσώθη. Herodotus's authorities have this in common with the tradition followed by Ctesias, and that by Strabo (which last is probably the local account found at Pasargadæ by Aristobulus when there), that the victory over Astyages is not consummated in a single battle. Strabo says that Cyrus founded a palace at Pasargadæ, on account of that being the site of the last and decisive victory which transferred the empire of the East from the Median to the Achaemenid dynasty (xv. c. 3, p. 322). In the story followed by Herodotus, Cyrus is obviously conceived as advancing upon the Median ἄστυ, wherever it may have been. See note 396.

⁴²⁷ τῆς ἄνω Ἄλως ποταμοῦ Ἀσίης. Is the true reading τῆς ἐπὶ Ἀλ. π. Ἀσίης? See note 361. But the text may stand.

⁴²⁸ ἐπ’ ἔτεα τριήκοντα καὶ ἑκατὸν δυὼν δέοντα, παρὲς ἢ ὅσον οἱ Σκύθαι ἤρχον. The chronological difficulties of this passage are very great, and perhaps do not admit of a perfectly satisfactory solution. CLINTON cuts the knot by supposing that the first twenty-two years of Deioces’s reign were passed by him in a judicial capacity, and that Herodotus considered the Median empire only to commence in his twenty-third year. But Herodotus does expressly say that Deioces was king for 63 years (§ 102), and, what is perhaps even more important, he says that he only organized the Medes themselves, and did not seek to extend the limits of his power over the neighbouring nations (§ 101). The empire began to grow under his son Phraortes (οὗτος λέγεται πολλὰν ἐτι γενέσθαι ἀλκιμώτερος τῶν προγόνων, § 103), and if the passage § 103, οὗτος . . . ἑωυτῷ, be genuine, the commencement of the supremacy over Upper Asia must date from some period in his reign. But, as the text stands at present, the interval from the very beginning of his reign to the dethronement of Astyages gives only ninety-seven years. (See note 352, from which appears a possibility of the MSS having greatly varied.) If the present text be relied upon, the omission of the words τριήκοντα καὶ seems the easiest way out of the difficulty. The word ΕΤΕΑ may have been accidentally written ΕΤΕΑ, and this taken for ἔτεα λ’, i.e. ἔτεα τριήκοντα, in which case the copula would naturally be inserted by the next copyist. Thus ninety-eight years would be got for the duration of the supremacy, and, reckoning from the beginning of Phraortes’s reign, the number amounts to ninety-seven. It is very conceivable that, from some cause unknown to us, a new era should be made to date from some point a little back. Suppose, for instance, that Phraortes was regent for the last year of his father’s life.

⁴²⁹ ὕστερφ μέντοι χρόνῳ. This expression has been supposed to refer to the revolt under Darius Nothus, which was put down in the year 408 B.C., and an argument relative to the time of Herodotus’s writing his history has been deduced from it. But the sentence, if proceeding from the hand of the author, seems more likely to relate to the troubles which took place under the Pseudo-Smerdis, the Magian. See note on iii. 126. It is apparently a mere memorandum, although there is no reason to dispute its genuineness.

⁴⁰ κατεστράφησαν. Several MSS have κατεστράφησαν.

⁴¹ οὕτω δὴ Κύρος γενόμενός τε καὶ τραφεὶς ἐβασίλευσε. The authorities for the overthrow of the Median empire by Cyrus may be divided into three distinct classes. 1. Those followed by HERODOTUS. 2. Those followed by CTESIAS. 3. Those followed by MOSSES OF CHORENE, the historian of Armenia. In every one of these, Astyages is the name of the Median monarch under whom the dynasty is overthrown, and in every one Astyages is not put to death, but kept in an honourable captivity by the victor. In the Armenian traditions, however, it is Tigranes, prince of Armenia, who is the chief opponent of Astyages, and Cyrus only appears as his friend and ally. In all these traditions too, the revolution appears in the form of the overthrow of a dynasty by the champion of a vassal people, which is in consequence placed in a position of independence, and even superiority. Moreover, in all a connexion by marriage enters into the story. In the Armenian tradition Astyages marries a sister of Tigranes, and endeavours to make her a tool for the destruction of her brother. In that followed by Ctesias, although Cyrus is no relation of Astyages by birth, he is made to adopt as his mother, and afterwards to marry, Amytis, the daughter of Astyages, — a strange feature in the narrative, but one prominently put forward, and perhaps symbolizing Cyrus's adoption as a Magian. (See CATULLUS, 90.) So important was this fact considered, that the Bactrians, who had advanced in force after Cyrus's obtaining possession of the person of Astyages, and had fought a drawn battle with his troops, ἐπεὶ Ἀστυάγεα μὲν πατέρα Κύρου γεγενημένον, Ἀμύντην δὲ μητέρα καὶ γυναῖκα ἔμαθον, ταυτοὺς ἐκόντες Ἀμύντι καὶ Κύρῳ παρέδοσαν (CTESIAS ap. Photium, Biblioth. p. 36). The main historical fact, therefore, of the transfer of an empire in the hands of a Magian dynasty to an Achaemenid race, may be regarded as ratified by all three. But the personal history of Cyrus is peculiar to Herodotus. In the Armenian tradition Tigranes is represented as having the same bodily and mental qualities which XENOPHON (in the Cyropædia) and Herodotus ascribe to Cyrus. And, in the case of Tigranes, the source of the tradition is expressly said to be "the popular songs which were sung to the sound of cymbals." The hypothesis that the story of Cyrus had a similar origin, but that the substance of it passed to Herodotus through Greek channels, is at least not an improbable one. See note 339. DINON, the historian, expressly related (ap. Aithenæum, p. 633) that the future deeds of Cyrus were prophesied by a Median bard in a song at the table of Astyages.

⁴² δοκεῖ. Gaisford has δοκέειν, with the majority of MSS. But the Sauerbeck Codex has δοκέει, and so has ORIGEN (c. Celsum, vii. p. 738), who cites the passage.

⁴⁴³ [θυσίας]. This word is omitted in the manuscripts S and V, and appears to have been introduced as a gloss of the word ἔρδευ, which, like the Latin facere, is used in the sense of "sacrifice."

⁴⁴⁴ τὸν κύκλον πάντα. See note 450.

⁴⁴⁵ τοῖτοισι μὲν δὴ μούνουσι. From these words S, V, δ, and d pass to the beginning of § 133, except that S has the word ἀρχήθεν.

⁴⁴⁶ τῇ Οὐρανίῃ. See note on v. 102.

⁴⁴⁷ Ἀράβιοι δὲ Ἀλιττα. Perhaps the true reading is ἈΛΙΛΑΤ, which (or ἈΛΙΛΑΤ) is the reading of all the MSS in iii. 8.

⁴⁴⁸ ἐκάστῳ. Perhaps the true reading is ἐκαστος. The s written C may have been overlooked on account of the following Θ, and the resulting ἐκαστο corrected by the next copyist into ἐκάστο. It should be remembered that in the uncial MSS the ι adscriptum of the dative case is rarely written, neither are accents employed in most cases.

⁴⁴⁹ τὸν τιάραν. The usual form of the nominative of this word is ἡ τιάρα. But HESYCHIUS, s.v., says, Τιάρα· ἡ λεγομένη κυρβάσια· ταύτη δὲ οἱ Πέρσαι βασιλεῖς μόνοι ἐχρῶντο ὁρῆ, οἱ δὲ στρατηγοὶ ὑποκεκλιμένῳ. Ἡρόδοτος δὲ ἐν α' ἀρβηνικῶς.

⁴⁵⁰ μάγος ἀνὴρ παρεστῶς ἐπαεῖδει. In the Behistun Inscription, Darius is represented as having, after he became king, prohibited the Magian worship, and restored the sacred chants and ritual, entrusting it to the families which the usurper had dispossessed. See note on iii. 79. It seems doubtful here whether Herodotus is not following the account of some person who confused the genuine Persian with a Median ritual. The Inscription makes Ormuzd essentially a personal deity,—not an elemental one identical with the κύκλος οὐρανοῦ. See note on iii. 35.

⁴⁵² ἐν ταύτῃ δέ. The manuscripts S, V, b, and d omit this passage, resuming the text again with the words οἷνψ δὲ κάρτα προσκέσται. The omitted portion is quoted together with the context by Αἰθην. xiv. p. 144.

⁴⁵³ βοῦν καὶ ἵππον καὶ κάμηλον καὶ ὄνον. See the last note on § 216.

⁴⁵⁴ τὰ λεπτὰ τῶν προβάτων. “The smaller quadrupeds.” The word πρόβατα is used by Herodotus for any edible four-footed animal. See iv. 61: τὰ ἄλλα πρόβατα καὶ ἵππους μάλιστα, also viii. 137.

⁴⁵⁵ ἐπιφορήμασι, “dishes brought in afterwards;” called also ἐπιδορπίσματα and τραγήματα, and answering to the dessert of modern times. They were not brought in all at once (ἄλεσι) but one after the other, as at a German table-d’hôte.

⁴⁵⁷ ἀντίον ἄλλου. The manuscript S omits these two words. It is observable that the passage in which similar customs are ascribed to the Medes, and represented to be an institution of Deioceos (§ 99), is one of the few parts of the text between § 95 and § 101 which are retained by the manuscripts S, V, b, and d.

⁴⁵⁸ ταῦτα μὲν νυν οὕτω φυλάσσεται. From these words to Αἰγυπτίους θάρηκας (§ 135), are omitted in the manuscripts S, V, b, and d.

⁴⁵⁹ σπουδαιέστατα. The MSS a and c and Athenæus have σπουδαίεστατα. See above, note 36. M, K, and F have the form in the text.

⁴⁶⁰ τὸν λεγόμενον. This is a conjectural emendation adopted generally. The MSS have τῷ λεγόμενῳ. It is not easy to see how the corruption could have arisen.

⁴⁶¹ τοὺς Αἰγυπτίους θώρηκας. These appear to have been made of linen, quilted so as to make a considerable substance, and covered with a surface of metallic scales. Such a one is described as having been worn by Masistius (ix. 22), and by the Persians in Xerxes's army (vii. 61). The skill of the Egyptians in workmanship appears from the thorax which Amasis sent to Lindus, for an offering to Athens (iii. 47).

⁴⁶² καὶ εὐπαθείας τε παντοδαπὰς πυνθανόμενοι ἐπιτηδεύουσι. The manuscripts S, V, ὁ, and d have ἐπιτηδεύουσι δὲ καὶ εὐπαθείας παντοδαπὰς πυνθανόμενοι, and then continue the text with the words παιδεύουσι δὲ τοὺς παῖδας, &c. (§ 136.)

⁴⁶³ κουριδίας γυναῖκας. The same expression is used below (v. 18, and vi. 138), and in the same sense, i. e. "wedded wives." The word κουριδίας is several times used by Homer, almost always in the conjunction κουριδίη ἄλοχος: but, though its sense is plain, its origin has not yet been satisfactorily explained. See BUTTMANN (Lexilogus, sub v.) for an account of what has been hitherto proposed.

⁴⁶⁴ ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος. This would probably be on his birthday. See note on ix. 110.

⁴⁶⁵ τὸ πολλὸν δ' ἡγέεται ἰσχυρὸν εἶναι. The same thought appears in Psalms cxvii. 5. It is the men of many children who will "not be ashamed when they speak with their enemies in the gate."

⁴⁷⁰ τὰς λευκὰς περιστερὰς. It seems doubtful whether the enmity of the Persians to these birds was wholly directed against their colour. The dove was a symbol of the Semiramis-Astarte religion, which undoubtedly would be an object of hatred to the early Persians. VON HAMMER (Wiener Jahrbücher, ix. p. 17) maintains that the colour of white in itself was highly regarded by them, being considered as a symbol of innocence. Still, all white animals are regarded as lunar nature in India at this day.

⁴⁷¹ τὸ Πέρσας μὲν αὐτοὺς λέληθε ἡμέας μέντοι οὐ. This is a passage which might readily induce the belief that the author had himself been in Persia, and had remarked not only the fact he asserts, but the inattention of the Persians to it. But it really goes to prove the reverse. For the Persian names, if the least confidence can be placed in Rawlinson's reading of the Behistun Inscription, did not generally end in Σ, but were apparently analogous to the Æolic nominative case. Thus Cambyses, in the Persian of the Inscription, is Kambujiya, Intaphernes is Vidafrana, &c., so that Herodotus's observation is true, not of the original words, but of their Hellenic representations,—a decisive evidence of the nature of Herodotus's authorities in this instance.

⁴⁷² εἰδὼς. This word is omitted in the manuscript K.

⁴⁷³ μάγους μὲν γὰρ ἀπρεκέως οἶδα ποιεύοντας ταῦτα. These magians might have come under the cognizance of Herodotus (or his informant), far from the confines of Persia. STRABO speaks of magians in Cappadocia (xv. c. 3, p. 326). The Parsees of Bombay are said to have a similar custom. See HERBERT, Travels into Africa and Asia the Great, p. 54, ed. 1638.

⁴⁷⁴ μάγοι δὲ κεχωρίδεται κ.τ.λ. The paragraph of which these words are the beginning seems to be of the nature of a note, and I have therefore exhibited it as a parenthesis. The special reference to the Egyptian priests (which have not been mentioned before) is remarkable, as if Egypt were particularly familiar to the narrator. See notes 647, 651, 671, and the assertion in iii. 2: εἰ γὰρ τινες καὶ ἄλλοι, τὰ Περσέων νόμιμα ὀρθῶς ἐπιστάται καὶ Αἰγύπτῳ.

The practices referred to are to be explained on the principle, that, according to the dualistic theory of the Magian religion, serpents and poisonous reptiles would be regarded as manifestations of the evil influence of Ahriman. It is not so easy to say why the Magians should have held the dog as sacred. It could not be merely on the ground of his utility to man; for the same reason would have applied to the horse and the ox. Perhaps the bright star Sirius bore a name of the same signification with them that Bochart and others maintain it to have done in the ancient Egyptian language (Σῆθις = Σῆθ = Thoth = κύων). (See IDLER, Handbuch der Chronologie, ii. p. 591.) There can be no question that this remarkable star would be regarded as a special manifestation of Ormuzd, the source of light. (See PLUTARCH, De Iside et Osiride, p. 370.)

The Ionians and Æolians send an embassy to Cyrus, who answers them by a fable, Ἴωνες δὲ καὶ Αἰολέες⁴⁷⁶, ὥς οἱ Λυδοὶ τάχιστα κατεστράφατο ὑπὸ Περσέων, ἔπεμπον ἀγγέλους ἐς Σάρδις παρὰ Κύρον, ἐθέλοντες ἐπὶ τοῖσι αὐτοῖσι εἶναι τοῖσι καὶ Κροίσῳ ἦσαν κατήκοοι· ὁ δὲ ἀκούσας αὐτῶν τὰ προύχοντο, ἔλεξε σφὶ λόγον⁴⁷⁷, ἄνδρα φὰς αὐλητὴν ἰδόντα ἰχθύς ἐν τῇ θαλάσῃ αὐλέειν, δοκέοντά σφας ἐξελεύσεσθαι ἐς γῆν ὥς δὲ ψευσθῆναι τῆς ἐλπίδος, λαβεῖν ἀμφίβληστρον καὶ περιβαλεῖν τε πλῆθος πολλὸν τῶν ἰχθύων καὶ ἐξεύρωσαι, ἰδόντα δὲ παλλομένους εἰπεῖν ἄρα αὐτὸν πρὸς τοὺς ἰχθύς· παύεσθέ μοι ὀρχεόμενοι, ἐπεὶ οὐδ' ἐμέο αὐλέοντος ἠθέλετε ἐκβαίνειν ὀρχεόμενοι. on which all but Miletus prepare for war, and apply to Sparta for aid.

⁴⁷⁶ καὶ Αἰολέες. The Æolians are associated with the Ionians in this unsuccessful embassy, and in the other mentioned § 152; but Herodotus gives no account whatever of the time or circumstances of their conquest by the Persians. That they were subdued, at least such of them as inhabited the main, appears from § 171, where they are joined with the subjugated Ionians as auxiliaries of Harpagus in his expedition against Caria. So it does from what Herodotus says of Cambyzes (ii. 1), that Ἴωνας μὲν καὶ Αἰολέας ὡς δούλους πατρίους ἔοντας ἐνόμιζε. In the expedition of Xerxes, the Æolian cities furnished sixty ships, according to the same account which made the Ionians furnish 100 (vii. 95). It can scarcely therefore be their insignificance which induced Herodotus to omit all mention of their fate. See note 593.

⁴⁷⁷ ἔλεξε σφὶ λόγον. This story appears to be of the same class with that in § 27. Tales of this kind were the staple conversation of the more refined Athenians in their symposia at the time of the Peloponnesian war. The old school diverted themselves by relating fables, in which the personages were the lower animals (λόγοι Αἰσαυτικοί). The transition of manners is excellently shown by the dialogue between Bdelycleon and his old father in ARISTOPHANES (Vesp. vv. 1174—1263). The fashion was probably imported from the public tables of Lacedæmon.

Ἰώνων οἱ Μιλήσιοι μὲν ἦσαν ἐν σκέπῃ τοῦ φόβου⁴⁴⁸, ὅρκιον ποιη- The Milesians and tinued hostility between Miletus and the Lydian kings probably made the overtures of Cyrus (see above, § 76) more welcome at Miletus than among the rest of the Ionians. In fact, the population of Miletus was any thing but pure Ionian. The coins show that the predominating religion was the worship of Apollo Didymæus, whose temple (according to the native legends) was far more ancient than the immigration of the Ionians under Neleus (PAUSAN. vii. 2. 6). The Milesian temple at Naukratis in Egypt was dedicated to Apollo (ii. 178).

⁴⁴³ οἱ δὲ Ἴωνες οὗτοι. It seems not unlikely that the ethnographic account which follows is derived from the κτίσεις πόλεων, a work in two books, by CHARON of Lampsacus (Suidas, sub v.). The expressions τὰ ἄνω αὐτῆς and τὰ κάτω are difficult to explain if we take them in their usual sense (i. e. as the regions further up the country, and those nearer the sea), since the whole of Ionia lies on the coast. But if we suppose the historian to take Lampsacus as a centre, the expression becomes a natural one, τὰ ἄνω αὐτῆς being the country between Ionia and Lampsacus; τὰ κάτω the parts beyond Ionia; τὰ πρὸς τὴν ἡῶ the coast of the Propontis east of Lampsacus; and τὰ πρὸς τὴν ἐσπέρην the Thracian Chersonese. And thus there is also a reason for omitting mention of the north and the south.

⁴⁴⁴ αὐτῆς, i. e. τῆς Ἰωνίας.

⁴⁴⁵ γλῶσσαν . . . νενομίκασι. The same expression is used in iv. 183: γλῶσσαν οὐδεμὴ ἄλλη παρομοίην νενομίκασι. Here and in v. 97, ὅτε ἀσπίδα ὅτε ὄρνυ νομίζουσι, the word νομίζειν is equivalent to ἐν τοῖς νόμοις ἔχειν.

⁴⁴⁶ παραγωγέων, "deflections," i. e. from the normal Ionic dialect of literature.

⁴⁴⁷ Φώκαια. This form rests on the authority of all the MSS here and ii. 106; ii. 178. On the other hand, Φωκαίη is similarly defended above, §§ 80 and 164.

⁴⁴⁸ ἐν σκέπῃ τοῦ φόβου, "sheltered from the peril." Similarly vii. 173 and 216, ἐν σκέπῃ τοῦ πολέμου, "sheltered from the brunt of the war."

⁴⁸⁸ ἀπεσχίσθησαν, κ.τ.λ. It has been thought that in the discussion which follows, relative to the cause of the separation of the Ionic confederates from other Ionian cities, Herodotus is criticizing the views of Hecataeus the Milesian. It seems unnecessary to suppose that he is doing more than combating a current opinion. If any writer is specially referred to, the considerations offered in the note 482 would rather point to Charon of Lampascus than any other.

⁴⁸⁹ τότε. This apparently refers to the time at which the confederation was constituted, of which the deputies met at the Panionium.

⁴⁹⁰ ὅτι γὰρ μὴ Ἀθῆναι. That an exception should be made in favour of Athens is perhaps due to the power of that city in the time of the writer. Long after the time he speaks of in the text it was extremely insignificant. See note on v. 73, ἐπειράτω τινες ἑόντες ἄνθρωποι.

⁴⁹¹ κατάπερ οἱ ἐκ τῆς Πενταπόλως νῦν χώρας Δωριεῖς. It is to be remarked that what the author says of the Asiatic Dorians, as an aggregate, is introduced here only by way of illustration of the policy of the Panionian confederacy, and is not to be regarded as a continuation of the thread of the narrative. This removes the surprise one might otherwise feel at the irregular order in which he mentions the Greek confederacies on the main. Indeed, if we suppose him to be following an earlier author, it would seem likely that in that author's narrative the Dorians, as a united body, were not regarded. The conquest of a portion is alluded to (below, § 174) as that of the "Hellenic cities in Caria."

⁴⁹² ἐς τὸ Τριοικικὸν ἱρὸν. The deities associated in this temple may be inferred from the offering of the Cnidians, which PAUSANIAS saw at Delphi, which were Τριόπιαν οἰκιστὴν τῆς Κνίδου παρεστῶτα Ἰηπφ καὶ Ἀητῶ καὶ Ἀπόλλωνά τε καὶ Ἀρτεμιν ἀφιέντας τῶν βελῶν ἐπὶ Τιτυόν (x. 11, 1). But this Apollo-worship was rather that of the Achæan race than of the Dorian. (See note 587.) Judging, too, from the coins of Cnidus, one may be inclined to suspect that Leto was, either by the mistake of Pausanias or the choice of the artist, substituted for another divinity, perhaps Athene Polias. (See notes on ii. 59.) The Τριοικίον built by Herodes Atticus near Rome was dedicated to Demeter and Core and the χθόνιοι θεοί; and the SCHOLIAST on Theocr. xvii. 69 states that the games at the Cnidian Triopium were in honour of Apollo, Poseidon, and the Nymphs.

⁴⁹³ φέρων δὲ πρὸς τὰ ἑωυτοῦ οἰκία. In this act the offender seems to have been regarded as setting up a shrine of the deity in his own house. See the legend related by Herodotus, iv. 179.

⁴⁹⁴ Λῠδος καὶ Ἰήλυσσός τε καὶ Κάμειρος. These are the three cities which antecedently to the concentration of the population in the city Rhodes, divided the island Rhodes among themselves. The mythical accounts of their origin are very various, but all agree in deriving the foundation of them from Argos, and in times antecedent to the Heraclide invasion of the Peloponnese. Hence it was not to be expected that the Dorian Apollo-worship should have been the predominant one there. And from various notices it appears that this was not the case. Herodotus relates that Amasis sent presents to the Athenæum at Lindus (ii. 182), a temple which, according to tradition (Dionysius, v. 58), was founded by Danaus or his daughters. Gela in Sicily, a colony from Lindus (vii. 150), appears from its coins to have been under the protection of Poseidon and Demeter: and indeed its οικιστής, Geles, who was a native of the little island Telus just off Triopium, bequeathed the hereditary priesthood of the χθόνιοι θεοὶ to his descendants (vii. 153). In Camirus and Ialysus Here was worshipped under the surname Τελχινία, a name which, whatever its derivation (see Biographical and Mythological Dictionary, v. Telchines), undoubtedly belongs to the earliest religious systems of the Peloponnese.

⁴⁹⁵ καὶ Κῶς τε καὶ Κνίδος. Cos was as little purely Doric as the cities mentioned in the last note. It was a colony from Epidaurus, and especially noted for the worship of Asclepius and Demeter. Of Cnidus, see note 587, below.

⁴⁹⁶ μὲν γε. The MSS have μὲν τε, which Gaisford retains. But see vi. 46; viii. 65.

⁴⁹⁸ Πατρές. By Herodotus using this expression, it seems as if the city Patræ did not exist in his time; Ægium and Dyme, on the other hand, seem to have done so. See the passage of Strabo cited in note on viii. 73, Ἀτρωλὼν δὲ ἦλκας μούνη.

⁴⁹⁹ ταῦτα . . Ἰώνων ἦν. This expression seems to indicate that the authority followed by Herodotus made the duodenary division of Achaia to exist before the inroad of the Achæans, and under the same names. This also is implied by the words of PAUSANIAS, who may be regarded as representing the local traditions of his time. His list, however, differs from that of Herodotus. Beginning from Elis and reckoning towards Sicily, he gives the list of the cities, Dyme, Olenus, Pharæ, Tritæa, Rypes, Ægium, Cerynea, Bura, Helice, Ægæ, Ægira, and Pallene (vii. 6, 1). As neither Olenus nor Helice existed in the time of POLYBIUS (ii. 41), this list cannot represent the existing cities, but must rest upon a tradition different from that adopted by Herodotus. The list of Polybius is different from either. It is Patræ, Dyme, Pharæ, Tritæa, Leontium, Ægira, Pallene, Ægium, Bura, Cerynea, Olenus, and Helice. He says expressly that all these towns existed in his time, except the two last. Helice was swallowed up by the sea in an earthquake, just before the battle of Leuctra. These lists may be regarded as resting on original sources, but those of Strabo and Pliny on the accounts of other authors. SCYLAX of Caryanda omits the name Helice,—a circumstance which adds to the doubts of the genuineness of the work ascribed to him, at least except in a very interpolated state.

⁵⁰⁰ Καίρας ἔσχον. The native Milesian traditions (PAUSAN. vii. 2, 3) related that the population found by the Ionian colonists consisted of a mixture of aboriginal Carians with Cretans, who had fled from Minos under the leadership of Miletus. This, with only the change of the leader's name, seems identical with the legend related below (§ 173) of the Lycians. The native legends of Miletus went on to say that the Ionians slaughtered all the male population and cohabited with the women, but there is no allusion to the custom of the latter eating alone. It is difficult to reconcile the known predominance of the worship of Apollo Didymæus, which dated from times antecedent to the Ionic invasion (see note 481), with so entire an obliteration of the native race. Possibly there may have existed a practice among the descendants of the old population to name themselves after their mothers, which may have been perverted into the form, that the father of the family was never mentioned by his name. This certainly prevailed in Lycia (see FELLOWES, Second Excursion in Asia Minor), and, if we take the account of EPHORUS (ap. Strabon. xiv. p. 165), the ancient Lycian population is ethnically identical with the early population of Miletus. The custom of the women to eat alone may be a relic of Oriental harem life.

"But seeing that they cling to the name more than the rest of the Ionians, and are (let us grant it) those of them who are of pure descent, Ionians; yet all are Ionians who came of Athenian extraction and keep the Apaturian festival." Herodotus is, throughout this and the last two sections, obviously controverting some current theory, which apparently accounted for the separation of these twelve Ionian cities from the rest by alleging the superior purity of their blood. His argument seems to be this: 1. The inhabitants of these towns are a most mixed race, having no pretension to pure descent. 2. Granting those who are of pure descent to be Ionians, this name implies nothing more than Athenian extraction and the observance of the Apaturia. Now the Athenians were notoriously a union of almost all races, and did not themselves care to be regarded as Ionian. Therefore, under no circumstances can a distinctive character belong to these twelve cities. With regard to the point at issue, see note on vii. 94.

⁵⁰² τῆς ἡπείρου ἄκρῃ . . . Σάμῳ, "a headland of the main trending westward, off Samos." This is just the description which would be given of the site by a mariner who passed between Samos and the main from the south. As he hugged the shore, the island would appear touched by the promontory, till a sufficient westing was made to open out the channel.

³⁰⁴ ὤδε ἀπέβαλον. The date of this transaction is approximately fixed by Herodotus (i. 16). It must have happened before the reign of Halyattes,—at least if we suppose that the accounts in these two passages belong to the same cycle of traditions. The history given by STRABO of the fortunes of this city is worth reading as a specimen of a cento of diverse traditions. According to him, a part of the city Ephesus was called 'Smyrna,' from the Amazon of that name who had occupied it. CALLINUS, in his hymn to Zeus, called its inhabitants Σμυρναίους, and HIPPOXAX defined the district called by that name as lying between Λέπρη ἀκτὴ and Τραχέια. The inhabitants of the district made an expedition against the town (the site of the 'Smyrna' of Strabo's time), then held by Leleges, and, expelling them, built a town ('Old-Smyrna') about two miles off. Afterwards they were expelled by Aeolians; but they took refuge in Colophon, and by the help of the Colophonians recovered the town. As evidence for this last statement, Strabo quotes MIMNERMUS's Nanno. But the passage he cites points to yet another tradition, agreeing with Strabo's story only in the fact of the capture of the town. It represents the captors as proceeding from "Nelean Pylius in ships to Asia, as storming Colophon, and from thence capturing Aeolian Smyrna" (xiv. p. 164), so uncertain are all details relative to the colonization of these Asiatic cities.

³⁰⁵ ἔξω τῶν ἐν τῇ Ἰδῇ οἰκημένων. See the note on v. 94, ὁπίσω ἐς Σίγειον.

³⁰⁶ Ἑκατοννήσοι. The Hecaton-nesi are a group of small islands, from twenty to forty in number, lying between Lesbos and the main. The name is, according to STRABO, equivalent to Ἀπολλων-νήσοι, the whole of the Asiatic coast in this part being full of the worship of Apollo, with the different surnames of Smintheus, Cilæus, or Gryneus (xiii. c. 2, p. 140). The name Hecatus is the masculine of Hecate, and is a name given to the sun-god in Il. i. 385. HESYCHIUS gives Ἑκάτης νῆσος as the name of an island off the coast of Lesbos. Probably the two heads on the coins of Tenedos (see note 508) were those of Hecatus and Hecate (Helios and Selene). See note on vi. 97.

³⁰⁷ Λεσβίοι. The thread of the narrative interrupted in § 143 is here resumed.

³⁰⁸ Τενεδίοι. . . ἦν δευρὸν οὐδέν. The distance of Tenedos from the main was, however, so small (being only forty stadæ, or about that of the Isle of Wight from Portsmouth) as scarcely to constitute a security. Accordingly, the Persians, when they got a fleet, appear to have over-run it without trouble (vi. 31). Its proximity to the coast gave rise to the existence of a large population employed as ferrymen, to such an extent as to impress a marked character on the Commons, just as the ναυτιὰς δῆλος did in Athens, the fishermen in Tarentum and Byzantium, the traders in Ægina and Chios (ARISTOT. Politic. iv. p. 1291, lin. 23), and the lazaroni do in modern Naples. The landing-place on the main was a little south of Sigeum (STRABO, xiii. c. 1, p. 116). The tutelary divinity of Tenedos was Apollo-Smintheus, and the image carried a πέλεκυς in the hand. The coins of Tenedos bore the πέλεκυς on one side, and on the other a male and female head. Various reasons were assigned for this (ARISTIDES and ARISTOTEL. op. Steph. Byz. sub v. Τένεδος). But see note 506.

¹⁰⁹ ἔαδε κοινῇ. There is no trace of any confederacy among the Æolian cities, by which opportunity for such a common deliberation as is here mentioned might be afforded. Neither in the issue does it appear that there was any combined action of the Ionians themselves,—far less any organization in which the Æolians were united with them. See § 169, of ἄλλοι: “ἴσως πλὴν Μιλησίων κ.τ.λ. περὶ τῆς ἐωυτοῦ ἕκαστος μαχόμενοι, and the advice of Thales, § 170.

¹¹³ ἔλλεσχα, "matter of chit-chat," subjects for the λέσχη. For the exact sense of this word, which has been much mistaken, see note on ix. 71. In addition to what is there said, it may be observed that the word λέσχη appears to be especially Dorian. Its epithet ἐπυλῆς is nothing more than the Doric form of ἐφέλιος, and the statement of the SCHOLIAST on HESIOD, "Erg. 491, "that there were regulations as to the subjects of conversation in the λέσχη, with a view to the improvement of the company," can only be true of Dorian states. PAUSANIAS says that the building ornamented by Polygnotus at Delphi was called by the name of λέσχη, ὅτι ἐνταῦθα συνιόντες τὸ ἀρχαῖον τὰ τε σπουδαιότερα διελέγοντο καὶ ὁποῖα μυθώδη (x. 25, 1). The Boeotians gave the name of λέσχη to the κοῖνα δευπηγήρια. (Leake's Guidiumum, sub v.)

¹¹⁵ ἐς Ἀγβάτανα. See note on iii. 30, ἐς Πέρσας.

CTESIAS made the war against the Bactrians and the Sacae take place before the expedition into Lydia, but said nothing of the Egyptian war. (Ap. Photium, Biblioth. p. 36.)

¹¹⁹ ὡς εἰ τις πατέρα ἀποκτείνας τῶν παιδων αὐτοῦ φείσεται. This is an allusion to the proverb, expressed in an hexameter verse, ascribed by later writers to Stasinus, but quoted by ARISTOTLE (Rhet. i. p. 1376) merely as a current saw:

νήπιος δὲ πατέρα κτείνας παῖδας καταλείπει.

See note on § 32, and on ll. 160, ἐπὶ τοῦτον δὴ τὸν ἄμυν.

¹²¹ τῷ σὺ ἐπέτρεψας Σάρδεις. This is not a perfectly accurate expression, if tested by what Herodotus says above, § 153. Pactyas appears in that passage to have been left in the capacity of commissioner, merely to collect and transmit the gold actually existing in Lydia. But it seems likely that the Persian monarch, under the circumstances of the case, would confiscate the property of the Lydian sovereign, and impose a heavy mulct upon the population, and that the duty of Pactyas was to convert all this into money and transmit it to Agbatana. This function would require him to be invested with large judicial and executive powers, to determine (for instance) debts due to the exchequer, to assess the value of particular properties, and transfer confiscated lands. With all these duties on his hands, he might fitly be described as the ἐπίτροπος of Cyrus: although one who, from any reason, looked upon the transaction as nothing else than the plunder of a country, would represent his office in the terms used above in § 153.

indication of hardihood, the other would equally symbolize luxury. See the note on § 55. The wearing a χιτὼν under the εἶμα was a part of the same habit. For a similar policy to that of Croesus, said to be pursued by Sesostris in Egypt, see note on ii. 35, ὑφαίνουσι. The contrary course of conduct in the ascetic Christians of the second century gave rise to the proverb, "a togā ad pallium," applied to such as made a great sacrifice of comfort.

¹⁵⁴ ἐς ἡβρα τὰ Περσέων, "to his home in Persia." This expression, however, is to be taken very largely; for it appears from § 44 that it was to Agbatana he went. It is remarkable that Agbatana is spoken of as the seat of government of Cyrus and his son Cambyses (see iii. 64), but Susa as that of Darius and his son Xerxes. See vi. 119; iii. 129; vii. 3; ix. 108.

¹⁵⁵ μοῖραν ὀσηδήκοτε, "a certain part, whatever it was." Herodotus's account gave no report of the strength of the division detached with Mazares; and therefore he uses the expression in the text. Similarly, the story related by him of Periander and his son did not contain the specification of the amount of fine to be levied on those who held converse with the young man, and hence he calls it ὀσην δῆ. See i. 160; and iii. 52.

antiquity of the oracle is further manifest from the peculiarly archaic style of the statues which ornamented the temple.
A road led from it to the sea, bordered on each side with statues on chairs of a single block of stone, with the feet close together, and the hands upon the knees, the exact counterpart of the avenues leading up to the Egyptian temples (LEAKE, Asia Minor, p. 239). Necho, king of Egypt, was said to have made an offering to Apollo here (ii. 159). Perhaps enough remained of the Oriental character of the original ritual, to render the priests not averse to take part with the Persians at the time of Xerxes's invasion, as they were reported to have done. He is said to have carried them off with their own good-will, and established them on one of the high rocks of Bactriana (STRABO, xi. c. 11, p. 441). Alexander destroyed the Bactrian Branchidae two hundred years afterwards, to show his zeal against sacrilege and treason. Seleucus, with a better judgment, sent back to Greece the brazen statue of the god, which Xerxes had conveyed to Agbatana (PAUSAN. i.

16, 5). See note 327.

¹⁵⁸ τοὺς Βραγχίδας. This is the reading of all the MSS. In i. 92, the word is used, not to signify the college of priests, but the oracle itself, and is put in the feminine gender. So it is in ii. 159.

⁵²⁹ ὥστε γε ἀσεβήσαντες θάσσον ἀπόλησθε. One might almost suspect that the response of the oracle terminated with this ambiguous phrase, and that what follows is the ingenious interpretation added by Aristodicus. See the note on v. 36: ἐν τῷ πρώτῳ τῶν λόγων.

⁵³⁰ ἐπὶ μισθῷ ὅσῳ δὴ, "for a certain price, whatever the sum was." See note 526.

⁵³¹ Πακτύν μὲν νυν παραδεξάμενοι. CHARON of Lampascus related the fate of Pactyas in very few and general terms: Πακτῆς δὲ ἐς ἐπύθετο προσελαόνοντα τὸν Περσικὸν φέρετο φεύγων ἔστι μὲν εἰς Μυτιλήνην, ἔπειτα δὲ εἰς Χίον· καὶ αὐτοῦ ἐκράτησε Κύρης. It is plain that there is no incompatibility between these accounts. In fact, as Cyrus at this time had no fleet, he could not have secured Pactyas but for his extradition by the Chians. All that follows from the comparison of the two passages is that Herodotus followed some authority besides Charon; not that he did not read him; much less that the two accounts are at variance with each other.

⁵³² ἦν δὲ χρόνος οὗτος οὐκ ὀλίγος γεγόμενος, ὅτε κ.τ.λ. It is very difficult to explain this phrase on the supposition that no corruption of the text has taken place. Herodotus appears to desire to say, that long after the extradition of Pactyas none of the produce of Atarneus was ever used by the Chians for sacred purposes, on the ground apparently of a curse being supposed to cleave to a territory purchased by so sinful an act. But the word οὔτος is, on this supposition, apparently superfluous, and it is not easy to account for its insertion by any error of transcription. If οὔτος be genuine, the word ὅτε must be taken in the sense of ἐξ ὅτου, and then there results the sense that "at this period a long time had elapsed since" the Chians had refused to use the produce of Atarneus as aforesaid. But no reason can be assigned why the place should be under ban, at the time the Chians bargained for it; or why, under such circumstances, they should at all desire to possess it. I have little doubt that the passage is corrupt, but can suggest no conjecture less violent than striking out the word οὔτος.

The Cumans send Pactyas to Mytilene, and from thence to Chios.

The Chians sell him for Atarneus.

A ban rests upon the land thus gained.

 pagus must have been of mature age at this time, as he was Astyages's vizier (ἐπίτροπος) at the time of Cyrus's birth. See § 108.

¹⁶⁴ τὸ ἐνθεῦτεν χῶματα χῶν. The mode of taking cities by building a mound in an inclined plane up to the walls, and bringing up on this a tower which overtopped the ramparts, and furnished the means of driving the besiegers from them, was early practised by the Assyrians (see 2 Kings xix. 32), from whom the art probably passed to the Medes and Persians. It is an obvious mode of operation where a very large supply of labour is available, as was the case with the Oriental sovereigns, but was not applicable in the warfare of the Hellenic states, where the numbers of the invading force rarely exceeded that of the besieged by any considerable amount.
 With the Greeks, the usual mode of taking a town was by an ἐπιχειρισμὸς,
 i. e. the fortifying and garrisoning of a stronghold in the neighbourhood, from whence continual annoyance was inflicted upon it, until at last the resources of the besieged were exhausted, or their patience gave way. The siege of Troy is an instance of this kind of proceeding.

It is to be remarked of the history in the text, that a scientific mode of attack does not take place until Harpagus, the Mede, takes the command of the Medo-Persian army. Cyrus carries Sardis by a coup-de-main, and Mazares, the Persian, overruns the territory of Magnesia and the valley of the Meander, merely as a plunderer. The town of the Prienians was so small and insignificant a place, that it was not likely to have offered any resistance, if it was attacked.

¹⁶⁵ τὸν τε Ἀδρίην. Wherever Herodotus uses this word he uses it alone, and it does not seem certain that the word πόντος is that which is necessary to supply the ellipse. I should rather be disposed to understand the word κόλπος, and to refer the expression to the coast.
 On this hypothesis there will be nothing strange in the union of the phrase with others which indisputably refer to land.
 It may denote the coast of Illyria or Istria, where, probably, there was a port at which Phocæan vessels took in commodities (such as amber, and perhaps tin), which came overland from the north of Europe. (See note on iii. 115.) After the destruction of Phocæa, the Corcyreans would be likely to monopolize the traffic, and thenceforward little would be known of its particulars. (See THUCYDIDES, i. 37.)

¹⁶⁷ ἀλλὰ πεντηκοντέροισι. The fifty-oared galley was, until the construction of the trireme, the ship of war; and the early transactions of the Greeks partook in nearly equal proportions of the mercantile and the piratical character.

³³⁸ ἀπικόμενοι δὲ ἐς τὸν Ταρτησσόν. The account given here seems to rest on a different foundation from the story related in iv. 162. Neither in the one case nor in the other, however, does it appear distinctly whether Tartessus is regarded as a town or a region. The same ambiguity occurs in the mention of it by PHRYCYDES (Fragm. 33). STESICHRUS made it a river. The vagueness of the notices in the early Greek writers probably arises from the circumstance that the Phœnicians got the trade with those parts into their hands even before the time of Homer, and held it until Carthage fell before the power of Rome (STRABO, iii. cap. 2). Hellenic enterprise in that direction must have been exceptional and highly hazardous.

³³⁹ τῷ οὐνομα μὲν ἦν Ἀργανθώνιος. It seems not unlikely that this story is derived by Herodotus from CHABON of Lampascus, one of whose works was a περίπλους τῶν ἐκτὸς τῶν Ἑλληνικῶν στηλῶν (Suidas, sub v. Χάβων). According to this historian, the Hellenic population of Lampascus came from Phocæa as a colony, under two twin-brothers, Phobus and Blepsus, Codridæ by descent. And that the legend in the text should have grown up in the neighbourhood of Lampascus is rendered probable by the existence in Mysia of a mountain named Arganthonis (STRAB. BYZ. sub v.), so called, it was said, after one Arganthonie, the wife of Rhesus. For the vagueness of the accounts of Tartessus, see the last note.

³⁴⁰ πάντα. Hermann and Bekker alter the text to τὰ πάντα, which is certainly the proper expression if the author meant to say that Arganthonius lived “in the whole” 120 years. But the text, as it stands, means that he lived “the whole of” that time, i. e. “not less than” 120 years. The long life of the Tartessians was proverbial. ANACREON (ap. Strabon. iii. cap. 2) says: ἐγὼ δ' οὐτ' ἂν Ἀμαλθίης βουλομένη κέρας, οὐτ' ἔτη πεντήκοντά τε χακατὸν Ταρτησσοῦ βασιλεύσαι. Strabo himself considers that the being long-lived was ascribed to them as a part of their notorious εὐδαιμονία, which is not unlikely. See the notes on iii. 18, τὴν γῆν αὐτὴν ἀναδιδόναι, and iii. 23, ἐς εἴκοσι καὶ ἑκατόν.

⁵⁴³ οὐκ ἐβούλοντο ὠνεομένοισι πωλέειν. The Chians and the Milesians, who were fast allies, had both made terms with the Persian power, and perhaps were not altogether guiltless of the ruin of Phocæa, although at the time at which Herodotus was writing such an act would have been accounted infamous. But see note 512, above, and the first one on iv. 138.

⁵⁴⁴ DIODORUS (v. 13) gives Calaris as the name of the city founded by the Phocæans in Corsica, from which they were expelled by the Tyrrhenians. Calaris being really not in Corsica, but the principal town in Sardinia, this notice has given much trouble to the commentators, none of whom has hit on the true solution of the difficulty, viz. that the tradition varied in the early times. It is very doubtful whether in Eastern Hellas any distinct notion of the bearings or relative magnitude of the two islands was possessed till long after Herodotus. See the note on v. 106, νῆσον τὴν μεγίστην.

⁵⁴⁵ ἀναφῆναι. The readings ἀναφ-νῆναι and ἀναδῦναι have been proposed. But neither these nor the ellipse of ἐωντὸ seems necessary. The Phocæan oath seems to have been “that they would not return till they had found and produced the mass of iron which they then threw into the sea.” Horace’s proposed oath (Epod. xvi. 25) does not profess to be that of the Phocæans, as is obvious from the way he continues it (vv. 27—34).

More than half break their oath and return home.

The rest sail for Corsica and become pirates.

They are crushed by the Tyrhenes and Carthaginians, and a small remnant takes refuge at Rhegium.

The majority are stoned to death, for which divine vengeance is inflicted on the Agylleans.

⁵⁴⁵ ἄγον γὰρ δὴ καὶ ἔφερον. See notes 537, 538, above. It will be remembered that by a settlement either in Sardinia or Corsica,—if even purely for commercial purposes,—they interfered with the Tyrhene and Carthaginian trade with Spain. See note 565, below.

⁵⁴⁶ πολλῶ πλείους. This expression would seem to mean that the prisoners taken by the allied force much exceeded in number the small remnant which fled to Rhegium. It is unnecessary to suppose a lacuna.

⁵⁴⁷ ἐγένετο διάστροφα. This would be the result of the vengeance of the χθόνιοι θεοί, angry at the blood which had been shed upon the earth. See MÜLLER, Ap- pendix to the Edition of the Eumenides, §§ 54—57.

⁵⁴⁸ ἐς Δελφοὺς ἔπεμπον. The connexion of the Agylleans (Cærites) with Delphi appears from the fact, mentioned by ΣΤΡΑΒΟ, that there was an Ἀγυλλαίων καλούμενος θησαυρὸς there (v. cap. 2, p. 356). They had great reputation, he says, among the Greeks both for their courage and for their justice, in abstaining from piracy.

⁵⁴⁹ ἐναγίζουσι. To this passage probably is to be referred the gloss of ΣΥΝΔΑΣ, Ἐναγίζειν παρ' Ἡροδότῃ χῶρος φέρειν. The proper form of propitiating the dead was by libations (SOPH. Elect. 400). It may be observed that there were hot mineral springs in the neighbourhood of Cære (ΣΤΡΑΒΟ, v. cap. 2), and also a grove sacred to Silvanus (VIRGIL, Æn. viii. 597); all the usual accompaniments, therefore, of a ritual analogous to that of Amphiarus, Trophonius, Asclepius, and Faunus. See note 163, above.

The survivors build Velia, and dedicate a fane to Cyrnus, a hero.

The Teians desert their town, and build Abdera.

¹⁶⁷ πρὸς ἀνδρὸς Ποσειδωνιῆτεω μαθόντες. Cyrnus, the hero, was a mythical personage connected with the conjoint worship of Poseidon and Demeter. He was an Argive in the time of Inachus, who sailed to the Carian Chersonese, and there built a city called after his own name. Τυρίπας (see note 587) came thither afterwards to be purified from a murder he had committed (DION. SYR. v. 60, 61). Now, while Poseidonia, as its name imports, had for its tutelary deity Poseidon, Elea was famous for its worship of Demeter, inasmuch that the Romans anciently always fetched their priestesses of this goddess either from that city or Naples (CICERO, pro Balbo, § 24). Moreover, Poseidonia was a colony from Sybaris, which had a mixed population of Achæans and Troezenians, the former predominating (ARISTOT. Polit. v. p. 1303). The establishment of the fane of Cyrnus, therefore, by the counsel of a Poseidonian, was probably the sealing of a compact between the two neighbouring towns, which possessed common religious traditions and common blood, and had common enemies in the Etruscans. See notes 63 and 231, above. It may be remarked, that an account given by Scymnus Chius that Neapolis was founded by Cumæans and Phocæans harmonizes very well with the statement of Strabo that it was a colony of the former, if we understand that the Phocæans he speaks of are really those of Velia,—and in its turn explains Cicero, in the passage above cited, coupling Neapolis and Velia together.

⁵⁶³ τὰ ἐπιτασσόμενα ἐπετέλεον. See the note on iv. 138, ἦσαν δὲ οὗτοι.

⁵⁶⁴ συλλεγομένων οὐδὲν ἦσσαν ἐς τὸ Πανιώνιον. The Panionium appears to have been the ordinary place of meeting long afterwards. (See vi. 7, ἐς Πανιώνιον.) It will be remembered that, before the arrival of Harpagus, the Prieniens had been made slaves of (§ 161). If, therefore, the following story belongs to the same historical account, Bias cannot have been at the congress in the character of a delegate from Priene,—but only in a private capacity.

⁵⁶⁵ ἐς Σαρδῶν. There was excellent policy in this recommendation; for the resources of the island were one of the most important elements of the power of Carthage (see note on v. 106, νήσων τὴν μεγίστην). A footing once obtained there, the commerce with the interior of Africa and that with Spain might have been in a great measure transferred from the Phœnician to the Hellenic race, through Cyrene in the one case, and Massilia in the other. The fear of this no doubt stimulated the attack on the Phœcean settlement in Corsica

⁵⁶⁶ ἔοντος Φοίνικος. It is singular that Herodotus, having mentioned Thales twice before as a well-known character, should now, for the first time, give his description and descent. It is possible that this paragraph belongs to an early draft of the work, in which those two passages did not exist. Or it may be that here Herodotus is closely following an earlier written authority, in which Thales was introduced to notice as in the text. It is also remarkable that a Milesian should take part in the congress, as Miletus had made a peace with Cyrus. (See above, note 481.) But perhaps Thales, who had been in the Lydian camp at the beginning of the war (§ 76), was personally compromised, and, like Bias, present only as a private person at the congress. Or the advice may have been given even before the outbreak of the war.

⁵⁶⁷ τὸ δὲ εἶναι ἐν Τέφῳ. See note on vi. 7; and on vi. 8, Τήϊον.

⁵⁶⁸ μὴδὲν ἦσσαν. These two words appear to be a conjunction of two diverse readings taken up into the text, viz. μὴδὲ νομίζεσθαι καὶ ἦσσαν νομίζεσθαι. Either the one or the other of these will give an appropriate sense, "but that the rest should not even be looked upon as inhabited cities, just as would be if they were demes;" or, "should be less regarded as inhabited cities," &c. It should be remembered, that into the notion of a πόλις always entered that of self-government, in foreign relations as well as in domestic. By absolutely delegating the former of these, each member of the confederacy would become a mere parish.

⁵⁶⁹ καὶ Ἰωνας καὶ Αἰολέας. See above, note 476; and below, 593. See also note on iv. 138, ἦσαν δὲ οὗτοι.

⁵⁷⁰ Μῖνω τε κατήκοοι. This must be taken as merely resting upon tradition, and not having the certainty of history. See the distinction drawn by Herodotus himself between the stories of Minos and others of the olden time, and genuine history (iii. 122). The most ancient authentic naval engagement took place 260 years before the end of the Peloponnesian war (THUCYD. i. 18).

⁵⁷¹ καλεόμενοι Λέλεγες. PHILIP of Theangela, in an especial treatise on the relation between the Carians and Lelegians, considered the latter as standing in the same relation to the former as the Helots to the Lacedæmonians, or the Penestæ to the Thessalians (op. Athen. vi. p. 271). Both Carians and Lelegians appear as equals in the Trojan army (Iliad x. 428), and the latter have the epithet φιλοπτόλεμοι applied to them (xxi. 86); but the Villosion Schol. says that they are the inhabitants of a Pedasus in Mount Ida, mentioned Iliad xx. 92. 96.

⁵⁷² ὅσον... μακρότατον. The preposition is used in a similar phrase, ii. 34, ἐπ' ὅσον μακρότατον, and iv. 16. 192, ὅσον ἐπὶ μακρότατον.

⁵⁷³ ἅτε δέ. One MS has ἅτε δὴ, another ἅτε δὲ δὴ, which Gaisford adopts.

⁵⁷⁴ λογιμώτατον. STEPH. BYZ. (v. Καρία) has the variation δοκιμώτατον.

⁵⁷⁵ καὶ σφί τριζὰ ἐξευρήματα ἐγένετο. This seems to have been an inference (and a reasonable one) from the appearance of the armour found in the tombs of the Carians, whose remains were removed from the whole of Delos in the sixth year of the Peloponnesian war. This armour was identical with that used by the continental Carians (THUCYD. i. 8). Delos had been similarly purified, as much of it as was within sight of the temple, by Pisistratus (above, § 64), so that no argument can be drawn as to the date of the composition of this passage. The greater part of the islands of the Ægean were inhabited by "Carians and Phœnicians," pirates by profession, before the seas were swept clear by Minos (THUCYD. i. 8).

The Caunians speak a language like the Carian, but have peculiar customs;

they worship no foreign gods.

³⁷⁶ καὶ οὕτω ἐς τὴν ἡπειρον ἀπίκοντο. This would be a natural way of looking at the matter for the Cretans, if we suppose the islands and the main to have been originally covered with a Telegian population, which in the former was exterminated by Dorian and Ionian invaders. If in the latter, it was overlaid by, and absorbed into, a Carian population (a kindred race to the Mysians and Lydians), the native legends of the Carians on the main would, as naturally, represent them to be autochthonous.

³⁷⁷ Διὸς Καρίου ἱρὸν ἀρχαῖον. This Zeus Carius must not be confounded with the Zeus Στρατίος who was worshipped by the Carians alone (see note on v. 119). He belongs to an entirely distinct religious system, and is substantially identical with the Poseidon of Mantinea (PAUSANIAS, viii. 10. 4), with the Poseidon or Erechtheus associated with Athene Polias at Athens, with Triopos (see note 587), and with the primeval deity worshipped in the earliest times on the acropolis at Megara. (See the note on the family worship of Isagoras, v. 66, and that on the native legendary accounts of the early population of the Megarid, v. 76.) His native name seems to have been Ogos. Possibly he is the Poseidon mentioned by THEOPHRASTUS (op. Athen. ii. p. 42), whose temple stood by a river in Caria, the quality of whose water had been changed by volcanic action,—or, as Theophrastus expresses it, by thunderbolts entering the ground in its neighbourhood.

³⁷⁸ ἐνδύντες τὰ ὅπλα. It may be presumed from this custom that the καρτίος θεός of the Caunians was a war-god. Traces of something very similar appear in a old Westphalian saw, given by GRAMM (Deutsche Mythologie, p. 211), in which Ermin, the Teutonic Mars, is invoked to they are called Lycians from Lycus, a son of Pandion.

"rouse himself and let his fife and drums sound; for that the emperor" (probably Charlemagne) "is coming to hang him up." One may be inclined to conjecture that the Cannians were a comparatively pure remnant of the race which in Caria had amalgamated with the Leleges, and adopted their worship, — although even there, at Labranda, there was a purely martial deity. See v. 119.

⁵⁷⁹ ἡβηδὸν. This phrase occurs again in vi. 21, where see the note.

⁵⁸⁰ μέχρι οὐρων τῶν Καλυνδικῶν. See note 586.

⁵⁸¹ τὴν γὰρ Κρήτην . . . βάρβαροι. From this expression it may be inferred that the Cretan νόμιμα (whatever they were), which prevailed among the Lycians, were such as existed in that island antecedently to the great influx of Hellenes into it. See the sketch of the fortunes of Crete, apparently resting on Delphic traditions (vii. 169—171).

⁵⁸² τῶν Εὐρώπης παιδῶν. It will be observed that this is a different legend from that in the Iliad (vi. 199). There Sarpedon is made a son of Bellerophon and the daughter of the Lycian king; here he is a Cretan, son of Zeus and Europa; and in a third account (ΕΡΜΟΠΟΥ

ap. Strabon. xiv. c. i. p. 165) he comes not to Lycia, but to Miletus.

⁵⁸³ ἐς γῆν τὴν Μιλυάδα. Probably the name Μιλυάς is significant: otherwise one can hardly conceive a country called by that name while its inhabitants went by that of Solyimi. It seems likely that there is some etymological connexion, yet to be defined, between the words Μιλυάς and Τερμίλαι.

⁵⁸⁴ τότε Σόλυμοι ἐκαλέοντο. HOMER makes Bellerophon, when sent to Lycia, engage Σολύμοισι κυδαλλμοῖσι (Iliad, vi. 185), and some have thought that these Solyimi were the "ancient Lycians," whose language has been recently recovered. This can hardly be the case unless the Τερμίλαι and Σόλυμοι are identical.

⁵⁸⁵ Τερμίλαι. The researches of FELLOWES in Lycia have pretty well established the following points with regard to the Tremilæ or Termilæ, whom he considers as the "ancient Lycians," exterminated by Harpagus.

1. They are characterised by inscriptions in a distinct language, which appears to be of the Indo-Germanic family, but contains some Semitic words taken in ab extra. This may arise from intercourse with Phœnicia.

They name themselves after their mothers.

Caria is easily subdued by Harpagus.

2. In these inscriptions the parties are invariably named after their mothers, not after their fathers.

3. On the coins, with inscriptions in this language, appear the Triquetra (a triangle formed of three human legs—like the device of the Isle of Man, and that which appears on some Sicilian coins), the Asiatic Sphinx, Bellerophon, Pegasus, and Pan.

4. There is a peculiar kind of pointed arch in the rock tombs; and on the bas-reliefs the legends of Sarpedon, Glaucus, and Europa, are common; also the figures of a lion and a bull.

Fellows considers the country to have consisted of a northern and southern division, the metropolis of the former being, in old Lycian Troouneme, in Greek Tlos; that of the latter, in old Lycian perhaps Kopalte perhaps Arina, but in Greek Xanthus. Other Lycian towns are Pinara, Méré (Gr. Myra), Gaéaga (Gr. Gagæ), Trabala, Breclé, and Pedassis. Traces of Lycians are also found in the tombs of those cities which the Greeks called Calynda, Telmessus, Massicytus, Antiphellus, Limyra, and Cadyanda, all lying within the district cut off by the range of Taurus running east and west.

³⁰⁷ Λακεδαιμονίων ἄποικοι Κνίδιοι. This colony was probably founded before the Heraclide invasion, while the Laconian territory was filled with an Achæo-Mi-nyæan population (see note on v. 72), and on this supposition Herodotus's statement is reconcilable with the local traditions of the Cnidians, who considered Triopas as their founder (PAUSAN. x. 11. 1). Triopas undoubtedly belongs to the religious system which prevailed in the Peloponnese antecedently to the Heraclide invasion. His son Pelasgus was the reputed founder of the temple of Demeter Pelasgis at Argos (PAUSAN. ii. 22. 1). His daughter Messene, marrying a younger son of Lelex, king of Laconia, colonized and gave her name to Messenia (PAUSAN. iv. 1. 1), and the orgies of the μεγάλαι θεαί were brought from Eleusis to the newly-occupied territory in her time, although afterwards much extended by Lycus the son of Pandion (PAUSAN. iv. 1. 5). Under these circumstances the Apollo of the Triopian temple would be nearly identical with the Achæan deity worshipped at Thornax, and at Amyclæ (see note 236). The coins of Cnidus bear the impress of Aphrodite, Apollo, Dionysus, Athene, and Poseidon; with which last undoubtedly Triopas has much affinity. See the myths relative to him given (suo voce) in Smith's Dictionary of Biography and Mythology, and the description of the offering of the Cnidians in note 492.

³⁰⁸ τῆς χώρας . . . τὸ δὲ Τριόπιον καλεῖται. "Their domain looking seaward, and commencing from the Bubassian peninsula, that which goes by the name Triopium." I have transposed the clauses of the sentence. In the MSS which Gaisford follows, the words τὸ δὲ Τρ. κ. come between πόντον and ἀργμῆνης, allowing of no adequate sense. In the peninsula in question there was a rémevos of Artemis (called in Egyptian Bubasti, ii. 137. 156), possibly for the behoof of Egyptianized Greeks who traded to Cnidus, just as there was a temple at Nau-cratis, at which the Cnidians sacrificed (ii. 178). Dioporus gives the legend by which the Greeks connected this Parthenos, as he calls her, with the Triopian

Apollo (v. 63). It seems therefore scarcely doubtful, that the same peninsula which the Cnidians called Triopium, the navigators, whose home was in Egypt, would call the Bubassian peninsula; and it becomes highly probable, under such circumstances, that Cnidus furnished one instance among many of the intercourse of Achæans and Egyptians, at least for the purposes of commerce, in very early times. See the note on ii. 154. It should be however remarked, that Βυβασσίνης is a conjectural emendation of Voss's (by the help of a passage in POMPONIUS MELA, i. 16), all the MSS having Βυβασσίνης.

³⁰⁰ ἐγένετο. This is the conjectural emendation of Bekker, the MSS having the soriist ἐγένετο. It is equivalent to ἡμελλε γενήσεσθαι.

³⁰¹ ἦσαν δὲ Πηδασέες. This phrase seems to indicate that, at the time Herodotus was writing, a town Πηδασα no longer existed. These Pedasians were originally, according to some accounts, Leleges from Ida (see note on viii. 87, ἀνδρῶν τε Καλυδόνων). STRABO says that in his time the region was called Pedasis, but that there were no traces of the town. Possibly when Miletus was taken (vi. 90), and the land round about it given to the Pedasians, Pedasa was razed to the ground. Strabo speaks of traces of Leleges remaining at Miletus, as well as throughout Caria (τάφοι καὶ ἐρύματα καὶ ἔχρη κατοικιῶν δέκνυνται, xiii. c. 1, p. 128). The remains at Miletus are perhaps due to the occupation mentioned by Herodotus (vi. 20).

¹⁹² ὥς ἐς τὸ Ξάνθιον πεδῖον ἤλασε. It will be observed that Herodotus is entirely silent as to the subjugation of the northern division of Lycia (see note 585), and also does not mention any of the many towns in the country, other than Xanthus and Patara, with which there was the most habitual commercial intercourse on the part of the Greeks. For a possible reason of the fragmentary account given of the campaign in Caria, Caunia, and Lycia, see the next note.

¹⁹³ τὴν μὲν δὴ Ξάνθον οὕτως ἔσχε ὁ Ἄρπαγος. In the monument discovered by FELLOWES (a model of which is in the British Museum), which is supposed to represent the capture of Xanthus, it has been remarked that the costume both of the besiegers and defenders is the same, and is the ordinary Greek armour. Perhaps this may arise from the circumstance of the monument having been executed long after the event it commemorates.—Leake and Head conjecture 150 years;—but on the other hand it may have been by a force levied in Ionia and Æolis, under Persian command (see § 171, init.), that Xanthus was reduced, without Asiatic troops being employed in that part of the operations. And this may furnish a clue to the very strange fact noticed in the last note. Herodotus apparently has only Hellenic traditions to follow: and the Hellenic forces employed by Harpagus may have acted only against the particular places he mentions. Of what was done by the other corps of the grand army they would be ignorant; and therefore no memory of the transactions would be preserved. And also, as becoming early incorporated among the Persian auxiliaries, the circumstances of their own subjugation would die away in their recollections, and thus produce the similar omission noticed in the note 476. It may be also doubted whether, in some important instances, the vassalage of the Ionians and Æolians to the Persian king was altogether involuntary. See the note on iv. 138, ἦσαν δὲ οὗτοι.

μῶν διαστοιβάζοντες⁵⁹⁹, εἰδειμαν πρῶτα μὲν τῆς τάφρου τὰ χεῖλα, mortar;

⁵⁹⁵ ἦν Βαβυλῶν. Herodotus speaks of this city in the past tense, a form of speech appropriate to an extremely altered condition. Compare ἦσαν δὲ Πηδασέες above, § 175, and THUCYDIDES, i. 10: ὅτι μὲν Μυκῆναι μικρὸν ἦν, (Mycenæ having at the time he wrote been dismantled by the Argives.) So, below, the expression ἐκεκόσμητο, and § 180, τετελίσσιντο is used.

⁵⁹⁶ ἐκεκόσμητο. Here again the tense used is such as to imply that the state of things described no longer existed. The dimensions assigned by Herodotus, if reduced to English measures, give in round numbers for the periphery of the rampart 55 miles, 340 feet for the height, and 85 feet for the thickness of the walls. Some idea may be formed of the magnitude of the work by conceiving a viaduct for five or six lines of railway of the height of St. Paul's Cathedral carried from the Shoreditch to the Cambridge Station of the Eastern Counties Railway. Supposing the wall to be at the summit only half the thickness of the base, the mere laying of the bricks above the level of the ditch would, at an extremely favourable computation, have employed the incessant labour of 178,000 men for eleven months. This does not include those employed in excavating the earth, making the bricks, preparing the mortar, overlooking the task-work, or any other service whatever.

⁵⁹⁷ μέζων τρισὶ δακτύλοισι. There is a good deal of difficulty in understanding this notice if we suppose the δακτύλοι to be each the twenty-fourth part of the common πῆχυς, which would be the obvious way of taking the passage. БОРЕКН (Metrologische Untersuchungen, pp. 212, seqq.) has shown very satisfactorily that the βασιλῆος πῆχυς stood to the common one in the relation of the cube-root of 3 to the cube-root of 2. He estimates the former at 234·654975 Paris lines (= 20·8397 inches), and the latter at 204·99 lines. Now, if the "three dactyls" be common ones, the addition of them to the common cubit will give only 230·615 lines, which is 4·04 lines too little. If, however, they are royal ones, their addition will make the royal cubit 234·322 lines, which is only $\frac{1}{100}$ of a line too small, quite an inconsiderable quantity in practice, being about the $\frac{1}{16}$ of an inch. For a reason why the royal πῆχυς should have been tacitly adopted, see note on ii. 168. It was nearly coincident with the Egyptian and the Samian, i.e. with the measure familiar to merchants.

⁵⁹⁸ ἐλκύσαντες πλύνθους. See below, ii. 136, πλύνθους εἰρυσαν.

The city is divided by the Euphrates.

"interposing layers of wattled reeds." According to KENNELL, modern travellers find a layer of this description "at every sixth, seventh, or eighth course in Agger-luf, apparently a Babylonish building; and M. Beauchamp found them at every course in some of the buildings in Babylon." (Geography of Herodotus, p. 353.) RICH (Memoir on Babylon) confirms this statement. The walls of Sais are built in a similar manner. See WILKINSON, quoted in note on ii. 169.

⁵⁹⁹ οἰκήματα μονόκωλα. These appear to be a mere covered way along the summit of the wall, on each side of it, something like what is seen in the streets of Bern, and in parts of Chester. One great advantage would be the shade which it furnished to foot-passengers. It does not seem necessary to translate τεθρίπῃ περιέλασιν, "room to turn a quadriga," the sense "room for a quadriga to drive round the walls" being as appropriate. STRABO's account is, that there is good room to pass: ἡς τεθρίπῃ ἀνατιοδρομεῖν ἀλλήλους ῥαδίως (xvi. c. i. p. 335).

⁶⁰¹ ἑκτὼς ἡμερέων ὁδὸν ἀπὸ Βαβυλῶνος. If these be reckoned as caravan journeys of sixteen miles a day, the site of Babylon may be very fairly determined. Taking the ruin now called the tower of Belus for the centre of the city, its latitude is 32° 31' N.; and 128 geographical miles above, reckoning along the bank of the Euphrates, is a town called Hiti, near which are some bituminous fountains. These are no doubt the ποταμὸς οὐ μέγας, and Hiti the Ἴς of Herodotus. (KENNELL, Geography of Herodotus, p. 350.) ⁶⁰² τετείχιστο. See note 595 and 596.

⁶⁰³ φάρσεα. This is probably the Greek form of the Chaldaic word which signified a division. The root is apparently the same as that of the word Pharisee, and of the expressions apharsin and peres in DANIEL (v. 25, 28).

⁶⁰⁴ ἐξίει. Schaefer writes this word, which is a present tense, ἐξίει. But Schweighäuser rightly argues that it must be regarded as derived from the full form ἐξίει, not by the contraction of the two last syllables into one, which would be alien from the genius of the Ionic dialect, but by the elision of the penultimate syllable for the sake of euphony. This proceeding would be analogous to the derivation of αἰτέο, ἐξηγέο, φοβέαι, προθυμέαι, Ἡρακλέοι, from αἰτέο, ἐξηγέο, φοβέαι, προθυμέαι, Ἡρακλέεοι. See also notes 138 and 314, above.

In each division a large edifice existed: in one the royal palace; in the other, the temple of Belus still remains.

⁶⁰⁵ τριωρόφων τε καὶ τετρωρόφων. The MSS have τριωρόφων, which is probably a mere mistake. DIONYSIUS (Art. Rhet. i. 3) seems to have found τετρωρόφων καὶ ἑξωρόφων, which is more likely to have been from a variation in the MS which he used, than from a slip of the memory. See note 352.

⁶⁰⁶ ἐπήσαν. The manuscript S has ἐστῆκεσαν.

⁶⁰⁷ ἐν δὲ φάρσει ἑκατέρῳ. S, V, b, d leave out what follows to the beginning of § 184. It is very remarkable that STRABO speaks of the walls of Babylon and of the hanging garden as if they still existed, though he does not positively say so. But of the temple of Belus (which he calls Βήλου τάφος) he expressly says it was in ruins, having been destroyed, according to report, by Xerxes (see note 631). Alexander, he adds, wished to restore it, but was prevented by the magnitude of the works; for the clearing away of the rubbish employed 10,000 men, and just afterwards the king died, and his successors thought nothing more of the matter (xvi. c. i. p. 336). See note 610.

⁶⁰⁸ ἦεν τὰ βασιλῆα. The MS F has εἶεν τὰ β. Gronovius reads from conjecture ἐν τῷ μὲν τὰ β., which is approved by Bekker. Another conjectural change is ἐν τῷ μὲν ἐν τ. β. But there appears to be an intentional opposition between the palace "which had existed" and the temple of Bel which was "remaining to the author's time." See, however, the last note.

⁶⁰⁹ I should be inclined to transpose the clause περιβόλῳ μεγάλῳ τε καὶ ἰσχυρῷ, and to read τετεῖχιστο ἐν μέσῳ, περιβόλῳ μεγάλῳ τε καὶ ἰσχυρῷ, ἐν τῷ ἦεν τὰ βασιλῆα, ἐν δὲ τῷ ἐτέρῳ, κ.τ.λ.

⁶¹⁰ καὶ ἐς ἐμὲ τοῦτο ἔτι ἔδν. It is to me doubtful whether this is the assertion of Herodotus as an eye-witness. See the passage from STRABO, quoted in note 607. Strabo's account of the original dimensions of the tomb (which he says had been a pyramid) makes each side one stade, and the height the same. He makes no mention of a precinct, probably because the space between it and the central monument was covered with the ruins of the latter, and the whole area was reckoned as the base of the tomb. The dimensions which he gives of the walls of the city are very much below those of Herodotus. See the note on iv. 124, τῶν ἔτι ἐς ἐμὲ τὰ εἰρηκία οἶα ἦν.

⁶¹¹ Θηβαῖος. The MSS which have this form here have in ii. 52 the more common one, Θηβαίου. In ii. 54, all agree in this form. So little constancy is there in the existing MSS of this author.

⁶¹² οὐ γὰρ ἂν αἰεὶ ἐστὶ χρηστήριον αὐτόθι. The tradition ran, that the deity divided his time between Delos and Patara, passing the summer in the former, and the winter in the latter (Strabius, ad Aen. iv. 143). Hence Horace uses the title "Delius et Patareus Apollo." (3 Od. iv. 64.)

⁶¹⁶ τὸν χρόνον ἐκείνον. It is not very easy to explain this phrase, if we suppose it to have come from the hand of Herodotus. I should be almost inclined to suspect the passage ἦν δὲ ἐν τῇ τεμένει . . . τὸν ἀνδριάντα, a subsequent annotation, and then τ. χρ. ἐκεῖν. might mean "that time of which Herodotus was just speaking," in the present tense. See note 532.

⁶¹⁹ τῆς δὲ Βαβυλῶνος ταύτης. The manuscripts S, V, b, d, here resume the thread of the narrative from § 181.

⁶²⁰ ἐν τοῖσι Ἀσσυριοῖσι λόγοισι. In this portion of his work (which it would seem he never executed), Herodotus probably intended to insert the capture of Nineveh by Cyaxares, of which he promises an account above (§ 106). Compare a similar case, vii. 213. In one MS of ARISTOTLE, the word Ἡρόδοτος stands instead of Ἡρόδοτος, which is the reading of four other MSS, in a passage (Hist. Animal. viii. 18) which speaks of a work called the πολιορκία τῆς Νίνου: but this doubtful reference is the only one to be found to such a work in all the remaining writers of antiquity.

⁶²¹ τῇ οὖνομα ἦν Σεμίραμις. STRABO (xvi. c. i. p. 333) says that there are attributed to her, besides the works at Babylon, πολλὰ καὶ ἄλλα κατὰ πᾶσαν γῆν σχεδόν, ὅση τῆς ἡπείρου ταύτης (Asia) ἐστὶ· τὰ τε χώματα ἀ δὴ καλοῦσι Σεμράμιδος, καὶ τεῖχη, καὶ ἐρυμάτων κατασκευαί, καὶ συρίγγων τῶν ἐν αὐτοῖς, καὶ ὑδρείων, καὶ κλιμάκων, καὶ διαρῦχων ἐν ποταμοῖς καὶ λίμναις, καὶ ὁδῶν, καὶ γεφυρῶν. In the early history of Armenia, by MOSES of Chorene, works are attributed to her in the neighbourhood of the lake Van, which appear to be products of the imagination, suggested by volcanic phenomena. At the present day, works which were formerly attributed to Semiramis are ascribed to Nimrod (see note 628). The dyke described in the next section is, not improbably, the very work which STRABO (xi. c. 14, p. 461) describes as τὸ τῆς Σεμράμιδος καλούμενον διατείχισμα, which was on the Tigris, at no great distance from Opis.

⁶²² ἐν δὲ δὴ καὶ τὴν Νῖνον. This capture is represented by Herodotus as taking place in the latter part of the reign of Cyaxares (§ 106). But see note 352.

Babylon had many kings of note, who built the walls and the temples, and among them two women.—
Semiramis, and, five generations afterwards, Nitocris,—both notable for their engineering operations with regard to the river.

⁶²² Ἀρδέρικκα. The σταθμοὶ in the neighbourhood of Susa, where Darius located the captive Eretrians (vi. 119), was called by the same name, which was doubtless significant in Chaldaic. See the note on that passage.

⁶²⁵ ἔλυτρον λίμνη, "a reservoir for a pool." Thus ἔλυτρα ὀδάτων (iv. 173) are "tanks" to hold the potable water.

⁶²⁶ ἐς τὸ ὕδωρ αἰεὶ ὀρύσσουσα, "digging till she came to water." This is not slag-nant, but spring water, that which rose up from a pervious stratum, after the alluvium of the surface had been removed. I believe that Herodotus never uses the word ὕδωρ except where potable water is meant.

⁶²⁷ ὥς ὃ τε ποταμὸς βραδύτερος εἴη. Here no doubt we have the real reason of the formation of the canal. It was made to equalize the variable supply by the river, which rendered navigation impossible. The pool too, besides its uses as a reservoir, probably formed a dock for the barges to lie in, which, before Babylon was depopulated, must have brought provisions for the use of the population within the walls. The κρηπίς was a stone quay which ran round the margin. But the Greeks, quite unfamiliar with artificial navigation, viewed all the works as parts of a system of defence. See the next note.

⁶²⁸ ἔκ τε τῶν πλῶν ἐκδέκται περίοδος τῆς λίμνης μακρῇ. It seems probable that an additional supply of water for the "pool" was gained by running a dam across the whole or a great part of the river, so that the navigation of the upper Euphrates ended here. The following passage from LAYARD'S Nineveh will serve to illustrate not only the text, but also the whole account of the great engineering works attributed to the two queens. The writer was passing down the Tigris on a raft in the middle of April, and in the vicinity of Nimroud "the waters of the river, swollen by the melting of the snows on the Armenian hills, were broken into a thousand foaming whirlpools by an artificial barrier built across the stream. On the eastern bank the soil had been washed away by the current, but a solid mass of masonry still withstood its impetuosity. The Arab who guided my small raft gave himself up to religious ejaculations as we approached this formidable cataract, over which we were carried with some violence. Once safely through the danger, he explained to me that this unusual change in the quiet face of the river was caused by a great dam which had been built by Nimrod, and that in the autumn, before the winter rains, the huge stones of which it was constructed, squared and united by cramps of iron, were frequently visible above the surface of the stream. It was, in fact, one of those monuments of a great people, to be found in all the rivers of Mesopotamia, which were undertaken to ensure a constant supply of water to the innumerable canals spreading like network over the surrounding country, and which, even in the days of Alexander, were looked upon as the works of an ancient nation. No wonder that the traditions of the present inhabitants of the land should assign them to one of the founders of the human race! The Arab explained the connexion between the dam and the city built by Athur, the lieutenant of Nimrod, the vast ruins of which were then before us, and of its purpose as a causeway for the mighty hunter to cross to the opposite palace now represented by the mound of Hammum Ali." (Chap. i. p. 9.)

⁶²⁹ τῆς πόλιος ἐούσης δύο φαρσέων, "the city being one composed of two divisions;" an uncommon construction. There is said to be an ample supply of stone a little above Hit, where the bitumen springs were (see note 601), and from hence probably the masses used in the works near Babylon were floated down. That they came from a distance seems implied in the expression λίθους ἀγαγομένην, § 185.

⁶³⁰ κατὰ μέσσην κου μάλιστα τὴν πόλιν. It is not easy to conceive the operations described by Herodotus as taking place in the order in which he represents. The natural course would be, first to dig the basin, then to form a dam across the river just below the intended entrance, and, finally, to open this. If the last operation took place just when the river began to fall, a considerable time would elapse before the basin filled, and in the meanwhile the bed below the dam would be left dry, and the χεῖλεα τοῦ ποταμοῦ κατὰ τὴν πόλιν might be built up with bricks. But such a dam would not be in the middle of the city, but above it. Possibly a second one was built, the γέφυρα spoken of by Herodotus, in order to head up the water and keep a constant level in the neighbourhood of the palace; an effect which would be produced if a supply was furnished by sluices, some communicating between the "pool" and the "old bed," and the others in the upper dam. This supply would take place only when the river was low, so that its level became inferior to that of "the pool," and the latter, by letting the water out of it, would become a swamp, and oblige those who came down the Euphrates to make a great circuit, thus giving a colour to the notion expressed above (see note 627). It will be seen that all the particular operations spoken of by Herodotus may have taken place, but not in the manner or with the object he represents. Nothing is more likely than that he was unaware of the existence of the upper dam, which, if it existed in his time, was κατ'ἐπερθε πολλῶ Βαβυλωνος (§ 185).

⁶²¹ Δαρείῳ. Ctesias does not appear to have related any expedition of Darius against Babylon, nor any profanation of the tomb by him. But he does make Xerxes open the sarcophagus (πύλος) of Belitanas (= Belus) there, which was religiously preserved, and fail in the attempt to fill it with oil, as, says Ctesias, καὶ ἐπεγέγραπτο (ap. Photium, Bibl. p. 39, ed. Bekker). ÆLIAN (Var. Hist. xiii. 3) gives the same account, with fuller particulars, one of which is that the sarcophagus was of glass,—a circumstance which derives some plausibility from the discoveries recently made at Nineveh. STRABO (xvi. c. 1, p. 336) likewise says that the tomb of Belus was in ruins,—“destroyed, as they say, by Xerxes.”

⁶³³ Λαβυνήτου. It is questionable whether this name, like the Etruscan Lars, is not a title of honour or dignity rather than a proper name. "Labynetos the Babylonian" is mentioned in conjunction with "Syennesis the Cilician" (above, § 74), as mediating a peace between the Lydians and Medes in the year 610 B.C. A Labynetos is also represented as king of the Babylonians, and an ally of Croesus in § 77. It is natural to presume that this latter Labynetos is the same with the one in the text, according to the view of Herodotus; but it does not, from Herodotus, appear in what exact relation he stood to the Labynetos mentioned § 74. Neither does it seem certain that the historical cycle to which the account of Babylon (§§ 178—191) belongs, contained the account of the Lydian and Median war (§§ 73, 74).

⁶³⁴ τοῦ Χοάσπεω ποταμοῦ. See note on v. 49.

⁶³⁵ τοῦ μούνου πίνει βασιλεὺς. RENNELL remarks on the much greater importance attached by Asiatics than by Europeans to the quality of water. It may also be observed that some waters travel much better than others; and that this property was considered in the regulation in question seems evident from the boiling the water before bottling it. When MOUNTSTUART ELPHINSTONE went on his embassy to Caubul, Bahawal Khan sent him four brazen jars of pure water from the Hyphasis, sealed with his own seal, several days' journey into the desert east of the Indus (Caubul, p. 15). See too the commendation of the Taurus (iv. 91). For the extremely unusual form ἐλαύνῃσι in the next sentence, several MSS have ἐλαύνει.

⁶³⁶ ἐλύνειτο ἐπὶ Γύνδῃ ποταμῷ. It must be remembered that the march of Cyrus upon Babylon takes place from Agbatana, not from Susa. (See above, § 153.) This would make it not unreasonable to suppose the Gyndes the Diyeleh, which falls into the Tigris from the East a little below Baghdad,—a site which appears to be required by the route of Aristagoras (v. 52). But RENNELL remarks that there is great inaccuracy in the topography, as the language of the author suggests that Opis lies on the Tigris below the junction of the Gyndes; whereas it appears from the Anabasis of Xenophon (ii. 4. 25) that Opis was twenty parasangs higher up the stream than Sitace, and Sitace above the junction of the Diyeleh. (Geography of Herodotus, p. 202.) Certainly the vagueness is against the supposition of Herodotus having himself seen the site of Cyrus's exploit, the story of which appears to be a later legend

πηγαὶ ἐν Ματιηνοῖσι οὖρεσι⁶³⁷, ῥέει δὲ διὰ Δαρδανέων⁶³⁸, ἐκδιδοὶ δὲ ἐς ἕτερον ποταμὸν Τήγριν ὃ δὲ παρὰ Ὀπιῳ πόλιν ῥέων ἐς τὴν Ἐρυθρὴν θάλασσαν ἐκδιδοῖ· τοῦτον δὲ τὸν Γύνδην ποταμὸν ὡς διαβαίνειν ἐπειράτο ὁ Κῦρος, ἐόντα νηυσιπέρητον⁶³⁹, ἐνθαυτὰ οἱ τῶν τις ἱρῶν ἵππων τῶν λευκῶν⁶⁴⁰ ὑπὸ ὕβριος ἐσβὰς ἐς τὸν ποταμὸν, διαβαίνειν ἐπειράτο· ὃ δὲ μιν συμψήσας ὑποβρύχιον οἰχώκεε φέρων. κάρτα τε δὴ ἐχαλέπαινε τῷ ποταμῷ ὁ Κῦρος τοῦτο ὑβρίσαιντι, καὶ οἱ ἐπηπείλησε οὕτω δὴ μιν ἀσθενέα ποιήσειν, ὥστε τοῦ λοιποῦ καὶ γυναικάς μιν εἰπετέως τὸ γόνυ οὐ βρεχούσας διαβήσεσθαι· μετὰ δὲ τὴν ἀπειλὴν, μετεῖς τὴν ἐπὶ Βαβυλῶν· στρατεύουσιν διαίρει τὴν στρατιὴν δίχῃ, διελὼν δὲ, κατέτεινε σχοι νοτενέας ὑποδέξας διώρυχας⁶⁴¹ ὀγδώκοντα καὶ ἑκατὸν παρ' ἐκάτερον to account for certain works of irrigation. (See note 621.) The city Opis was, according to Xenophon, one of importance; and the especial particulars which a Greek merchant would know of it would be that it was in the vicinity of an important water communication with the Eastern markets. As to whether it was higher or lower than the natural mouth of the Gyndes he would neither know nor care. The importance of the site for a commercial city is evident from the fact that it was the point up to which Alexander made the Tigris navigable from the sea (STRABO, xvi. cap. i. p. 338).

⁶³⁷ ἐν Ματιηνοῖσι οὖρεσι. See note 681.

⁶³⁸ διὰ Δαρδανέων. One MS (K) has Διαρδανέων. RAWLINSON (Geogr. Journal, vol. ix. p. 28), with great plausibility, proposes to read διὰ Δαρνέων. The Diyaleh in its upper course flows through a remarkable defile called Darneh (lat. 35° 10', long. 46° 30'), which he identifies with the Darna of PROLEMY, and supposes to be alluded to here.

⁶³⁹ ἐόντα νηυσιπέρητον, "being a river crossed by a ferry," or possibly "by a bridge of boats." The Diyaleh "is crossed by a bridge of boats a little above its mouth, and its breadth is there sixty yards." (Penny Cyclopædia, vol. iii. p. 267.) The same writer, speaking from personal observation, says, "at Bakooba, about forty miles above its mouth, it may, during the summer, be forded on horseback, although its stream is very rapid."

⁶⁴⁰ τῶν τις ἱρῶν ἵππων τῶν λευκῶν. This feature in the narrative, like that of the transport of the Choaspes water, bespeaks a pomp and state proper to the Persian kings after the time of Darius (see vii. 40), but hardly before. It implies a high development of the worship of the Sun-god (see vii. 54, 55); and this circumstance, combined with the number 360 (that of the days in the Babylonian and Egyptian year), leads me to think that the temple of Belus at Babylon is probably the locality where this story originated. The number 360 entered so much into Persian ideas in after-times, that STRABO speaks of a popular song, of which the subject is the useful qualities of the date-palm, and of these that number is enumerated (xvi. c. i. p. 343).

⁶⁴¹ κατέτεινε σχιδνοτενέας . . . διώρυχας. There seems little doubt this work was entirely one of irrigation, by which the neighbourhood both of the Euphrates and the Tigris was brought into a state of garden cultivation. The Greeks probably became generally familiar, for the first time, with this process, by the expedition of the 10,000. XENOPHON (Anab. ii. 4. 13) describes very graphically two canals running out of the Tigris, which the army passed, the one on a bridge, the other on a raft of seven boats: κατετέμνητο δὲ ἐξ αὐτῶν καὶ τάφροι ἐπὶ τὴν χώραν αἱ μὲν πρώται μεγάλαι, ἔπειτα δὲ ἐλάττους, τέλος δὲ καὶ μικροὶ δαχτυλῶδες, ὥσπερ ἐν τῇ Ἑλλάδι ἐπὶ τὰς μελίσσας. And, if the Gyndes be the Diyaleh, that river actually formed the principal feeder of a system of irrigation on the east bank of the Tigris. "The most important of these canals," says an eye-witness, "is the Naharawan, which commenced near the river was far above the city, and was already empty. As it was the summer time, its bottom would (if the theory in the note 630 be well founded) be little, if at all, below the level of the neighbouring river. The water therefore would have had to run up hill in order to get into it from the centre of Babylon. But, if the level of the pool be supposed such as to admit of the operation as described by Herodotus, it could not have been a swamp at the time, as he states it to have been,—nor could the operation of Nitocris ever have taken place.

The whole of the proceeding is very intelligible however, if the works were such as imagined in the note above referred to, and the siege was laid not to the whole town but to the palace-fortress,—no longer standing, apparently, in the time of Herodotus, but which DIONORUS (ii. 8 and 11), probably from Ctesias, and STRABO (xvi. p. 335), describe as built on the bank of the river, with well-watered ornamental gardens. These could not have been kept up in the dry season without damming up the water, as suggested in the above note. The destruction of this dam would readily and rapidly effect the lowering of the water, and a scaling party being directed upon the wall at the farthest part from the dam, where of course the water would first be sufficiently low, would meet but little opposition. The scientific Babylonians probably looked upon the Persians as the generals of 1745 might on the Highland invaders of England, and, when Cyrus appeared to withdraw his army, thought the risk was over. From the suggestion of Herodotus, εἴτε ἄλλος οἱ ἀπορέοντι ἐπεθήκετο, one may conjecture that a Babylonian deserter, or some other person, might have pointed out to him the mode of striking a fatal blow.

⁶⁴⁴ κύρτῃ. The MS S has the reading κυρτήφ, from an incorporation of the marginal reading κύρτῃ with the textual κύρτῃ, or the converse.

⁶⁴⁵ οὐ μανθάνειν ἐαλωκότας. ARISTOTLE, speaking of the magnitude of the city, says, ἥ γέ φασιν ἐαλωκυίας τριτήν ἡμέραν οὐκ αἰσθῆσθαι τι μέρος τῆς πόλεως. (Politic. iii. p. 1276.) The statement given by Herodotus seems to result from a blending of this fact together with the other well-known one, that a festival was going on in the palace. It may be observed in reference to the explanation given in note 643, that a passage of the Old Testament (JEREMIAH li. 31), which in our version appears opposed to it, is not at all so in Dathe's translation. In the LXX it does not exist.

⁶⁴⁶ Τριτανταίχμῃ. The MSS vary between this form, Τριτανταίχμης and Τριτανταίχμης. But all have the form in the text in vii. 82. At the same time it will be observed that the name of the father is in that place Artabanus.

⁶⁴⁷ τὸν νομὸν τοῦτον. The term νομός is more especially applied to the territorial divisions of Egypt, as appears from many passages in book ii. See note 474.

⁶⁴⁸ ἡ δὲ ἀρτάβη, μέτρον ἐὼν Περσικόν. The artabe was the name of an Egyptian as well as a Persian measure, and is said to have a Coptic root. (See the commentators on HERODOTUS sub ο.) This would lead one to suppose that the name is either Egyptian or Babylonian. But the dimensions given in the text are different from those of the Egyptian artabe. This, according to BOECKH (Metrolologische Untersuchungen, pp. 242, 3) was equal to seventy-two Roman sextarii, and identical with the Hebrew Bath or Ephah, and the Attic Metretres. But there was also a more modern Egyptian artabe, which stood to the other in the relation 20 : 27. The measure in the text is much more than the greater of these, as it = 72 + 24 + 3.2 (= 102) sextarii, and it bears no relation to any known system of measurement. Perhaps the true explanation is, that the unit of measurement in which the tribute was paid entered into the metrological system of the Persian mountaineers, somewhat as the artabe entered into the more scientific scale of the Egyptians and the Chaldeans, and was therefore called by that name. On the eastern coast of England, when the fishing boats come in, the herrings are sold by "the hundred,"—which however means 140 in practice. A foreigner, who witnessed this transaction, might naturally speak of "a hundred" as a Lowestoft word of number meaning seven score. It is by just the converse process that the common people ordinarily speak of a 4lb. loaf as a quartern.

⁶⁴⁹ πολεμιστέων. This is the reading of S, V, δ, and d. Other MSS have πολεμιστηρίων, which Gaisford adopts. The well-known passage in THEOCRITUS (xv. 51),

ἵπποι τῷ βασιλεῖ,

favours the reading in the text. Similarly Bacchylus is called πολεμιστῆς ἀγαθός by STRABO; and DIONYSIUS (ii. 41) speaks of πολεμιστὰς ἵπποι in India.

⁶⁵⁰ ἕται μὲν ὀλίγη. The writer quoted in note 639, says that at Baghdad it is very rare for rain to fall between the beginning of May and the middle of September. A considerable amount of water, he says, falls in the autumn, but the whole number of days on which it rains is probably not more than twenty-five in the year. LAYARD (Nineveh, p. 7) describes the luxuriant vegetation of the plains after the spring rains, which appear to fall in January (p. 53).

Irrigation of the plain of Babylon unlike that of Egypt.

The soil excellent for cereals, but producing nothing else.

⁶⁵¹ οὐ, κατὰπερ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ, αὐτοῦ τοῦ ποταμοῦ ἀναβαίνοντος. In the present state of the country, the canals and sluices not being kept up, inundations are very common after the melting of the Armenian snows. But the arrangements mentioned by Herodotus in the text both saved the surplus water brought down for summer irrigation, and prevented the overflow in April and May. The reference to Egypt as a standard of comparison is to be remarked. (See note 474.)

⁶⁵² κηλωνητοῖσι. The sinking of the level of the water in the dry season would render machinery requisite for raising it from the ditches to the land.

⁶⁵³ πρὸς ἥλιον τετραμμένη τὸν χειμερινόν, i. e. turned towards the point of the horizon where the sun rises at the winter solstice.

⁶⁵⁴ οἰκητο. This reading is preserved in a single MS. Three others have οἰκῆτο, one οἰάκητο, and three οἰκάκητο. These variations are curious, as all arising primarily out of marginal alternative readings, οἰ(α)κητο. The last, which apparently proceeded from alternative readings connected by the letter κ (= καί), perhaps became modified by the copyist imagining the word to be compounded from οἶκος and οἰκείν.

⁶⁵⁵ οὐδὲ πειράται ἀρχὴν φέρειν, "there is not even a pretence at its producing them." By τὰ ἄλλα δ. the writer would doubtless mean only those familiar to the Greeks, the date palm abounding throughout the whole region to such an extent that STRABO (xvi. c. 1, p. 343) says, that, with the exception of barley, the Babylonians get every thing from the palm, καὶ γὰρ ἄρτος καὶ οἶνος καὶ ὄξος καὶ μέλι καὶ ἄλφιτα, τὰ τε πλεῖστα παντοῖα ἐκ τοῦτου τοῖς δὲ πυρῆσιν ἀπ' ἀνθρώπων οἱ χαλκεῖς χρῶνται· βρεχόμενοι δὲ τοῖς σιτισμομένοις εἰς τροφὴν εἰσι βουσί καὶ προβάτοισι. It was the only wood too which they used in building. (Id. ib. p. 336.) See too the song described in note 640. Also the observation relative to the olive and vine must be taken as confined to the plains watered by the rivers, that is, to the vicinity of the commercial track: for the vine and olive are cultivated largely in the hills, and not only appear on the Niniveh sculptures, but in the speech of Rabshakeh describing the attractions of the country (2 Kings xviii. 32).

⁶⁵⁷ νομέας ἰτέης, "ribs of willow wood." The expression νομέας is probably a technical one in the art of ship-building. It is used again, ii. 96, in the same sense, but in no other writer. A similar peculiarity of usage occurs in the word πλήκτρον just below, which is nowhere else employed to designate an oar.

⁶⁵⁹ βίκους φοινικητοὺς. There seems no necessity either to alter the latter of these words into φοινικητόν, or to suppose that the expression βίκους φοινικητοὺς should be rendered "casks of palm-wood." β. φ. probably meant "palm-jars;" and the words οἶνον πλέους are added to indicate that it was not the empty vessels which constituted the freight (as in the case mentioned ii. 6), but that they came to bring the wine in them. That the palm-wine was well known in Egypt, as well as at Babylon, appears from the use made of it in embalming (ii. 86), and from the story of the presents sent by Cambyses to the Æthiopians (iii. 20-22), which is undoubtedly of Egyptian origin.

⁶⁶⁰ καὶ ὁ μὲν ἔσω ἔλκει τὸ πλήκτρον ὁ δὲ ἔξω ὠθέει. The action described is that commonly seen in boats on the Swiss lakes, where the foremost boatman pulls his oar, with his face turned sternwards, while his companion stands up and pushes with his, looking bowwards in order to be able to steer the better. In the Euphrates' boats, both men stood, the sole moving power of the vessel being the force of the stream, and the hands being only required for guidance.

⁶⁶¹ ταλάντων. Doubtless Babylonian talents (see note on iii. 89), which would give about 250 tons.

⁶⁶² ἀπεκήρυξαν, "their habit is to sell by auction." This is the frequentative use of the aorist.

⁶⁶³ ἀνὰ τὸν ποταμὸν γὰρ δὴ οὐκ οἷά τέ ἐστι πλέειν. SHIEL (Geogr. Journal, viii. p. 89) says that at the present time boats do not go up and down the Tigris above Mosul, but that kelecks, or floats of inflated sheepskins, descend from Diarbekir to Mosul, where the skins are sold.

⁶⁶⁴ χλανιδιον λευκὸν περιβαλλόμενος, "a white shawl, wrapping it about him," i. e. for a girdle, which serves the Orientals as a purse. The linen dress was doubtless worn next to the skin from motives of cleanliness. Compare the Egyptian garb (ii. 81).

⁶⁶⁵ παραπλήσια τῇσι Βοιωτῇσι ἐμβάσι. LAYARD (Nineveh, ii. p. 324) gives a representation of these slippers, which are very peculiar. They cover the heel, but leave the fore-part of the foot quite exposed, and the toes only protected by a sole laced over the instep, without any return over the points. This exactly answers to the description of the Theban women's shoe (DICOMARCHUS, quoted by Bauer ad loc.); and it may be remarked that the whole Assyrian dress has an effeminate character, which is explained by DIODORUS (ii. 6) as arising from the circumstance of its having been adopted first by the Medes and afterwards by the Persians from the costume of Semiramis.

⁶⁶⁶ ἔνευ ἐπισήμου. Probably these devices were sacred emblems; and perhaps the deity under whose especial protection each individual was determined the particular symbol adopted. The eagle seems rather a Persian than a Babylonian symbol, which the dove perhaps was (see note 366). The lily was probably the lotus. The apple and the rose may have been parts of the lily called Neiwmidiun speciosum (see note on ii. 92), a plant

⁶⁶⁷ ταύτας ὅκως συναγάγοιεν πάσας. These words are nearly identical in sense with the clause which follows them, συναγαγεῖν πάσας being scarcely distinguishable from ἐς ἐν χωρίον ἐσάγεω ἀλάας, unless on the supposition of the first collection being from the surrounding country into a village, and the second the assemblage of the girls thus selected at the auction-mart. But, as the author states that the sale took place in every village, the first step in this proceeding seems precluded. It seems not impossible that here the text has again been rendered turbid by the mixture of different MSS.

⁶⁶⁸ ἀπάγεσθαι. The MSS vary between this form, ἀγάγεσθαι, ἀνάγεσθαι and ἂν ἀγεσθαι. Gaisford adopts the last. For the use of οὕτω, see note 22, above.

⁶⁶⁹ ὁ μὲν νυν κάλλιστος νόμος. From hence to the end of the paragraph appears to be a kind of note, perhaps added by the author himself.

Ὁ δὲ δὴ αἰσχιστος⁶⁷² τῶν νόμων ἔστι τοῖσι Βαβυλωνίοισι ὅδε· δεῖ πᾶσαν γυναῖκα ἐπιχωρὶν ἰζομένην ἐς ἱρὸν Ἀφροδίτης, ἅπαξ ἐν τῇ ζῳῇ μιχθῆναι ἀνδρὶ ξείνῳ. πολλοὶ δὲ καὶ οὐκ ἀξιεύμεναι ἀναμίσγεσθαι τῇσι ἄλλησι οἷα πλούτῳ ὑπερφρονέουσai, ἐπὶ ζευγέων ἐν καμάρῃσι⁶⁷³ ἐλάσασαι πρὸς τὸ ἱρὸν ἐστᾶσι· θεραπῆη δὲ ⁶⁷⁰ τοὺς κάμνοντας εἰς τὴν ἀγορὴν ἐκφορέουσι. STRABO (iii. c. 3, p. 249) says of the Spanish mountaineers: τοὺς ἀρρώστους, ὥσπερ οἱ Αἰγύπτιοι τὸ παλαιὸν, προτιθέουσιν εἰς τὰς ὁδοὺς τοῖς πεπειραμένοις τοῦ πάθους ὑποθήκης χάριν. It is possible that he may by a slip of memory have this passage in his mind. But the words τὸ παλαιὸν are remarkable, and perhaps a tradition may have remained of the early practice of Egyptian physicians, the first rude approximation to the collection of medical observations. If so, here will be another point of accordance between Babylon and Egypt.

⁶⁷¹ παραπλήσιοι τοῖσι ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ. See note 651.

⁶⁷² ὁ δὲ δὴ αἰσχιστος. This paragraph does not exist in the manuscripts S, V, δ, d, and it seems very questionable whether it does not rest on a different authority from the rest of the Babylonian customs, the account of which appears naturally concluded. It is also difficult to reconcile the practice related in it with that of selling the young maidens, except we suppose that it applies to the wealthy town population, and the other only to the common people who lived κατὰ κώμας (§ 196). It is impossible to believe that it is a practice which, under the compulsion of necessity, succeeded to the other.

⁶⁷³ ἐν καμάρῃσι. The word καμάρη is etymologically equivalent to the Latin camera and the Teutonic kammer, and seems to mean a semi-cylindrical covering, like the tilted head of a wagon (see note on iv. 69, ἀμαζαν). In ISAIAH (xl. 22), the LXX have ὁ στήσας ἐς καμάραν τὸν οὐρανὸν, and it seems likely that the word is equivalent to σκηνή which XENOPHON (Cyrus. vi. ult.) uses to express the closing head of a Persian ἀρμάμαξα. Under these circumstances it may be supposed that the καμάραι were not merely the accessory of the chariots in which these females drove, but that the presence of them gave an especial character to the proceeding, they representing as it were the shrines of Aphrodite. Hence it is easy to understand how the name of

⁶⁷⁴ πάντη. Gaisford, with the MSS, has πάντα.

⁶⁷⁵ Μύλιττα δὲ καλέουσι τὴν Ἀφροδίτην. This he has said before, § 131, in a passage which, like the present, is deficient in S, V, δ, and d. The third passage in which Herodotus mentions an oriental name of Aphrodite Urania (iii. 8) is found in these MSS.

⁶⁷⁶ οὐκ ὁστὶν μέγα τί οἱ δώσεις ὥς μιν λάμψαι. This proves decisively that the custom in question was not the result of individual licentiousness. It arose apparently from the principle that the deity, whatever the department of human existence under his controul, always required to be propitiated with the best thing the votary had to bestow. Hence the Phœnician Moloch demanded the first-born child, and the Assyrian Mylitta the virginity of the woman about to become a wife. The dedication of the zone to Here is nothing else than the symbolical representation, under the influences of civilization, of the sacrifice which was made in its coarsest form by the barbarous Orientals. In their view, the θεῶν φθόνος could be propitiated only by the most precious possession, and no commutation was permitted. Thus, when the Carthaginians suffered important reverses in their war with Agathocles, they imagined Moloch had taken part against them, because, instead of sacrificing their own children to him, they had been in the habit of purchasing substitutes. Accordingly, by way of expiation, they burnt two hundred infants of the most illustrious families (Diod. Sic. xx. 14). The same feeling influenced the King of Moab to offer the heir of his kingdom (2 Kings iii. 27). Compare MICAH vi. 7.

⁷⁷ πέραν τοῦ Ἀράξω ποταμοῦ. There has been great difficulty in assigning the geographical position of the Araxes, even according to the notions of Herodotus; and indeed it is impossible to doubt that he has combined accounts which belong to two different rivers, and that the solution of the puzzle is only to be found by endeavouring to refer the statements to their several sources. I believe the fact to be that the Araxes of Cyrus is the Jihon, and that the narrative followed by Herodotus made that prince invade the Massagetae by crossing that river, thereby placing them in Bokhara. This cycle of traditions would exist at Phasis, which was the termination of the route connecting Greece with the East, vid the Colchians, Saspire, and Caspian Sea. See note 363.

On the other hand, the Araxes over which the Massagetae drove the Scythians, who in their turn expelled the Cimmerians from the Scythia of Herodotus (iv. 11), seems undoubtedly to be the Wolga or Ural, or rather a hypothetical river made up by confounding the two. This would bring the Massagetae into the site of the Kirghis Tartars, and here they would be Ἰσσηδόνων ἀντίον. See note on iv. 25, ὅπῃ Ἰσσηδόνων οἰκούμενον. It is an important fact with reference to this question, that CALLISTHENES, the pupil of Aristotle (who by his recommendation attended Alexander in his expedition), adopted Herodotus's account of the Araxes which is contained in this passage, making the river to be the boundary between Bactria and Scythia, and to have forty mouths. (Strabo, xi. c. 14, p. 464.)

Both these two positions, however, assigned to the Massagetae, would make them different portions of one and the same barbarous race, which overspread the whole of the basin of the Caspian Sea, leading a nomad life, and considered by some to be Scythians. Having less intercourse with the Greeks, their manners would be more barbarous even than those of the other Scythians. See § 216, and note on iv. 26, ἀναμίζαντες πάντα τὰ κρέα.

⁶⁷⁹ κατατίθεσθαι. The change of construction here from the indicative, expressing an observed fact, to the infinitive, denoting a matter of hearsay, is to be remarked. The word φασί is of course to be supplied from the last sentence.

⁶⁸⁰ ἐπιβάλλειν ἐπὶ τὸ πῦρ. Herodotus relates a similar use of hemp-seed among the Scythians (iv. 75).

⁶⁸¹ ἐκ Ματινηῶν, ὅθεν περὶ ὁ Γύνδης. The site which Herodotus assigns to the Matieni is difficult, if not impossible, to fix. In i. 72, he places them on the right bank of the Halys, opposite to the Phrygians on the left, after the river has quitted the country of the Cilicians, and (if the passage be not corrupt) before it bends to the north. But, if the explanation given in note 243 be well founded, the difficulty is so far removed that we may see what he thought, and assign the Matieni to the region drained by the upper Tigris, the Zab, and the Diyaleh, from the opposite side of the watershed of which, in its north-west part, he seems to have thought a river flowed, which he took for the Halys. This explanation will likewise serve for another passage, v. 49, where the Matieni are placed between the Armenians and the Cissians. But, besides this, he appears to mass the Caspian Sea and the Sea of Aral into one, and to conceive of the range which forms the southern boundary of Balk as a continuation of Caucasus, which again he regards as a chain running nearly north and south. Now if the Araxes of the text be the Amon or Jihon, i. e. the Oxus of the Seleucid times, the statements in the text may be reconciled with one another, and perhaps with the strange notice in iv. § 40, by remarking that the author not only brings the range in question very far to the east of its true site, but twists its direction to nearly north and south. Hence he would regard the streams flowing into Balk from it, which really run north and north-west, as running east and north-east. For a similar massing together of distinct mountain ranges, see note on ii. 8.

⁶⁸³ τὸ δὲ ἐν τῶν στομάτων . . ῥέει διὰ καθαροῦ. The Jihon now falls into the Sea of Aral, and it is a disputed point whether formerly the bed took a different course, and fell into the Caspian, or whether a navigable communication with that sea was effected by a canal. But there seems no doubt that one or the other was the case from the time of the Seleucids to comparatively modern times.

⁶⁸⁵ ζῶα, "figures." See note 238. The articles of dress which are here described are (I cannot doubt) printed goods, which are considered by Herodotus to have been figured by the hand, though dyeing in uniform colours was a familiar process in his time. The marvel to him is how patterns thus laid on by the hand (as he supposes) can stand. And he attributes it not to the real cause, but to the peculiar quality of the dyes grown in the Caucasus. Considering the indefinite extent which Herodotus assigns to the Caucasus, one may conjecture that the articles in question came even from India by the way of the Caspian, and that they were, in fact, printed muslins. STRABO attributes the manufacture to those of the Massagetae who are mountaineers; and, from the site which he assigns to these, we should look for them no nearer the west than the flanks of the mountains in which the Sihon (Jaxartes) and the Jihon (Oxus) take their rise (xi. c. 8, p. 433).

⁶⁸⁶ οὐκ ἐλαχίστην μοῖρην μετέχουσι. The word μετέχουσι implies a joint possession, and is equivalent to μετὰ ἄλλων ἔχουσι. It is therefore put in an appropriate regimen, governing an accusative, and not a genitive case. Translate, "Of ⁶¹⁷ στρατεύεσθαι. The manuscript S has στρατεύειν, a form which all the MSS have in i. 77; whereas, in vi. 7, the codices are equally divided, and S has the middle form; so entirely uncertain is the use.

⁶¹⁸ πύργους ἐπὶ πλοίων. The real operation probably was the building a fortification to protect the head of a pontoon-bridge. But the Greeks, entirely unaccustomed to strategics on the oriental scale, appear to have conceived the towers as built in the ships. The use of pontoon-bridges must have been familiar to the Mesopotamians.

⁶¹⁹ οὐκὼν ἐθελήσεις . . . εἶναι; “Will you not choose to act on this suggestion, but any thing rather than be still? then,” &c. This seems a better mode of constructing this passage, by a common Greek idiom, than to put a comma after εἶναι, and add it to the list of the cases illustrated in note on v. 59. The same may be said of iv. 118, οὐκὼν ποιήσετε ταῦτα.

⁶⁹¹ ὅτι. This word sometimes is used to introduce the very words which have been employed on any occasion alluded to; in which case, as here, it is not taken into account in the construction. In this instance, Cræsus may be conceived to refer to a saying which he was constantly in the habit of employing, and which Cyrus would recognize. It is therefore not correct to regard the word ὅτι as simply pleonastic. In the next few sentences the same character prevails. The remarks are some of those often-repeated “wise saws” of which Cræsus is made by Herodotus the especial channel.

⁶⁹² τοῦτο. Gaisford, with the MSS, τένυτό.

⁶⁹³ Κύρῳ γε τὸν Καμβύσῳ. The speaker is here taking a different tone from that which characterized the traditions which related the birth and infancy of Cyrus. Here the being the son of Cambyses is made a matter of pride to

Cyrus; whereas in those all his nobility is derived from his mother. (See § 107, πολλῶ ἐνερθε ἔγων αὐτὸν μέσου ἀνδρὸς Μήδου, and § 91, μητρὸς ἀμείνωνος πατρὸς δὲ ὑποδεεστέρου.) A similar change may be seen in the enumeration by Xerxes of his ancestors, among whom he places Cambyses (vii. 11). Now this change may well have been effected after the Achæmenids had reigned for some time over the whole Medo-Persian empire; but scarcely before. Herodotus therefore here appears to commit an anachronism, and so also in speaking of the ἐγὰρ Περσικὰ in the next sentence: for the habits of the Persians could hardly have changed so much as to make their luxury proverbial, while Cyrus was going on with his conquests. (See the story of Artembares and Cyrus below, ix. 122.) These considerations will add weight to the remarks in note 703, and prevent us from attaching implicit credit to the account of Herodotus as to the ⁶⁹⁸ οὐκ ἔστι μηχανὴ ἀπὸ τῆς ὄψιος ταύτης οὐδεμία, τὸ μὴ κείνον ἐπιβουλεύειν ἐμοί. This idiom is a very remarkable one. Literally, “there is no way out of this vision for him not to be plotting treason against me.” It expresses a logical necessity in terms of physical necessity. See note 129, above.

⁶⁹⁹ ὥς. The interposition of so short a sentence after ὅκως seems scarcely a sufficient justification of the use of this word, which is manifestly superfluous. Perhaps herodotus wrote ὡς τάχιστα.

⁷⁰⁰ ἀμείβεται δὴ ὦν. Gaisford reads ἀμείβεται οἱ δὴ ὦν, on the authority of the manuscripts M, K, S, F, and a, but the word ἀμειβεσθαι is not found elsewhere with a dative of the person, and R and V have the reading in the text, which is adopted by Schweighäuser.

⁷⁰¹ ἄρχεσθαι. The article τοῦ might have been expected before this word. But its absence is defended by vi. 32, ἀντὶ εἶναι ἐνορχίας, and vii. 170, ἀντὶ δὲ εἶναι νησιώτας.

⁷⁰³ οἱ δὲ Πέρσαι ἐπελθόντες πολλοὺς μὲν σφῶν ἐφόνευσαν. In all the accounts given of the contest between the Persians and the Massagetae, the feature of their intoxication and consequent destruction seems to have been preserved. This may be accounted for by the circumstance that it was handed down in a religious festival connected with the worship of Anaitis, and termed τὰ Σάκαια, which STRABO (xi. cap. 8, p. 432) describes as βακχεῖα τις τῶν μεθ' ἡμέραν καὶ νύκτωρ διεσκευασμένων Ἀκνθιστῖ, πινόντων ἅμα καὶ πληκτιζομένων πρὸς ἀλλήλους, ἅμα τε καὶ τὰς συμπνοῦσας γυναικας. He gives two different accounts of the origin of this festival, which existed down to his time at Zela in Pontus,—a place which was constituted a town by Pompey after the Mithridatic war, having been previously an establishment of hierodules of the goddess. One of them is, that the Sacæ (which he makes identical, or nearly so, with the Massagetae, and inhabiting the eastern part of Independent Tartary), having overrun the best part of Armenia, and got as far as Cappadocia and Pontus, were there suddenly attacked while feasting on their spoils by “the Persian generals at that time stationed in those parts,” and utterly annihilated. Another account is, he says, that Cyrus, having been defeated in an expedition against the Sacæ, resorted to the expedient in the text. If it be remembered that the Anaitis-worship prevailed all over the East, and that the Persians, or those who in the idea of Herodotus represented the Persians, called all Scythians, and consequently the Massagetae, Sacians (vii. 64), it seems far from improbable that the two stories of Strabo, the one in the text, and the one of which Cyaxares is the hero (i. 106), are all so many different local accounts of the origin of one and the same religious festival, substantially identical, but varying in all the circumstances of time, place, and dramatis personæ. See note 693, above.

⁷⁰⁴ μαλινεσθε οὕτω. The reproach of intemperance comes strangely from the mouth of a Massagetae; for the habitual drunkenness of these nomad tribes has always been notorious (see vi. 84). But the liquor which they use for the purpose of intoxication is koumiss—fermented mare's milk; so that perhaps, in the original form of the tale, Tomyris's scorn referred rather to the beverage, wine, than to its effects, just as ÆSCHYLUS (Supplikes, 963) makes the Argive king, by way of an insult, tell the Egyptian herald that he will find his countrymen to be men οὐ πίνοντας ἐκ κρεθῶν μέθυ. In passing through a Hellenic channel, however, this peculiar feature might easily be lost sight of, and the reproach take the common form of a charge of intemperance.

⁷⁵⁴ πολλῶν λόγων λεγομένων. CTESIAS made Cyrus die in consequence of a wound received in action with the Derbices, under a king Amorceus. They are assisted by Indians with elephants, who frighten the horses of Cyrus's cavalry. He is rescued from impending defeat by Amorgee, who comes up with an army of Sacæ, but dies on the third day after receiving his wound (ap. Photium, p. 37). ARISTOBULUS (ap. Arrian. vi. 29) professed to have visited the tomb of Cyrus at Pasargadæ, which had been plundered during the absence of Alexander in India, and to have replaced some fragments of the body in a golden sarcophagus, which the robbers had opened and vainly attempted to break up. A college of Magi were, as he says, appointed by Cambyzes to watch this tomb, and allowed a sheep per day for maintenance, and a horse every month to offer to Cyrus: and their office was hereditary. DIONODORUS, however (following some other author than his general authority, Ctesias), incidentally mentions that Cyrus was killed in action by a queen of the Massagetæ, and his body crucified: and ONEZISCITUS, pilot of Alexander's fleet (ap. Strabon. x. c. 3, p. 321), describes the so-called tomb in a very different way from Aristobulus,—making it ten stories high instead of two, and stating that the inscription on it was a Greek hexameter verse in Persian characters; in which case it could hardly have been more than a cenotaph, erected not earlier than the time of Darius. XENOPHON, in the Cyropædia, makes Cyrus die in his bed of old age: but this work can only be regarded as a kind of novel,—of authority for manners but not for facts,—although in this particular instance

Some of the race which inhabited the flanks of the mountains (see STRABO, quoted in note 685) would be ἄνιπποι, while the nomads of the westernmost part of the plains would doubtless be ἱππόται. For the use of the word μετέχουσι, see note 686.

⁷¹⁰ ὁ δὲ χρυσὸς καὶ ὁ χαλκὸς ἄπλετος. The gold might be obtained from the sand of the streams in the Altai Mountains, from whence it would be carried by traffic far and wide. The Ural range is much nearer to the plains which Herodotus had in his mind; but it is only recently that those mountains have been known to yield gold. With regard to the brass, it has been found that the arms discovered on opening any of the ancient barrows in Northern Asia have been invariably of that metal (RITTEN, Erdkunde, ii. p. 796).

the Persians seems to follow from the statement of ARISTOBULUS given in the note 706, above. Possibly the "sacred horses" mentioned in § 189 may have been intended for this purpose (see vii. 114), although it seems more likely that they were a relief for drawing the chariot of the sun. But all nomad tribes feed upon the flesh of the animals which they employ for the purposes of locomotion; and the sacrifice was probably a never-failing preliminary of a flesh-meal. Hence apparently the origin of the Persians eating the camel and the ass (§ 133). The custom doubtless grew up in the times when they were nomads.

EXCURSUS ON I. 32.

IN the ancient kalendars there were two distinct points which required attention; the one, the adjustment of the civil month to the motions of the moon; the other, that of the civil year to the motions of the sun. Of these two there can be no doubt that the former was in early times regarded as by far the more important. It was the lunar month by which the religious festivals were regulated; and the inconvenience occasioned by the discrepancy between the conventional new moon and the natural one would make itself felt more strongly from the circumstance, that the neglect, however involuntary, of public religious rites in any particular was conceived to draw down the wrath of Heaven upon the land. Aristophanes puts this superstition in his jesting way in the "Clouds" (vv. 558—68) making the Moon send a message to the spectators by the Chorus, complaining of the irritation of the gods at finding nothing provided for them on days when, according to her reckoning (on which alone they could depend), they had a right to expect a feast; and, on the other hand, at having their times of fasting or mourning for Memnon or Sarpedon, or some other hero, indecently disturbed by the riotous festivities of mortals. Not only religious festivals, however, but commercial proceedings also, were regulated by the lunar month,—or rather by the civil month founded upon it. Money was lent at interest by the month, and accounts settled at the end of it. Agricultural operations meanwhile, and navigation (which depend upon the seasons of the year), were determined not by any reference to the civil kalendar, but by the rising or setting of certain constellations; or by the appearance or the cries of birds, such as the swallow, the cuckoo, the crane, or the kite. Allusions to this habit abound in Aristophanes, showing decisively that the rude methods of determining the season of the year which Hesiod gives prevailed generally in the time of the Peloponnesian war, although just before its commencement the foundation of a better system had been already laid.

The determination of a civil lunar month which shall agree at first pretty closely with the natural lunations is not at all a difficult matter. If twelve months be taken alternately of 30 and 29 days, twelve of them will amount to 354 days; and this was the Athenian civil year for some time after Solon. Twelve lunations amount to 354 days, 8 hours, 48 minutes, and 34 seconds; so that it would be nearly three years before the difference of a day would arise between the natural and the conventional new moon. But this difference would continually increase, the system having no principle of correction within itself; and in the course of little more than forty years the νομήνία κατὰ σελήνην (as Thucydides calls the natural new moon, ii. 28) would fall upon the fifteenth day of the civil lunar month.

The discordance between a civil year consisting of 354 days and the solar year, consisting of $365\frac{1}{4}$, would very early force itself into attention; and a system called the octaeteris, or cycle of eight years, was invented for the purpose of correcting it. This object was effected by intercalating a month of 30 days, a second Posideon, three times in the course of the eight years,—generally in such a way as to make the third, the fifth, and the eighth consist of thirteen months. This would give $8 \times 354 + 90 (= 2922)$ days for the cycle, which is the exact amount of eight years of $365\frac{1}{4}$ days each, and consequently the civil lunar year would every eight years be brought into agreement with the solar year.

But this advantage would be purchased at the expense of one which, according to ancient habits of thinking, was even more important,—the approximation of the civil to the natural lunar month. The octaeteris of 2922 days is not equivalent to 99 lunations, which amount to nearly 2923 $\frac{1}{2}$ days: and consequently a kalendar regulated on such a principle would neither correct, nor to any important extent retard, the continually increasing difference between the civil and the natural lunar month. The obvious course would be to interpolate three days in the course of 16 years,—and this, it is said, was attempted,—but, as such a proceeding would at once derange the adjustment between the civil lunar year and the solar year, it seems very questionable whether it was ever adopted.

A plan for uniting the advantage both of a solar and lunar adjustment was proposed by Meton in the archonship of Apseudes, a year before the commencement of the Peloponnesian war. So much as this follows from the notice of Diodorus (xii. 36), but there seems no authority to assume, as some have done, that this famous cycle of nineteen years, the Enneadecaeteris, which has continued in use for some purposes to the present day, was formally adopted by public authority at once. In the year 432 B.C., the summer solstice fell on the 13th day of the Attic month Scirophorion (the 27th of June), and, the new-moon synchronizing with it, there was an error of 13 days between the natural and the conventional commencement of the month Hecatombæon, the first of the Attic year. This point of time Meton proposed to make the epoch of his cycle. Instead of the previous methods of intercalation, he suggested as the basis of his scheme a series of 235 months of 30 days each, the result of intercalating a second Poseidon seven times, viz. in the third, fifth, eighth, eleventh, thirteenth, sixteenth, and nineteenth years of the Enneadecaeteris. This would give 7050 days, i. e. 110 days too much; as the number of days in nineteen years, according to his computation, amounted to 6940, reckoning the solar year at 365 days, 6 hours, 18 minutes, and 57 seconds. Now, according to the old method of striking out one day from every alternate month, 117 or 118 days would have had to be struck out, which would make the cycle 7 or 8 days too short. Meton therefore struck out every 63rd day throughout the period, which days were called ἡμέραι ἐξαυτίμοι, and the months which by their extrusion were shortened were denominated κοίλας, to distinguish them from the others, which were designated πλήρεις as containing their full complement of 30 days. The following table, which is taken from the Appendix to Clinton's "Fasti Hellenici," vol. ii. p. 338, will exhibit to the eye the Metonic scheme, and it is not unlikely that what was really done by Meton in the archonship of Apseudes was to set up some such table engraved on stone or brass, in a frequented part of the city or the vicinity, for public criticism.

Scirophorion		3		9		15		21						6	24	12	30

The utility of this table is very great. It contains within itself a correction of the difference between the conventional and the natural new moon, which at no time in the whole nineteen years can exceed twenty-six hours, and at the expiration of the cycle is only about seven hours and a half. But, although it thus commends itself to understanding critics, the apparent irregularity of the length of the months (no one of which in the course of the nineteen years was always of the same magnitude) no doubt gave dissatisfaction to those citizens who were accustomed to the old "rule of thumb," which made the months alternately πλήρεις and κοίλαι. And although the inequality of the civil and lunar months was, as has been said, limited by it, yet within this limit it increased much more rapidly than under the old system. Thus, in the very first year of the cycle, at the beginning of the month Boëdromion, the civil new moon would be nearly a day (i. e. 22h. 32m.) behind the natural new moon, reckoning a lunation at 29d. 12h. and 44m.; it is really nearly three seconds longer. At the beginning of Mæmacterion, the difference would be only diminished by 1h. 28m., but this correction would continue steadily till the beginning of Elaphebolion in the second year, when the inequality would have diminished to 9h. 20m. But, Munychion and Thargelion being full months in that year, the inequality would be increased again by the beginning of Scirophorion to 19h. 8m. Then the diminution would again recommence, and at the beginning of Mæmacterion in the fourth year, the inequality would be reduced to 7h. 54m. Again, it would receive a sudden addition from the circumstance of Posideon and Gamelion in that year being full months, and at the beginning of Anthesterion would amount to 17h. 42m., from which point the reduction would recommence afresh.

If the two first months, and also the two last of the Enneadecaeteris be abstracted, the remainder is made up of eleven cyclical periods of twenty-one months each, in every one of which the first twenty are alternately κοῖλαι and πλήρεις, while the twenty-first is always πλήρης. The operation, therefore, of Meton's corrective system may be easily conceived by observing that the inequality of 22h. 32m., existing at the beginning of Boëdromion in the first year, is corrected by a bimestral amount of 1h. 28m. during the first twenty months of these smaller cycles, while every twenty-first month the aggregate correction of the twenty months is suddenly diminished by 11h. 16m., or more than seven-tenths of its amount. Nevertheless the balance tends to diminish the inequality, and in the seventh of the smaller cycles the civil month, instead of being behind the natural month, slightly precedes it, so that, at the commencement of Metagitnion in the thirteenth year, the conventional new moon would be 1h. 16m. before the natural one, in spite of the retardation. The mechanism which had hitherto served to correct the inequality would now begin to increase it at a more rapid rate. The civil new moon of Elaphebolion in the fourteenth year would be 1h. 28m. + 14h. 40m. (= 16h. 8m.) before its proper time, that of Poseideon in the sixteenth would be 19h. 32m. too early, that of Metagitnion in the eighteenth would be 22h. 56m., and that of Munychion in the last year of the cycle would come 26h. 20m. too soon. Here, however, a change would again take place. Thargelion in the nineteenth year was made by Meton a full month, the whole number of 110 days having been already excluded, and therefore the third day in it was not taken as a ἡμέρα ἐξαπέρυμος. By this means a rapid retardation took place, so that the civil new moon of Scirophorion, the last month in the Enneadecasteris, came only 3h. 48m. too soon, and that of Hecatombæon at the beginning of the second cycle of nineteen years only 7h. 28m. too late.

The author heard many stories from the priests of Memphis, Thebes, and Heliopolis, both of divine and human matters.

⁶ διδοῖ ποιμένι τρέφειν ἐς τὰ ποιμνία, "gives them to a shepherd to take to his flocks and bring up."

⁷ ἀπαλλαχθέντων τῶν ἀσήμεων κυζημάτων, "after the unmeaning whimperings [of infancy] had past away." The exact meaning of κυζημάτα appears best from the beautiful expression of THEOCBITUS:—

οὐδέ τι φωνῶσαι δυνάμην, οὐδ' ὅσσον ἐν ἔργῳ κινῶνται φωνεῖντα φίλαν ποτὶ ματέρα τέκνα. (ii. 108.)

⁸ διέτης χρόνος. SUIDAS (sub v. βεκ-κεσέληνος) appears to have read τριέτης χρόνος. And POLLUX (v. 88) seems to have had a MS varying in some respects from any existing one; for he says, with reference to this passage: ὥς Ἡρόδοτος ἔσφαλται ἐπὶ τῶν βρεφῶν τῶν Φρυγίων λόγῳ, βληγᾶσθαι τὰς αἶγας οἰόμενος.

⁹ βεκός. It seems likely that this is a dialectal variety of φακός (see note on vii. 73, ἐκαλέοντο Βρίγες), which is no doubt etymologically connected with φάγω, and, possibly, meant originally food, although in subsequent times it was confined to that species of aliment most accessible to the common people. HIP-PONAX used the word in a trochaic tetrameter (preserved by Strabo, viii. c. 3, p. 150), Κυπρίων βεκός φαγοῦσι κάμα-θουσίων πυρόν, from which it would seem to have been a provincial term in some part of Cyprus. The Semitic root dk is said to have the meaning of food, and the form βεκός probably was brought to Cyprus from Phœnicia, and there remained.
Some of the MSS have βεκκός, a form which appears in the word βεκκεσέληνος used by ARISTOPHANES (Nub. 398).

The Egyptians the first discoverers of the solar annual cycle.

¹⁰ καὶ δὴ καὶ ἐς Θήβας. It would seem a fair inference from these words (which exist in all the MSS), that Herodotus made a special expedition to Thebes, and there remained. The way in which he quotes the Theban priests, too, in i. 182, is quite in accordance with such a notion. But see note on § 16, below. Is it possible that he only went as far as Coptus on the river (see note on § 17), or to the place which served the same purpose that Coptus did in the time of the Ptolemies, and made a mere excursion to one temple at Thebes?

¹² τῶν ὥρων. The use of this word is not to be overlooked. The duodenary division, which the Egyptians made, was not a division of seasons, but of space proportional (or nearly so) to a division of time. It was a division of the zodiac into twelve parts, rudely defined to the eye by certain combinations of constellations, through which the path of the sun lay. But Herodotus was obviously not an astronomer. "The year" was to him the succession of certain seasons, and he uses the term which was familiar to himself. The confusion of thought which gives rise to the expression is also observable in § 26, below, εἰ δὲ ἡ σῶσις ἡλλακτο τῶν ὥρων, κ.τ.λ., where "the seasons" are localized as meteorological phenomena, without any reference to the motion of the sun, which, indeed, is regarded as influenced by them. See also iii. 11, ἀποκλινομένης μεσαμβρίας, and the note there.

¹³ ταῦτα δὲ ἐξευρέειν ἐκ τῶν ἄστρων ἔλεγον. The mode in which the length of the year is fixed, is by observing the number of days which elapse between two consecutive first risings, or last settings of any conspicuous star; phenomena which, in a country where the sky is habitually clear and the horizon uninterrupted, and where the habits of the people keep them much in the open air, are quite as striking as the changes of the moon in our own latitude. In Egypt, the star which first attracted observation for this purpose was, probably, Sirius, which the Egyptians called Thoth (or Soth = Σῶθις), a name which they also gave to the first month of their year. If the sun happens to be in a part of the heavens a little to the west of this star, it cannot fail to strike the eye of a spectator who watches the setting of the former, as it will come out on the western horizon apparently alone (like a spark of fire struck out from the larger body), in the midst of the growing darkness, and this the more conspicuously as the twilight is briefer. The next day he will again look for it and see it, but it will follow the setting sun more closely, and the last time he observes it it will be scarcely perceptible, from its proximity to the greater luminary. This is the technical δosis of the early Hellenic astronomy, to which ÆSCHYLUS gives the appropriate epithet of δόσκριτος (Prom. 438). After this disappearance of Sirius as an evening star, it would be invisible for the space of about thirty days, after which time the sun would have past from the west to the east of it, for a sufficient space to allow it to be just visible on the eastern horizon before all the stars disappeared under the influence of the dawning day. Such a rising, as a morning star, was the ἀνατολή of the primitive astronomy; and it is plain that either the ἀνατολή (sometimes called ἐπιτολή, because of its being a rising observed after an observed setting) or the δύσις formed an equally good fixed point for an epoch. During the interval between two consecutive phenomena (of either class) the sun would have passed through the whole circle of the heavens;—in other words, a year would have been completed.

¹⁵ τοὺς δωδέκα μῆνας. The Egyptian months, according to PROLEMY (ap. Ideler, Handbuch der Chronologie, i. p. 97) occurred in the following order:—1. Thoth; 2. Phaophi; 3. Athyr; 4. Choiak; 5. Tybi; 6. Mechir; 7. Phamenoth; 8. Pharmuthi; 9. Pachon; 10. Payni; 11. Epiphi; 12. Mesori. Then come the five intercalated days. The beginning of the year fell on the 28th of February in the year 747 B.C., or the year 3967 of the Julian period. That epoch is the commencement of the era of Nabonassar. (IDLER, l. c.)

¹⁶ δωδέκα τε θεῶν ἐπωνυμίας ἔλεγον πρώτους Αἰγυπτίους νομίσαι. The allusion, probably, is to the twelve gods to whom an altar was erected in the agora at Athens by a grandson of Pisistratus, while filling the office of archon, before the expulsion of his family (THUCYD. vi. 54). A reference is made to it again below (vi. 82). It is not easy to say what determined the number of deities here united, but the duodenary division was early familiar to the Ionic race. See what the author says in i. 146. It may be remarked that the altar of “the twelve gods” being in the agora, seems to indicate that the commercial relations of the state were specially under the guardianship of these corporate deities. Hence, perhaps, ARISTOPHANES makes Euelpides swear by “the twelve gods” when struck by the strange appearance of the Ereps, whom he regards as a foreigner (Aves, 95). See also note on vi. 108. Hence, too, they would be familiar to travelling merchants, to whom the remark in the text would naturally be made.

¹⁷ ζῶα ἐν λίθοις ἐγγλύφαι. See note 238 on i. 70.

At Rosetta, and the mouths of the Nile (lat. 31° 30'), the diminutions in the perpendicular thickness of the deposit is lessened in a much greater decreasing ratio than in the straitened valley of Central and Upper Egypt, owing to the much greater extent, east and west, over which the inundation spreads, and there the elevation of the land in the same period of 1700 years has been comparatively imperceptible. In point of fact, limestone rock lies throughout at no great distance below the surface, and it is an elevated portion of this formation which constitutes the Isle of Pharos.

²⁰ τοιόνδε. This word is omitted by the manuscripts S, V, b, and d, and certainly seems to be a gloss.

²¹ ἐν ἑνδεκα. Some MSS have ἐν δέκα.

²² ἀπὸ τοῦ Πλωθνήτεω κόλπου. This is the bay of which the eastern extremity ran up to the immediate neighbourhood of what was afterwards Alexandria. It was so called from a town Plinthine, where, probably, before Alexandria was built, the wine which was produced in abundance on the banks of the lake Marea, or Mareotis, used to be shipped. The coast was full of small ports as far as Paratonium, which was to the west of Alexandria, a run of 1300 stades. Among them was a village called Apis, from which caravans reached the oasis of Ammon in five days (STRABO, xvii. p. 435). Compare SCYLAX, cited in note 65, below. It is obvious that the description in the text proceeds from a commercial navigator.

considered as an accurate measure. STRABO says, that in boating up the river to Memphis, he had very different dimensions of the σχολίους given him in different places. ARTEMIDORUS made it vary as much as from 30 to 120 stades (ap. Strabon. xvii. cap. i. p. 443). It is observable that the word is not applied by Herodotus or Strabo to pure land-measurement, but only to those cases in which the extent of land is determined by the run of a vessel, or the course of a tow-boat (see note on iii. 5). This may in some degree account for the different magnitude of the schœnus, which, like the stunde in modern Switzerland, or, in some cases, the mile of the Roman Itineraries, might have had respect to the time of performing the space as much as to the space performed. Hence, in Egypt, the rapidity of the river and the condition of the towing-path, would, probably, have modified its magnitude. JEROME (Comm. in Joel, iii. 18), whom Kenrick quotes, seems to show that these considerations might even have been the principal ones. "In Nilo flumine, sive in rivis ejus, solent naves funibus trahere, certa habentes spatia quæ appellant 'funiculos,' ut labori defessorum recentia trahentium colla succedant." STRABO says that the variety in the length of the schœnus was οὕτως ἐξ ἀρχῆς παραδεδομένον καὶ φυλαττόμενον μέχρι τοῦ νῦν (xi. c. 11, p. 442). For a similar inequality in the parasang, see note on vi. 42.

^a ἀνυδρος, "without spring-water." This is the reading of all the MSS, and there is not the least occasion to change it into εὐνδρος or ἐνυδρος. See note 626 on i. 185. The fountain of the sun at Heliopolis would, probably, be the first instance of spring-water which the traveller would come to.

²⁶ ἔστι δὲ ὁδός. These words apparently apply to a journey by the road, not by the river. It will be seen that the distance, by the tow-boat, from the sea to Heliopolis, is estimated at 1220 instead of 1550 stades (§ 9). The additional length of the land journey might arise from the necessity of following the causeways which connected the inland townships with one another. These were formed upon the banks of the network of canals, by which the country was intersected, and the latter would be drawn without any reference to the facility of land communication. If it be supposed that the author is writing here as an ἑμπορος, not as a geographer, the road of which he speaks would be one by which the several towns might all be reached in the time of the inundation, a season at which it will appear that he probably visited Egypt (Excursus on ii. 149). A road taking in a considerable number of towns would necessarily be very winding, and hence the difference of 280 stades might not unreasonably be supposed to arise. RENNELL says that the direct distance from Athens to Pisa by the map is 105 geographical miles; and that from Heliopolis to the opposite point of the Delta only 86. It is plain, therefore, that, under any circumstances, Herodotus greatly exaggerates the distances. But if we compare the distance of Athens from Pisa (1485 stades) with that of Heliopolis from the coast (1220 stades, as estimated in § 9), the exaggeration will be seen to be nearly proportional, being in the one case 14:19, in the other 14:14 stades to the geographical mile measured on the map. The numbers, therefore, given in this passage, must arise from some other cause than simple exaggeration, and no other reason seems so obvious as the one suggested above.

²⁷ ἐπὶ τὸν νηὸν τοῦ Διὸς τοῦ Ὀλυμπίου. It need not be supposed that in fixing upon two sanctuaries as the termination of a route, the writer was actuated by any especially religious motive. The great cyclical religious festivals of the ancients were the occasion of merchants assembling from all parts. STRABO excellently remarks: ἡ πανήγυρις ἐμπορικὸν τι πρῶγμ' ἐστι. Hence it was that, after the destruction of Corinth by the Romans, Delos more than recovered the importance which it possessed in the early times, as it became the centre of the traffic between Europe and Asia (x. c. 5, p. 388). The caravans to Mecca, and the fairs of the middle ages, which were all connected with religious festivals, serve to illustrate the nature of the proceeding. It also appears an assumption to infer from this passage that the altar of the twelve gods was, like the Meta Sudans at Rome, "a centre from which the roads of Attica were measured." See above, note 16.

²⁸ ἐν τῷ αἰ λιθοτομίαι ἔνεισι. It will be observed that Herodotus masses together in one the mountains which form the eastern boundary of the valley of the Nile, and those which constitute the eastern coast of the Red Sea. For a similar compression of ranges, and, consequently upon it, a geographical obliteration of large tracts of country, see notes 243 and 681 on Book I.

³² ὡς εἶναι Αἰγύπτου, "considering that it is a part of Egypt." The narrowness of the Nile valley struck a person who had come up the river and formed his notion of Egypt from the extensive flats of the Delta. For the construction compare § 135, ὡς εἶναι Ῥοδάκων. iv. 81, ὡς Σκύ-θας εἶναι. SOPHOCLES, Oed. Col. 385:

Antig. 61:

ἀλλ' ἐννοαῖν χρὴ τοῦτο μὲν, γυναιχ' ὅτι ἔφμεν ὡς πρὸς ἄνδρας οὐ μαχομένους.

³³ ἐδόκεόν μοι εἶναι. The writer apparently speaks of the estimate he formed by the eye as his boat ascended the river. The expression ἀνάπλοος ἐννέα ἡμερέων, which presently follows, would give 540 stades as the day's voyage. From the sea to Heliopolis being 6120—4860 (= 1260) stades would take only about two days and a third. This harmonizes very well with what is known of the ancient navigation of the Nile. (See note on § 17.) Herodotus here is bringing his auditors up the Sebennytic branch, the straight line of the river's course. Hence two-thirds of a day might well be saved in comparison of the voyage up the Canoëtic branch, under similar circumstances, viz. with a full river and Etesian winds.

For an attempt to explain the difference of the numbers in this section and § 7, above, see note 26.

³⁴ σχοίωνων ἐνὸς καὶ ὀγδώκοντα ἐόντων. The datum is the number of schani, which the author reduces to stades. See note 24, above.

³⁵ ἐς μεσόγαιαν. Several MSS have μεσόγαια. For an explanation of the numbers εἴκοσι καὶ ἑκατὸν καὶ ἑξακισχίλιοι, see above, note 26.

³⁶ ἀπὸ Θηβέων ἐς Ἐλεφαντίνην. The difference of latitude is something under 2°, whereas from Thebes to Heliopolis it is more than 4°. It is a remarkable circumstance that, wherever Elephantine is mentioned by Herodotus, there is nothing to indicate any suspicion that it is an island; but on the contrary it appears in one passage to be considered on the main. See note on § 28, below. And yet the writer professes to have visited Elephantine himself (§ 29).

³⁷ ὥσπερ τὰ τε. So d, S, and Aldus. Gaisford, with the majority of the MSS, has ὥσπερ γε τὰ.

³⁸ ὡς γε εἶναι. The MSS vary between ὥστε εἶναι, which Gaisford adopts, and ὡς εἶναι.

¹⁸ πενταστόμου. This is Gaisford's reading. The MSS are pretty equally divided between it and ἐπταστόμου. The two terms would be appropriate according as the two artificial outlets were or were not considered as mouths. See below, § 17. That they were popularly regarded in that light seems to follow from the description of the river in ISAIAH (xi. 15).

¹⁹ εἰσὶ δὲ καὶ ἄλλοι ποταμοί. I have considerable doubt whether from these words down to the end of § 12 are not an addition subsequent to the time of Herodotus. See notes 42 and 43, below.

²⁰ τὰς ἡμίσεας ἤδη ἤπειρον πεποίηκε. THUCYDIDES (ii. 102) speaks of these islands as if the whole of them were likely to become soon united to the main. But this expectation was not fulfilled even in the time of PAUSANIAS (viii. 24. 11), who tries to account for the circumstance. The true reason probably is that the nucleus of the islands is limestone rock cropping up, and that they themselves were formed not by alluvial so much as diluvial deposits. The Achelous, when swelled by rains, (μέγα καὶ πολὺ καὶ θαλερόν, THUCYD. l. c.) brought down boulders, which were stopped by the quincunx-placed islets, and hence formed islands such as ΣΤΡΑΒΟ (x. c. 2, p. 342) describes as πᾶσαι λυπραί καὶ τραχεῖαι, uninhabited (THUCYD. l. c.), but an excellent lurking-place for pirates. But a river of this description would always clear channels for itself, however much these would alter from time to time.

²¹ τῇ εὐρύτατὸς ἐστί ὁ κόλπος. The "gulf" here is apparently, as respects its dimensions, generalized from the appearance of one of the two upper branches of the Red Sea, and there is nothing from the text to show which the author had in his mind. I incline to the belief that it was the Easternmost one, Bahr el Akabah. The merchandize coming up the Red Sea passed up this and was transported by land to Petra. From thence there was a caravan route to Rhinocollura on the borders of Egypt. The transit by the other branch to Suez seems never to have succeeded. In the time of the Ptolemies, when the Eastern traffic passed through Egypt, the navigation of the Red Sea was not continued above Mouse Roads (see note 59), ΣΤΡΑΒΟ, xvi. p. 406. It will be remarked that the direction of the Bahr el Akabah, and that of the Nile for about two degrees of latitude above Memphis, are nearly opposite to each other, which is very far from the case with those of the Nile and the Gulf of Suez.

²² [Ἀράβιον, τὸν ἔρχομαι λέξων]. Gaisford, following Schweighäuser, includes these words between brackets. They are found in all the MSS.

This would probably be filled up in 20,000 years by such a river as the Nile.

Evidence of the formation of Egypt drawn from the shells on the mountains and the efflorescence of salt from the limestone.

νοτὴς φέροντα ἐπὶ Συρίης· σχεδὸν μὲν ἀλλήλοισι συντετραίνοντας τοὺς μυχοὺς⁴², ὁλίγον δέ τι παραλλάσσοντας τῆς χώρας· εἰ ὦν δὴ ἐθελήσει ἐκτρέφαι τὸ ῥέεθρον ὁ Νεῖλος ἐς τοῦτον τὸν Ἀράβιον κόλπον, τί μιν κωλύει ῥέοντος τούτου ἐκχωσθῆναι ἐντὸς γε δισμυρίων ἐτέων; ἐγὼ μὲν γὰρ ἔλπομαι γε καὶ μυρίων ἐντὸς χωσθῆναι ἂν κοῦ γε δὴ ἐν τῷ προαναισιμωμένῳ χρόνῳ πρότερον ἢ ἐμὲ γενέσθαι οὐκ ἂν χωσθεῖη κόλπος καὶ πολλῶ μέζων ἔτι τούτου, ὑπὸ τοσούτου τε ποταμοῦ καὶ οὕτως ἐργατικοῦ; Τὰ περὶ Αἴγυπτον ὦν καὶ τοῖσι λέγουσι αὐτὰ πειθόμεναι, καὶ αὐτὸς οὕτω κάρτα δοκέω εἶναι, ἰδὼν τε τὴν Αἴγυπτον προκειμένην τῆς ἐχομένης γῆς, κογχυλίᾳ τε φαινόμενα ἐπὶ τοῖσι οὖρεσι⁴³, καὶ ἄλμην ἐπανθέουσιν ὥστε καὶ τὰς πυραμίδας δηλέεσθαι, καὶ ψάμμου μόνον Αἰγύπτου ὁρος τοῦτο τὸ ὑπὲρ Μέμφιος ἔχον· πρὸς δὲ τῇ χώρῃ οὔτε τῇ Ἀραβίῃ προσοῦρῳ εὐύση τὴν Αἴγυπτον προσεικέλην, οὔτε τῇ Λιβύῃ, οὐ μὴν οὐδὲ τῇ Συρίῃ, (τῆς γὰρ Ἀραβίης τὰ παρὰ θάλασσαν Σύριοι νέμονται⁴⁴), ἀλλὰ μελάγγαιόν τε καὶ κατεργηγμένην⁴⁵, ὥστε εὐύσαν ἰλύν τε καὶ πρόχυσιν ἐξ Αἰθιοπίας

⁴⁴ τῆς γὰρ Ἀραβίης τὰ παρὰ θάλασσαν Σύριοι νέμονται. This phrase has generally been taken to refer to inhabitants of the sea-coast between Ienysus and the Serbonian lake, owing to what I believe to be a corruption in the text of a passage in the third book. (See note on iii. 5, ἐς θάλασσαν.) But the whole of that region was desert and contained no towns at all. The Syrians spoken of here are unquestionably the Syro-phoenicians and Syro-philistines, i. e. the inhabitants of the coast west of the water-sheds formed by Libanus, and the range running south from Carmel. East of this would be a nomad or seminomad population, especially east of the latter range, — a district through which the caravan road from Petra to Joppa ran.

⁴⁵ κατεργηγμένην, "comminuted," i. e. the silt brought down by the river. The black appearance of the alluvium in Egypt must have been the more striking when compared with the soil of the surrounding desert, and the luxuriance of its vegetation must in a similar manner have contrasted with the arid ground. The two points are united by VIRGIL (Georg. iv. 291):

"Viridem Ægyptum nigra fecundat arenā Usque coloratis annis devexus ab Indis."

The black appearance of the ground no doubt procured Egypt its native name Chēmi (black).

The small elevation of the water necessary for inundation under Mæris is mentioned by the priests as a proof of the rise of the land.

⁴⁶ Μοίρι. See note 133 on i. 41.

⁴⁷ ἦν μὴ ἐπ' ἑκαίδεκα ἢ πεντεκαίδεκα πήχεας ἀναβῇ τὸ ἐλάχιστον ὁ ποταμὸς.
This assertion can only be taken as proceeding from that disposition common to all ages, to magnify “the good old times” at the expense of the present. The priests forgot that the river would raise its bed by the deposits it left quite as much, and in fact a little more than it would the soil at the side, so that the inundation (with an equal body of water) must take place a little earlier every year, and consequently cæle-ris paribus a greater surface of land be overflowed. This has been actually proved to be the case. In the plain of Thebes are two colossi,—one of them the celebrated vocal Memnon,—standing at the end of what was once an avenue of statues leading up to a temple. The alluvial soil now extends to about 600 feet beyond this last.
But when built, not only the temple, but the whole avenue, and the colossi at the end of it, were beyond the reach of the inundation. WILKINSON found, on excavating, a paved road resting on the soil of the desert, leading up to the temple.

Above this, at the colossi, were 6 feet 10 inches of alluvium, and 300 feet further inland 5 feet 3 inches, the depth gradually diminishing at the rate of about one inch in fifteen feet horizontal distance.
The temple is supposed to have been built about 1420 B.C., and it is plain that the alluvium could not then have reached to the colossi. It now extends 1900 feet beyond them. (Geogr. Journal, ix. p.

⁴⁸ ἦν οὕτω ἡ χώρα αὕτη κατὰ λόγον κ.τ.λ. I have adopted the reading of Bekker ἐπιδιδῶ and ἀποδιδῶ, though all the MSS have ἐπιδιδῶ and ἀποδιδῶ. Translate: “If this country thus goes on proportionally increasing in elevation, and in the same degree diminishing in crops.”
This use of ἐπιδ. and ἀποδ. exactly answers to the German “zugen” and “abgeben.” ἀξησης is the increase from the grain sown, which, in the notion of the author, would diminish from the diminished depth of water in the inundations.

δὴ σφι ἔστι ὕδατος οὐδεμία ἄλλη ἀποστροφή⁴⁹, ὅτι μὴ ἐκ τοῦ Διὸς μῶνον.”

Easy cultivation of the lower part of Egypt.

Καὶ ταῦτα μὲν ἐς “Ἕλληνας Αἰγυπτίοισι ὀρθῶς ἔχοντα εἴρηται φέρε δὲ νῦν καὶ αὐτοῖσι Αἰγυπτίοισι”⁵⁰ ὥς ἔχει φράσω. εἰ σφι θέλοι⁵¹, ὥς καὶ πρότερον εἶπον, ἡ χώρα ἡ ἑνερθε Μέμφιος (αὕτη γάρ ἐστι ἡ αὐξανόμενη) κατὰ λόγον τοῦ παροιχομένου χρόνου ἐς ὕψος αὐξάνεσθαι, ἄλλο τι ἢ οἱ ταύτη οἰκούντες Αἰγυπτίων πεινήσουσι; εἰ μήτε γε ὕσεται σφι ἡ χώρα, μήτε ὁ ποταμὸς οἷός τ’ ἔσται ἐς τὰς ἀρούρας ὑπερβαίνειν. ἡ γὰρ δὴ νῦν γε οὔτοι ἀπονητότατα καρπὸν κομίζονται ἐκ γῆς, τῶν τε ἄλλων ἀνθρώπων ἀπάντων καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν Αἰγυπτίων οἱ οὔτε ἀρότρῳ ἀναρρηγνύντες αὐλακὰς ἔχουσι πόνους, οὔτε σκάλλοντες, οὔτε ἄλλο ἐργαζόμενοι οὐδὲν τῶν ἄλλοι ἀνθρώποι περὶ λήϊον πονέουσι· ἀλλ’ ἐπεὰν σφι ὁ ποταμὸς αὐτόματος ἐπελθὼν ἄρσῃ τὰς ἀρούρας, ἄρσας δὲ ἀπολείπῃ ὀπίσω, τότε σπείρας ἕκαστος τὴν ἐωυτοῦ ἄρουραν ἐσβάλλει ἐς αὐτὴν ὕς· ἐπεὰν δὲ καταπατήσῃ τῇσι ὕσιν τὸ σπέρμα, ἀμῆγον τὸ ἀπὸ τούτου μένει· ἀποδινήσας δὲ τῇσι ὕσιν τὸν σῖτον⁵², οὕτω κομίζεται.

⁵¹ εἰ σφι θέλοι. See note 385 on i. 109.

⁵² ἀποδινήσας δὲ τῇσι ὕσιν τὸν σῖτον. The word ἀποδινεῖν, “to thresh out,” which is no where else used, is connected with the word δῖνος in the sense of “a threshing-floor” (ἀλως). This term was used by TELESILLA, the Argive poetess (ap. Athen. xi. p. 467), and it was therefore probably a local phrase at Argos in the sixth century B.C. But, as relating to the culture of the soil, it would be a phrase belonging to the Achæan perioeciæ, rather than the Cadmæo-dorian citizens of the town Argos. Now the Heraea at Samos and Mycenæ are a clear indication that a considerable portion of the Samian population was ethnically identical with these perioeciæ. (See note on vi. 81.) They therefore might very well have brought the word ἀποδινεῖν with them and preserved it; and in Samos Herodotus would learn to use it. The term δῖνος would be appropriate when it applied to the operation of treading out corn by a string of oxen, who are made to go round and round,—the driver generally sitting in the middle and holding the reins which confine them. This according to WILKINSON was not always the case with the ancient Egyptians, although there are instances of it; but this is no objection to the application of the Hellenic term to the operation. Wilkinson (Second Series, i. p. 92) reads βουσι for δού in this passage. But all the MSS have δού, and, although it is impossible to conceive swine employed for the purpose, it is not unlikely that the reading is genuine, and that Herodotus merely misunderstood his informant. The swine were probably turned upon the land as the inundation subsided to consume the water-plants which would be left by the river.

It may be remarked that this section can hardly have stood at the same time with some other parts of the book. (See below, § 47.) Here there is no distinction between the συῶται and the other agriculturists (which Wilkinson fruitlessly endeavours to establish with a reference to § 47). Each individual ryot is represented as cultivating his own plot of land in the way described.

⁵³ ἀπὸ Περσέος καλομένης σκοπιῆς. STRABO puts the Περσέος σκοπιή together with the Μιλησίων τεῖχος, and places the two apparently just east of the Βολβίτινον στόμα, which he makes next to the Canobic (xvii. p. 439.)

⁵⁴ Ταριχειῶν. The MSS here vary between Ταριχειῶν (which S has, and Gaisford adopts), Ταριχῶν, and Ταριχειῶν. In § 113 all without any exception have the common form, as the majority have here. This was apparently a factory for salting fish. Wesseling makes the extraordinary mistake of supposing that the place received its name from its being a neropolis of embalmed animals. The term ταριχεύειν no doubt is the proper one for embalming; but its more common, and perhaps its original, use, is in the preparation of salt provisions, chiefly fish. STRABO (xvi. p. 379) speaks of αἱ καλούμεναι Ταριχεῖαι, where it is quite certain he must mean an establishment for salting fish. There was a similar factory at the Canobic mouth of the Nile (below, § 113). So there was on some small islands off the coast, about 100 miles south of Carthage. (STRABO, xvii. c. 3, p. 492.) JULIUS POLLUX (vi. 48) enumerates ταρίχη Πόντικα, ταρίχη Φρύγια, ταρίχη Αἰγυπτία, ταρίχη Σαρδῶνα, and ταρίχη Γαδελρῖκα. The Pontic is called Byzantine by ANTIPHANES and NICOSTRATUS (or Philæterus) the comic poets (ap. Athenæum, iii. p. 118).

⁸⁸ στάδιοι εἰσι εἴκοσι καὶ ἑκατὸν καὶ ἑξακισχίλιοι. Herodotus's informant perhaps meant by Thebes the Theban nome :
for, vast as the city doubtless was, he could never have so much exaggerated its dimensions. But it is very strange that the author should not say more upon the subject, the ruins of the temples of Luxor and Karnac (which would both be included within the circuit of the city of Thebes), being even at the present day more striking than the pyramids themselves; and the more strange, as "the hundred-gated Thebes" was proverbial for magnificence in the days of the Iliad (ix. 383). If this passage stood alone, we might suppose that he did not land at Thebes, but passed up the river in a boat, and, struck by the enormous extent of building on each bank, interpreted the assertion of his dragoman to apply merely to it. But see note 10, above.

⁸⁹ ἀρξαμένην ἀπὸ Καταδούπων τε καὶ Ἐλεφαντίνης πόλιος. Up to this point the course of the river is uninterrupted by rapids, and a commercial communication could be carried on by the tow-boat.

This would be not so great above Thebes;
for there seems little doubt that all the thorough trade from the Arabian gulf met the Nile (or rather a canal run from the Nile) a little below Thebes, at Coptus, from which in the time of the Ptolemies
there was a regular caravan route to Moussé Roads (Myos Hormos). Nevertheless, a large camp existing at Elephantine both in the time of the Egyptian and Persian dynasties (§ 30) would undoubtedly occasion considerable intercourse with Lower Egypt. The force of the Etesian winds was felt for about forty days, from the latter end of July, as high up the river as that island, and, the waters being out, no doubt advantage was taken of them.
They blew so strong that it took only twelve days to get from Alexandria to Coptus. (VINCENT, Commerce of the Ancients in the Indian Ocean, vol. ii. pp.
83—5.) By the Sebennytic branch the time was probably rather less. See note on § 8, above.

⁶⁰ ἐξίει. See note 604 on i. 180.

⁶¹ τὸ Βουκολικόν. This mouth of the Nile is probably the same as that called by the name Φατικόν in STRABO (xvii. p. 438) and Φατικικόν, after Stephens's emendation, in DIODORUS (i. 33. xx. 75). Both the names appear to be Hellenic renderings of an Egyptian word; for it seems clear that the phrase was derived from the inhabitants of the region, a horde of piratical herdsmen, apparently of different race from the agricultural Egyptians (ACHILLES TATIUS, iii. 9). They haunted the most marshy part of the Delta, where the papyrus reeds effectually masked their retreats. A very graphic account of the locality and of the habits of the race is given by HELIODORUS, i. 5, and ACHILLES TATIUS, iv. 12.

⁶³ τῆς ἐμμενωτοῦ γνώμης ὕστερον. It would seem from this expression, that in visiting Egypt the author did not enter the Nile by the Canobic mouth, otherwise he could hardly have failed to learn the answer which the Mareotes had received on a point which obviously interested him. The distances given above (§ 9) confirm this view.

⁶⁴ ἐκ Μαρῆς τε πόλιος. For the site of Marea see note on iii. 12. Its importance as a key to the western entrance of Egypt caused a large body of troops to be habitually maintained there (§ 30), and intercourse with the tribes of the desert (see SCYLAX, in note on iv. 168), and the commercial traders who resorted to the Canobic mouth of the Nile, added to the natural tendency of a soldiery to indulgence, would doubtless much modify the habits of the inhabitants. The banks of the adjoining lake were almost the only part of Egypt where wine was produced; and by STRABO's description it would seem that the whole neighbourhood was full of places of public entertainment, such as might be expected in the vicinity of a camp (xvii. p. 438). What existed in his time, doubtless, under similar circumstances, existed a thousand years before. Hence it is not surprising that revolts should break out in this locality, as seems more than once to have been the case (see notes on ii. 161 and iii. 12. 99), and that an impatience of the strict sacerdotal régime should endeavour to find a religious sanction for itself.

⁶⁵ καὶ Ἄπιος. Herodotus does not mention this place elsewhere. SCYLAX puts it in the immediate vicinity of Parætonium, to which he gives the following distances. From Thonis to Pharos 150 stades; from Pharos to the port of the Chersonese 200 stades; thence across the gulph of Plinthis to Leuce Acte a day and night's run; from thence to Laodomeantium half a day, and finally to Parætonium another half. Apis is, he says, the frontier of Egypt (p. 44, ed. Hudson). I do not imagine Herodotus to have any other place in his eye than the Apis of Scylax and Strabo, but I do not suppose him to have seen it, or to have any distinct notion of its size. See note 22, above.

⁶⁶ ἔα. The second person singular ἔας is used in i. 187.

⁶⁸ αὔρας. The remark seems suggested by a notion that the pestilential miasma (βορβοράτης ἰκμᾶς) conveyed from the marshy banks of rivers, was identical with the breeze which is its vehicle. The healthiness of Egypt has always been notorious. STRABO expressly accounts for the freedom of Alexandria (although in does not mean that they do not blow at all, but that they do not begin to blow before the beginning of the rise of the river; and that this was observed often to occur.

⁷⁰ πολλοὶ μὲν ἐν τῇ Συρίῃ ποταμοί.
Some exception has been taken to this argument, from the fact that the course of the Syrian rivers is not in the opposite direction to the Etesian winds, which were nearly north-western in that part of the Mediterranean. But, in fact, the name Etesian wind came to be applied to every strong wind continuing long in the same quarter, especially if of a periodical character. DIONORUS expressly says that the winds called ἀργέσται (the "albus lapyx" of Horace) had the term Etesian applied to them (i. 39). And these blew from a part somewhat south of the west.

⁷¹ ἀπὸ τοῦ Ὁκεανοῦ ῥέοντα. The writer doubtless alludes to the composers of the γῆς περίοδοι, of whom he speaks contemptuously below (iv. 36). Among them, possibly, Hecateus is to be reckoned. See below, § 23, ὁ περὶ τοῦ Ὁκ. λέξας.

⁷² ἐκ Λιβύης. From this phrase it may be gathered that, in the mind of the writer, the westernmost branch of the Nile, or White River, was regarded as the main channel. See also below, § 31, ῥέει δὲ ἀπὸ ἐσπέρης τε καὶ ἡλίου δυσμέων.
There now remains no doubt that this view is quite erroneous.

doubt that in the article here is a relic of the word τεκμήρια, by the adoption of which all difficulty will be removed from the passage. The plural τῶν is used because the point which Herodotus wants to prove is, "that the course of the Nile is from a very warm region to a colder one." But this position is only to lead to the more particular one, "that the inundation is not due to melting snow;" and accordingly, after his usual manner, he limits the question at issue by the clause, ὡς οὐδὲ εἰκὸς ἀπὸ χιόνος μιν ῥέειν. Without some emendation, no sense can be given to the passage.

ἡμέρησι. It is strange that this notion should be entertained by a traveller in Scythia, Armenia, or Media. Even Mount Argæus has snow on it during the whole year,—a fact which must have been known to the natives of all the country from which it could be seen, including the high road to Susa.

⁷⁶ ἀλειυνῆς, "lying open to the sun." This word (the apricus of the Latins) is connected with ἀλέη, and apparently belongs (in the sense in which it is here used) to Ionia. Ἀλέη is found once in the same sense in the Homeric poems, in a passage remarkable also for another circumstance (θερέω, in the sense of "to get warm"). αὐτῇκε' ἐπεὶ κε πυρὸς θερέω, ἀλέη τε γένηται (Odyss. xvii. 23). In that passage, a various reading, ἐλέη, is found, and the word is interpreted by the Scholiast as θερμασία, κυρίως ἢ τοῦ ἡλίου. HIPPOCRATES uses the expression τοὺς περιπάτους ποιεῖσθαι ἐν ἀλέῃ. Perhaps the two forms, ἀλέη and ἐλέη, are local varieties of an original form, ἀελέη, of which traces remain in the epithet ἐκάλῃς, coupled by Hesiod with λείσχη (see note 513 on i. 153). XENOPHON, in several passages, uses the word ἀλειυνὸς as applied to a region, and opposed to ψυχινός, which may be explained from his Asiatic experiences. But through the traffic with Ionia it would come to Athens, and be used in popular language without any reference to its original meaning, as it is by ARISTOPHANES, simply in the sense of "warm":

ψυχὸς γὰρ ἦν, ἐγὼ δὲ λεπτὴ κάσθευῃς·

⁷⁷ τότε μὲν γὰρ . . . πείζεται. In other words, Herodotus considers the Nile during the inundation to be in its normal condition, the height of the water then being the result of the balance between the supply of its sources and the evaporating power of the sun in the lower part of its course. During the winter, he conceives this last agency to be exerted at the sources, thus cutting off the supplies from the lower parts, which, no rain falling in Egypt, have no means of recruiting themselves.

In the next sentence, the expression, ἡ στάσις τῶν ὥρέων, “the position of the seasons,” instead of τοῦ ἡλίου κατὰ τὰς ὥρας, is illustrated by what has been said in note 12.

* ταύτῃ δὴ. So S. Gaisford, with most MSS, has ταύτῃ δέ.

⁷⁹ ἐν Σαί πόλι. For the site of Sais, see note on § 163. WILKINSON (Modern Egyptians, i. p. 187) places it on the eastern bank of the Nile, about a mile inland. It is to the north of a village, now called Sa-el-Hagar (Sa of the Stone), probably from the remains. See a description of the ruin in note on § 169.

γὰρ αὐτὸν χιλιάδων ὀργυιέων πλεξάμενον κάλον κατέειναι ταύτη, καὶ οὐκ ἐξικέσθαι ἐς βυσσόν." οὕτω μὲν δὴ ὁ γραμματιστής, (εἰ ἄρα ταῦτα γεγόμενα ἔλεγε,) ἀπέφαινε, ὡς ἐμὲ κατανοέειν δίνας τινὰς ταύτῃ ἐούσας ἰσχυρὰς καὶ παλιρροίην²². οἷα δὲ ἐμβάλλοντος τοῦ ὕδατος τοῖσι οὖρεσι²³ μὴ δύνασθαι κατιεμένην καταπειρητηρίην ἐς βυσσὸν ἵεναι. Ἄλλον δὲ οὐδενὸς οὐδὲν ἐδυνάμην πυθέσθαι. 29 ἀλλὰ τοσόνδε μὲν ἄλλο ἐπὶ μακρότατον ἐπυθόμην, μέχρι μὲν Ἐλεφαντίνης πόλιος αὐτόπτης ἐλθὼν²⁴, τὸ δ' ἀπὸ τούτου ἀκοῇ ἤδη ἱστορέων. ἀπὸ Ἐλεφαντίνης πόλιος ἄνω ἰόντι, ἄναντές ἐστι χωρίον ταύτῃ ὧν δεῖ τὸ πλοῖον διαδήσαντας ἀμφοτέρωθεν, κατὰ περ βούν²⁵, πορεύεσθαι ἣν δὲ ἀπαρραγῇ, τὸ πλοῖον οἴχεται φερόμενον ὑπὸ ἰσχύος τοῦ ῥόου. τὸ δὲ χωρίον τοῦτο ἐστὶ ἐπὶ ἡμέρας τέσσαρας πλόος²⁶. σκολιὸς δὲ ταύτῃ, κατὰ περ ὁ Μαλιάνδρος, ἐστὶ ὁ Νεῖλος.

Beyond Elephantine the writer did not go: but he describes from hearsay the rapids, the mode of towing, and the island Tachompeo.

²⁴ μέχρι μὲν Ἐλεφαντίνης πόλιος αὐτόπτης ἐλθὼν. This phrase occasions very great difficulty. Is the author himself the αὐτόπτης spoken of here? If so, how comes the fact of the insular position of Elephantine, and its bearing from Assouan, to be so strangely ignored? See notes 36 and 80, above.

²⁵ κατὰ περ βούν, "just like an ox," i. e. with a rope tied to each horn, to prevent the animal from suddenly bolting when led to sacrifice. EURIPIDES perhaps had the Egyptian mode of towing in his mind when he wrote of the drawing the wooden horse into Troy (Troad. 537):

κλωστοῦ δ' ἀμφιβόλοις λίνοισι, ναὺς ὥσελ σκάφος κελαινδὸν, εἰς ἔδρανα λάϊνα δάπεδά τε φόνια πατριδὶ Παλλάδος θέσαν θεάς.

²⁶ τὸ δὲ χωρίον . . . πλόος. The author does not say from what points the reckoning is to be made, but one may presume he intends Elephantine, and that the ἄναντες χωρίον denotes the rapids at the second cataract. This is described by WILKINSON (Modern Egyptians, ii. p. 332) as less interesting than the cataract of Syene, but more extensive, being a succession of rapids which occupy a space of several miles, called Batin el Hagar, "the belly of stone," a locality suggesting such a mode of tracking (i. e. simultaneously from both banks) as the author describes. But the actual distances disagree very much with the other estimates of Herodotus. In § 9, he lays the distance between Elephantine and Thebes at 1800 stades. Now the real distance (as estimated by Wilkinson) is 124 miles, which gives about 14·5 stades to a mile. An excess, though much smaller in extent, likewise appears between Thebes and the sea, which Herodotus puts at 6120 stades; and, its real distance being 566 miles and a half, about 10·8 stades must be reckoned to the mile. But the distance from Elephantine to the second cataract is 232 miles, and, if the day's sail be reckoned at 9 schœni of 60 stadæ each (as in § 9), the result will be less than 9½ stadæ to a mile. As the difficulties of progress would be much increased above Syene, one would expect the variation to be exactly in the opposite direction. Wadi Halfa, which is in the immediate proximity of the second cataract, is said to be in lat. 21° 50'.

⁹⁷ Ταχομφῶ. Modern travellers have found nothing at all resembling the description given in the text of this island or the lake in its vicinity.

⁹⁸ τὴν διεκπλῶσας . . . ταύτην ἐκδιδοί. The manuscript S has τὴν δὲ ἐκπλῶσας ἐκ τοῦ Νείλου τὸ ῥέεθρον ἤξεις τὸ ἐκδιδοί ἐς τὴν λίμνην ταύτην.

⁹⁹ παρὰ τὸν ποταμὸν. This can scarcely be the description of a person who himself made the journey. The road through the desert saves the great bend which the river makes to the westward, and in that part is many days' journey from the bank. The rapids last for about 120 miles above

Meiharraka (in the neighbourhood of which Tachompso ought to be) to Wadi-Halfa; but above that point the river is again available for navigation.

¹⁰⁰ ἐν ὅσῳ περ ἐξ Ἐλεφαντίνης ἦλθες. The time to Meroë would be 4 + 40 + 12 days, besides the time (whatever it might be) occupied in passing from Tachompso to the point where the land-journey commenced, and also that consumed in passing the rapids, a distance of twelve schœni (§ 29). It seems clear, therefore, that the time to be occupied in reaching the Automoli was conceived as not less than four months from Elephantine; i. e. they were simply placed at the extremity of the country of which there was any knowledge. See § 31.

jamin,” Genesis xxxv. 18). The tale of the deserters agrees with these two etymologies; in Egypt, they are Asmat in the Egyptian sense of the word; in Ethiopia, the same in the Ethiopic. DIODORUS SICULUS, writing at a time when Egypt had become thoroughly Hellenized, gives a Hellenic version of the etymology. According to him, Psammitichus, in an expedition against Syria, had given the right wing in his army to his Hellenic mercenaries, and put the native troops on the left: an indignity which caused the secession (i. 67).

^a ἄλλη δέ. Bekker omits the last of these two words as an interpolation. But, alone, its entrance into the text cannot be accounted for. The two words together seem to have crept in from the margin, where they were written by some one who thought it necessary to point out that the corps in Daphnæ was a different one from that in Elephantine.

¹ καὶ ἐν Δάφνησι. It seems strange that he should not also have mentioned the corps d'armée at Mareia. Is it conceivable that this was annihilated in the successes of Inarus, when he destroyed Achæmenes (see note on iii. 12), and that the visit of the writer to Egypt took place between that time (B.C. 460) and the complete re-establishment of the Persian power in the western angle of the Delta?

² Ψαμμίτιχος δὲ πυθόμενος ἐδῶκε. At Abou-simbul in Nubia, an inscription was found in the Greek language on a temple, beginning with the line βασιλέως ἐλθόντος ἐς Ἐλεφαντίναν Ψαμμίτιχο. This is described by WILKINSON (Modern Egyptians, ii. p. 329), who gives a copy, as “the curious Greek inscription of the Ionian and Carian soldiers of Psamaticus sent by the Egyptian king after the deserters.” The inscription mentions neither deserters nor soldiers, either Ionian, Carian, or of any other nation; but merely that certain individuals (two of whom were Damearchus the son of Amcebichus, and Pelephus [qy. Telephus] the son of Udamus (?)), in the company of one Psamaticus the son of Theoclus, sailed up the river beyond a place called Cercis. To say nothing of the Doric forms, Elephantina, Psamaticus, and Damearchus, which indicate no Ionic writer, or of the use of the letters ψ, χ, φ, ω, and η, which were probably not written in the time of the monarch Psammitichus, it is plain that no real “illustration of Herodotus” is to be looked for here.

³⁴ Ἑτεάρχῃ τῷ Ἀμμωνίων βασιλεῖ. The Hellenic name of this chief is perhaps the translation of a significant native word. Besides the intercourse of the Cyrenæans with Ammon, the fact of the Oasis (El Wak) being tenanted by Samians (iii. 26) shows the vigour with which, in very early times, the Hellenic towns extended their commercial enterprises.

³⁵ ἀπικέσθαι ἐς λέσχην, "got into a conversation." See note on ix. 71.

³⁶ ἥ τελευταί τῆς Λιβύης. The promontory Soloeis is mentioned again iv. 43, where it seems to be regarded as the last landmark known to the Phœnicians. In the Periplus of HANNO it is described as covered with trees, and as lying east of Thymiatierium, which latter again is two days' sail outside the straits. SCYLAX makes it two days from the straits to the promontory of Hermes; from thence to Soloeis three more; and to Cerne the island seven further still.

They probably reached the upper Nile.

⁹⁸ τὴν ὁδὸν ποιευμένους πρὸς ζέφυρον ἄνεμον. As these words are placed, it would seem to be the meaning of the writer that the westerly course of the Nasamones commenced after their arrival in the region of the desert. This rather militates against the notion that the route they followed was nearly the same as that taken by Denham and Clapperton in 1823 (which runs nearly south from the neighbourhood of the tropics in a longitude of about 15° to the great central lake Tchad), and would go to favour the theory which brings them to Timbuctoo. The recent origin of the existing city is no objection whatever to this view, any more than the different stature of the existing natives. Moreover, there is no doubt that the river at Timbuctoo flows to the east, which is far from certain of the Yeou, the river in the immediate neighbourhood of the lake Tchad. See ALLEN (Journal of the Geographical Society, vol. viii.). Neither is the lake Tchad itself accurately described as a series of extensive swamps,—at least the western end of it, which alone is known. That description is more applicable to the neighbourhood of Socato (lat. 13°, long. 6°) where Clapperton died, and the caravan track said to exist from Mourzouk in Fezzan to that place would be in its general bearings about s.w.

⁹⁹ ἄνδρας μικροὺς. It would seem not unlikely that, in the times of which Herodotus is speaking, that diminutive race, the Bosjemans, which still exist here and there in Southern Africa, was more widely extended.

⁹⁹ [ὥς οἱ Κυρηνάιοι ἔλεγον]. These words are omitted in S. If they are genuine, they appear to be out of place, and to have been originally written after the words Ἐτεάρχου λόγος. But they seem to me to be a marginal note.

Continuation of the description of Egypt.

Ἐρχομαι δὲ περὶ Αἰγύπτου μηχανεύων τὸν λόγον, ὅτι πλείστα θουμάσια ἔχει ἢ ἄλλη πᾶσα χώρα, καὶ ἔργα λόγου μέζω παρέχεται πρὸς πᾶσαν χώραν τούτων εἵνεκα πλέω περὶ αὐτῆς εἰρήσεται.

¹⁰¹ Πυρρήνης πόλιος. This is the only place in which Herodotus speaks of this city. It is plain that he has the vaguest notions of the localities he mentions. The Celts of which he speaks must be looked for in Lusitania, if any where at all.

¹⁰² Κυνησίοισι. See note on iv. 49, μετὰ Κύνητας.

¹⁰³ ἐνθεύτεν δὲ . . . εὐζώνῳ ἀνδρὶ. This passage appears to me to be an interpolation. It has nothing to do with the particular point the author has in hand, viz. to show a kind of analogy between the Ister and the Nile. It is also quite contrary to facts; and perhaps is derived from a misunderstanding of i. 72, where see note 246.

¹⁰⁴ ἡ δὲ Σινώπη τῷ Ἰστρῷ ἐκδιδόντι ἐς θάλασσαν ἀντίον κέεται. Probably a merchant-vessel going from the Ister to Phasis (see note 363 on i. 104) would lay her course for Sinope, or on the opposite course run for the Ister from Sinope.

Strange contrariety between the Egyptians and other nations.

¹⁰⁵ τὰ πολλὰ πάντα ἐμπαλιν τοῖσι ἄλλοις ἀνθρώποις ἐστήσαντο ἥθεά τε καὶ νόμους. The words τὰ πολλὰ and πάντα are not to be taken together, but the latter to be coupled with ἐμπαλιν. Translate "in most things they have established customs and laws for themselves, in every point the reverse of other men." (See note on i. 203.) NYMPHODORUS (ap. Schol. in Soph. Œd. Col. 337) exaggeratingly says that the only thing in which the Egyptian and Hellenic manners coincided was, that with both nations the younger men made way for the elder in public.

¹⁰⁷ ὑφαίνουσι. These were doubtless the manufacturers of the linen for which Egypt was famous. (See the first note on § 164.) A state of civilization implying a division of labour would induce the practice which so forcibly struck a Greek visitor, in whose country the clothes of the household would be manufactured by the industry of the female members of the family. SOPHOCLES alludes to it (Œdip. Col. 337):

ἃ πάντ' ἐκείνῳ τοῖς ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ νόμοις φύσιν κατεικασθέντε καὶ βίου τροφὰς· ἐκεῖ γὰρ οἱ μὲν ἔρσεως κατὰ στέγας θακοῦσιν ἰστυουργοῦντες, αἱ δὲ σύννομοι τᾷ βίῳ τροφεία πορσύνουσ' αἷ.

NYMPHODORUS (i. c.) gives several other particulars, and adds that these habits were introduced by Sesostris with the intention of rendering his subjects effeminate, —the same policy which Croesus recommends Cyrus to pursue towards the Lydians (i. 155).

¹⁰⁹ τοὺς κρίκους καὶ κάλους. It is very difficult to say exactly what is here meant. The writer alludes to some arrangement which was familiar to his hearers, and from this very circumstance abstains from the explanation which would be welcome to a modern reader. I am disposed to think that the κρίκοι καὶ κάλοι are the apparatus for reefing the sails; viz. a row of eyelet holes parallel to the seam of the sail, through each of which a short line is run, and prevented from coming out by a knot at each extremity. In the act of reefing, the portion of the sail which lies below this row is rolled up and secured by the short lines in question. It would seem from the text that the operation was in Egypt effected by drawing home the knot on the inside of the sail, but in Greece by doing the same with that on the outside. Accordingly they would make fast the reef-points in the one case on the inside (or weatherly side) of the sail, and in the other on the outside (or lee side). In both instances the knot drawn home would be the larger of the two, and would lie, like a button, over the twist which would be taken by the other end round it. In Liddell and Scott's Lexicon (v. κάλος) the true explanation of ΕΥΡΙΠΙΔΕΣ, Troad. 93, καρὰ δόκει Ὅταν στράτευμ' Ἀργείων ἐξίη κάλος is missed, from a mistaken apprehension that ἐξίναμι κάλος means the same thing as χαλᾶσαι πύδα. But the former means to "shake out the reefs,"—a proceeding appropriate to fine settled weather and a steady light breeze. Poseidon accordingly, who is meditating the destruction of the Greeks, watches the opportunity when the fleet shall be carrying as much canvas as possible. The latter expression, on the contrary, means to "ease off the sheet," the word τοῦς signifying the line which secures the leemost extremity of the bottom of a sail. To let this go is, as the Athenians knew well from their experience of the ferry between the Piræus and Salamis, the only way to save a boat from capsizing when a squall suddenly strikes her.

^a δις. CHAMERON (ap. Porphyry. De Abstin. iv. 7) makes their daily ablutions to be three in number, one on rising, one before dinner, and one before going to sleep.

¹¹⁰ οὔτε τι τῶν οἰκητῶν τρίβουσι. The priests apparently had a common domain, free from taxes, and held by them as a corporation. On the other hand, the individual cultivators, the ryots, were regarded as the tenants at will of the sovereign. Compare Genesis xlvii. 18—26 with § 109, below.

¹¹¹ οἶνος ἀμπέλινος. It is a question from whence this wine must have come. Since the time of Psammitichus doubtless the commodity formed a large part of the imports from Hellas; and it was from thence probably that the bulk of the wine consumed at the festival of Bubastis (described below, § 60) was derived. In later times it was said that antecedently to the days of Psammitichus the Egyptians abstained from wine on religious grounds, believing the juice of the grape to be the blood of the giants which warred against the gods, from whose buried bodies the vine had sprung (EUDOXUS, ap. Plutarch. De Isid. et Osiride, p. 353). But the mention of "the chief butler," as a high officer of state in the court of a Pharaoh (Genesis xl.), seems quite opposed to this view; and as there is no early authority for it, but on the contrary ΗΕΚΑΤÆΥΣ related that the kings used to drink a metretes of wine by the special order of the sacred writings, I should rather be disposed to consider it as referring to a dogma of later growth than the time of Herodotus. That the bulk of the population did not drink wine habitually seems clear from the scoff of the Achaean king Pelasgus in ÆSCHYLUS:

εὐρήσας' οὐ πίνοντας ἐκ κριθῶν μέθην (Suppl. 953).

But this circumstance probably arose from the cultivation of the vine being possible in very few parts of Egypt (see note on § 77), while the country was especially favourable to the growth of cereals. So little general belief attached to the superstition mentioned by Eudoxus, that TIBULLUS identifies Osiris even with the wine-god Dionysus, and attributes to him the invention of vine-culture. (Lib. i. Eleg. vii. 33):

"Hic docuit teneram palis adungere vitem, Hic viridem durā cedere falce comam."

¹¹² ἀρχιέρεως. This is the reading of Gaisford on the authority of several MSS, and it is defended by the use of the same form by DIO CASSIUS. But it is contrary to analogy, and other MSS (among which is S) have the common form ἀρχιερέως.

to be observed that the writer here simply substitutes the Hellenic equivalent for the Egyptian deity Apis. In § 153 he explains that they are identical. There can be no doubt that the Egyptian deity is the original one; but the Greeks, after their usual wont to account for all the legends they found by a reference to their own mythology and language, derived Eraphus from ἐραφεῖν. ÆSCHYLUS, Prom. 848:

ἐνταῦθα δὴ σε Ζεὺς τίθησιν ἔμφρονα ἐπαφῶν ἀταρβεῖ χειρὶ καὶ θίγων μόνον ἐπάνυμον δὲ τῶν Διὸς γεννημάτων τέξεις κελαινὸν Ἑραφον.

¹¹⁴ ἐπ' αὐτοῦ, i. e. τοῦ βωμοῦ. The wine was so poured as to fall in a jet on the crest of the victim, and from thence on to the altar.

¹¹⁶ ἐπ' ὧν ἔδοντο. This imesis of the preposition from the verb with which it is compounded and the interposition of the particle ἂν is exceedingly common in Herodotus, although it seems to be confined to the aorist. Attempts have been made to explain the usage,—some on the principle that it implies an habitual practice, some on the ground that it is appropriate to a sudden action. But, to go no further than the present Book, the passage, § 172, κατ' ὧν κόψας, refutes the former of these views, and the passage in the text the latter. Perhaps if the anteherodotean prose writings still existed, the origin of the idiom might have been plain; but all that can now be said of it is that it is a peculiarity of the author's style which has survived the reasons of its use. The use of the word half in the spoken dialect and popular literature of the Austrian Germans is a somewhat parallel case. That provincialism is doubtless the relic of ich halte dafür, 'I guess';—but it is habitually used in cases where it would be impossible to substitute the full phrase for it with any shadow of propriety.

The manuscript S appears to agree with these, except in having the future, προνηστεύουσιν and κατεβέβηται, instead of the subjunctive of the aorist. It is quite certain that these variations cannot have arisen the one from the other.

¹¹⁹ κατὰπερ Ἕλληνας τὴν Ἰοῦν γράφουσι. There seems little question that this delineation of Isis represented her in her character of the moon, whose phases are indicated by the symbol of horns.

JABLONSKY (De vocibus Ægyptiacis, v. Isis) says that the Coptic Ioh was the proper word to denote the moon, considered merely as a physical object. He regards Isis as the mere symbolical personification of the simple Io, and the Hellenic legend to have arisen from the union of the name Io with the delineation of Isis. The word Io is said to have been, in the Argive dialect, equivalent to σελήνη (EUSTATH. ad Dionys. Perieg., cited by Jablonsky). If this be true, the word itself no doubt came from Egypt in the way of commerce, in those times to which Herodotus alludes above (i. 1), and the legend must of necessity be later. The milch-cow itself, if a symbol of Isis (which seems likely from § 132), was so in her capacity of Aphrodite Urania, i. e. as the impersonation of the productive power of nature. See note 121, below.

βάτων πάντων μάλιστα μακρῷ. τῶν εἵνεκα οὐτ' ἀνὴρ Αἰγύπτιος οὔτε γυνή ἄνδρα Ἑλληνα φιλήσειε ἂν τῷ στόματι, οὐδὲ μαχαίρῃ ἀνδρὸς Ἑλληνος χρήσεται, οὐδ' ὀβελοῖσι, οὐδὲ λέβητι, οὐδὲ κρέως καθαροῦ βοῦς διατετμημένου Ἑλληνικῇ μαχαίρῃ γεύσεται. θάππουσι δὲ τοὺς ἀποθνήσκοντας βοῦς τρόπον τόνδε· τὰς μὲν θηλέας ἐς τὸν ποταμὸν ἀπιάσι, τοὺς δὲ ἔρσενας κατορύσσουσιν ἕκαστοι ἐν τοῖσι προαστείοις, τὸ κέρας τὸ ἕτερον ἢ καὶ ἀμφότερα ὑπερέχοντα, σημητὸν εἵνεκεν. ἐπεὰν δὲ σαπῇ, καὶ προσήῃ ὁ τεταγμένος χρόνος, ἀπικνέεται ἐς ἐκάστην πόλιν βάρης¹¹⁰ ἐκ τῆς Προσωπίτιδος καλυμένης νήσου· ἡ δ' ἔστι μὲν ἐν τῷ Δέλτα, περίμετρον δὲ αὐτῆς εἰσὶ σχοῖνοι ἑννέα· ἐν ταύτῃ ὦν τῇ Προσωπίτιδι νήσῳ ἔνευσιν μὲν καὶ ἄλλαι πόλεις συχναί, ἐκ τῆς δὲ αἱ βάρης παραγίνονται ἀναιρησόμεναι τὰ ὁστέα τῶν βοῶν οὖνομα τῇ πόλει Ἀτάρβηχιν¹¹¹. ἐν δ'

When dead, they are thrown into the river, but the male animals are buried.

^a ἐκ τῆς Προσωπίτιδος καλυμένης νήσου. The site of this island, Proso-pitis, is by no means, to me, satisfactorily made out. It has been considered to be bounded by the Canopic and the Sebennytic branches of the Nile, and on the north by a canal joining the two. But if it is identical with the Προσωπίτης νομός of STRABO (xvii. p. 410), it ought, apparently, rather to be put to the south than the north of the Ἀθριβίτης νομός, and the site of this last seems decided by the ruins (still bearing the name Atreeb) which are the remains of the ancient Athribis. These are on the eastern side of the Sebennytic channel. It seems not impossible that Atarbecbis and Athribis are two different names of the same city, and that the Ἀθριβίτης νομός and Προσωπίτης νομός are likewise nearly, if not altogether, identical. If Jablonsky's interpretation of the name (for which see the next note) is correct, nothing is more natural than that there should be many duplicates of it. See note 181, below.

¹¹¹ Ἀτάρβηχιν. This name in the Egyptian language is equivalent to Ἀφροδιτόπουλις, the word Baki signifying "a city" in Coptic (JABLONSKY, sub v., who considers that the true reading here should be Ἀτάρβηκιν). The root Ἀτάρ is doubtless etymologically identical with Ἀθῦρ and Ἀθῶρ, which, according to HESYCHIUS, both signified in Egyptian "a cow," and was the name given to the third month of the year. JABLONSKY, however, considered that the name did not signify "a cow," except when that animal was regarded as the symbol of the goddesses. But although Athor is the Egyptian Aphrodite, so as to be identified with her in the text, there were some characteristics about her which made MANETHO identify her with Here. If Ataribis and Atarbecbis are, as seems probable, the same places, perhaps the original notion of Athor may be explained by considering her as uniting the characteristics of the Derceto (or Atergatis) of Syria, the Here of ante-Dorian Mycenæ, the Artemis of Ephesus, and the Nūt of the mythology developed in the parabasis of Aristophanes's Birds, vv. 685—698. Compare the description of the Sardinian goddess in the note on v. 102, and see notes on § 67 and § 141, below. PLUTARCH (De Is. et Os. p. 374) says that Athyri is one of the Egyptian names of Isis, and signifies οἶκος ὄρου κόσμος. This notion is quite in harmony with Athyr, "the sacred cow." See note on iii. 28, and note 119, above.

¹²³ τὸν δὴ Διόνυσον εἶναι λέγουσι. This Dionysus, who, as Osiris, was the common object of worship to all the Egyptians, was not the god of the vine-dressers, but the deity corresponding to the Zagreus of the Cretan mythology, or the Adonis of Cyprus (see PLUTARCH, Sympos. iv. 5). But, in another relation, Osiris was the wandering Sun (see JABLONSKY, Pantheon Egypt. ii. 1, § 8). In this Herodotus appears to refer to him below (§ 132). Subsequently to the formation of Alexandria, a purely astronomical interpretation was given to the legend of Adonis; and in later times still almost every deity of the old mythology was referred to either sun or moon (see MACROBIUS, Saturnal. i. 21).

¹²⁴ διὰ τούτους. S and b have διὰ

τούτων. These words should not be translated by so definite a phrase as "after the example of these," but "through these." They would include the case of a colony which brought its religious ritual with it like any other of its customs. It seems uncertain whether Herodotus heard the tradition he relates at first-hand from the Thebans themselves; and hence, perhaps, the reason for adding the second clause, ὅσοι . . . ἀπέχονται. See note 58, above.

¹²⁵ προέχεσθαι. S, V, b, d have προεκθέσθαι. The clause προέχεσθαι . . . ἐπιδέξαι is to be considered as an epexe-gesis of μηχανήσασθαι.

author puts it, one might suppose that the Egyptian word in the nominative case was Ἀμοῖς. But Amoun is the real form, which, indeed, is evidenced by the Hellenic equivalent Ἄμμων.

¹²⁸ τὸ οὖνομα τοῦ Ἡρακλῆος. This expression is a striking evidence of the colour which Hellenic channels gave to the facts received by the author. There is no Egyptian name which in the least degree corresponds to Heracles; those of the deities which are identified with him being Sem or Som, and Chon (JABLONSKY, Pantheon Egypti. ii. c. 3, §§ 3, 4). The only way, therefore, in which a sense can be attached to the author's remark, is to consider that he looks upon the form in which the Egyptian mythology was cast by the naturalized Greeks of his time as genuine Egyptian, losing sight (except in a few instances) of the fact of this being a mere adapted translation. See note 338 on i. 95, and note 129, below.

^a ἐχρέωντο. The subject of this word would be Αἰγύπτιοι. There is no reason whatever to believe that the Egyptians themselves ever were maritime, but see note 588 on i. 174.

¹²⁹ αὐτοί. If these were the real aboriginal Egyptians, it would be strange that they should select the reign of Amasis as a kind of epoch; but if we look upon them as naturalized foreigners, this is not wonderful, that reign being the one in which these first formed an important class (ii. 178). See note 134, below.

¹³⁰ ἱρὸν Ἡρακλέος ἄγιον. The native name of the Tyrian Heracles was Melkart, of which word the two elements are Melec, or Moloch (dominus), and Kerta, or Karta (urbs), which latter appears in Carthago and in Carteia, the Carthaginian colony in Spain. It seems likely that the Phœnician Melkart (dominus urbis) the tutelary deity of Tyre, being transported as the guardian of the trading vessels of his subjects to Corinth, there became the local Meliceria,—who betrays his origin by his character as the patron of navigators, the light in which the people of the country to which he came would naturally view him.

¹³¹ μέγας. This is the reading of all the MSS, but must certainly be corrupt.

¹³² ἐπωνυμίην ἔχοντος Θασίου εἶναι. This is considered as an instance of the pleonastic use of εἶναι, but I should rather be disposed to explain the construction in a different way, and to call εἶναι the infinitive after the composite participle ἐπωνυμίην ἔχοντος. If for these two words λεγόμενου were substituted, the construction would run perfectly regular, and ἐπωνυμίην ἔχειν is in fact a mere special case of λέγεσθαι. The Tyrian Heracles was said (a fact appearing from his surname) to be a Thasian. This is a species of the so-called construction πρὸς τὸ σημαίνον, which may be described as the using a combination of words which in the aggregate are the equivalent of one verb, in the regimen that verb would require. See note 126, above. Several examples from the Tragedians are given by SEIDLER (ad Troad. 338). The following passage from PLATO is an example of the converse procedure, ἐπωνομάσθῃ being used in the regimen of ὄνομα ἐπετέθη. Ἐπιθυμία δὲ ἀλόγως ἐλκοῦσθης ἐπὶ ἡδονὰς καὶ ἀρετῆς ἐν ἡμῖν, τῇ ἀρχῇ ὅτι βίβρις ἐπωνομάσθῃ. "But when desire drags us against our reason after pleasure, and has become the master-principle within us, to this domination has been attached the name "βίβρις" (Phædr. § 30.)

¹³³ ὄτων. This is a conjectural emendation of Valcknaer's. One MS has ὄω, and all the rest ὄων.

^a κῶς ἂν ὄδοι ἀνθρώπους θύοιεν; In spite of this argument, MANETHO (whose antiquarian knowledge was very great) positively declared that the Egyptians had been in the habit of sacrificing such men as were of a red complexion to "Ilithyia;" that they called them ἄνδρας τυφονίους, it being the colour they attributed to Typhon; and that they were marked beforehand like the oxen described above (§ 38). This custom prevailed in Heliopolis, and was put a stop to by King Amosis. (Plutarch. et Porphyr. quoted by JABLONSKY, Panth. Egypt. iii. 3, § 7.) DIODORUS SICULUS (i. 88) says that these victims were offered on "the tomb of Osiris," which being called Busiris in the Egyptian language gave rise to the Hellenic legend of the tyrant slain by Heracles, a legend of which that in the text is a slight variation. It seems probable that the Ilithyia of Manetho is the Isis worshipped at Busiris (below, § 59), and that in identifying her with Demeter we must conceive a Demeter-Brinsy or Persephone, to whom such offerings would not be inappropriate. Nevertheless, it is not impossible that Manetho's statement was founded on a misinterpretation of certain pictorial groupes, which are said by Wilkinson to symbolize conquest.

¹³⁴ γράφουσιν . . . τραγοσκελέα. WILKINSON (Ancient Egyptiana, i. p. 260) denies that this can be said of the representations of any one of the Egyptian gods whatever. The Priapeian Osiris was called Chemmo or Khem, and from the description given of the image of Pan by STEPHANUS BYZANTINUS (sub v. Πανὸς πόλις), Wilkinson conceives that he had this deity in his eye. Wilkinson also denies the truth of the aspersion contained in the latter part of the paragraph; but the allusion in the Mosaic law (Levit. xviii. 23) taken together with a fragment of PINDAR (ap. Strabon. xvii. p. 440) confirms Herodotus's statement. Nevertheless, it is possible that the Egyptians here bear the burden of exotic vices. Compare i. 135, and see notes 128 and 129 on § 43, above.

¹³⁵ οἱ αἰπόλοι. This expression has caused much perplexity, and Schæfer alters it from conjecture into οἱ κόλοι. I am inclined to think that the leading goats of the several flocks are intended by the term, which is perhaps a literal translation of an Egyptian word used in the sense of VIRGIL's Vir gregis (Bucol. vii. 7). Nor would it be wonderful that, in a locality where the deity was symbolized by this creature, there should be a kind of animal hierarchy culminating in that individual which was preserved as the image of the god. See § 69, below.

^a Αἰγυπτιστὶ Μένδης. It is said that there is nothing in the Coptic to confirm this assertion.

^b ἐπίδειξιν. This is the reading of the majority of the MSS, including S. Gais-ford, on the authority of K, P, adopts ἐπίδειξιν, which is undoubtedly more in accordance with the usage of Herodotus. But see note on vi. 81, δειξαι.

¹³⁷ κατὰ ταῦτα σχεδὸν πάντα Ἕλλησι. The κῶμος, or the riotous procession afterwards called κωμασία by the Alexandrine Greeks, differed in no respect from the parallel proceedings in Europe. SYNE-SIUS (quoted by Sturz, De Dialecto Aegyptiaca, p. 103) describes some of these processions in which the attendants of the deities went mopping and mowing with masks of hawks, ibises, or dogs, just like what may be seen in modern Rome at the Carnival. It seems not unlikely that this practice was the origin of the animal choruses in the old Attic comedy (κάμω φθῆ). See note 73 on i. 21.

¹³⁸ ὁ ἐξηγησάμενος, "he who set forth." The ἐξηγητής set forth the prescribed form of ritual, the "way" in which the deity was to be invoked, and the essential observances which were necessary in order to render him propitious. It was the consciousness of not knowing this which induced the Samaritans to send to Babylon for a Jewish priest "to teach them the manner of the God of the land" (2 Kings xvii. 27). In Acts xvii. 18 our Version renders καταγγελεὺς as if it had been ἐξηγητής, "a setter forth," which would have been a proper phrase had the apostle prescribed a ritual, instead of relating a history.

¹³⁹ ἔφηνε, "revealed." See the note on vi. 135.

¹⁴⁰ σοφισταί. See notes 95 and 99 on i. 29 and 30. The σοφὸς or σοφιστής of the early times was in many cases a hierophant; or, to speak more accurately, σοφία was considered to include the knowledge both of human and divine things. Thus ISOCRATES (Laud. Busir. § 28) says of Pythagoras, who may be considered as the representative of ethico-political science in its earliest form, that he ἀφικόμενος εἰς Αἴγυπτον καὶ μαθητὴς ἐκείνων (i. e. τῶν ἱερέων) γενόμενος τὴν τε ἄλλην φιλοσοφίαν πρῶτος εἰς τοὺς Ἕλληνας ἐκόμισε, καὶ τὰ περὶ τὰς θυσίας καὶ τὰς ἀγιστείας τὰς ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς ἐπιφανέστερον τῶν ἄλλων ἐστούδασεν. See too what Herodotus (iv. 95) relates of Zamolxis to have done after having been in the society of Pythagoras. Chilo the Lacedæmonian, one of the seven sages, is also represented by him as advising Hippocrates, the father of Pisisstratus, in a question of hieromancy (i. 59). And Epimenides the Cretan, who was especially notorious as a mystagogue, was placed by some, instead of Periander, among the number of the seven sages. (PLUTARCH, Solon. § 12.) Hence it is not surprising that the mythical ritual of a state was a most important point of public policy. See the remarks of STRABO on the subject (i. c. 2, pp. 26—29), and compare the account of what Clisthenes did at Sicyon (v. 67) and his relative at Athens (v. 69), with the notes on those passages.

¹⁴² οὐ γὰρ δὴ συμπεσείην γε φήσω. "For undoubtedly I will not allow that there was a mere coincidence between," &c. &c.

¹⁴³ ὁμότροπα. This word seems to be used in the sense of "uniform." The argument of the writer appears to be that an accidental coincidence would have produced a uniformity in the Hellenic Dionysiac ritual; and on that hypothesis there would be no trace of any portion of it any where having been recently introduced. But the sentence is very obscure, and slovenly if not corrupt.

¹⁴⁴ πάντα τὰ οὐνόματα. See notes on § 43. The manuscripts S and V have πάντων τῶν θεῶν τὰ οὐνόματα.

¹⁴⁵ καὶ "Ἡρης. MANETHO, in the syncretism of Hellenic and Egyptian deities which was attempted in the time of the Ptolemies, identified the Egyptian Athor with the Hellenic Here,—which she seems to have been in some respects. See note 121, above.

¹⁴⁶ καὶ Θέμιος. This is not at all in accordance with facts, if the Egyptian word THME be, as WILKINSON asserts, the root both of the Hebrew Thummim and the Hellenic θέμις. But I doubt the truth of the remark in the latter case.

¹⁴⁷ τούτον δὲ τὸν θεὸν παρὰ Λιβύων ἐπίθοντο. It seems quite impossible to reconcile this view with the account given in iv. 151 of the absence of all intercourse with this part of the world until comparatively recent times. It is perfectly certain that long before these both the name and the office of Poseidon were familiar to the Hellenic race.

¹⁵⁰ Πελασγοὶ οὗτοι, τοὶ περ Ἀθηναίοισι σύνοικοι ἐγένοντο. In another passage (vi.

137—140) Herodotus relates that the Pelasgians who were neighbours of the Athenians were expelled by them and migrated to Lemnos. These two statements may no doubt be combined by considering that the Samothracian Pelasgians migrated to Attica, and from thence to Lemnos. But to me it seems more likely that different traditions are followed in the two passages. The Dodonæan legend (which Herodotus here follows) is based upon the ritualistic similarity of the Cabiric worship in Samothrace to the Hermæ-symbolism and religious ideas connected therewith, at Athens. The popular Attic tradition (which is followed by him in the other passage) is one explanation (for Herodotus himself gives another) of the current proverb Λήμνια ἔργα, so worked up as to furnish a justification for the bucaniering expedition of Miltiades. For another statement which makes the immigrants into Attica to be Pelasgians from Placie and Scylace, see note 185 on i. 57.

¹⁵² εἰ ἀνέλονται, “if they must adopt.” See note 170 on i. 53.

¹⁵³ μέχρι οὐ . . . λόγῳ. The sentence is constructed as if the writer had intended to continue it with the words Ἡσίοδος καὶ Ὀμηρος τὴν θεογονίην Ἑλλήσι ἐποίησαν. But, if this had been written, the objection would not have been met, that Orpheus, Linus, and others had given a mythology professedly at a much earlier date. To forestall this objection, the writer begins a fuller explanation of the state of the case.

dern sense of the word. His words are quite compatible with a process such as that suggested in notes 164 and 366 on Book I. By giving a symmetry and consolidation to the popular creed, and clothing it in the vesture of poetry, they satisfied the imagination of their countrymen; and gradually, as their works were the chief food upon which the national intellect was nourished, they became invested with a kind of sacred character, as the universally received teachers of youth. It is from this point of view that PLATO criticizes them (see, for instance, Repub. ii. pp. 378—80), and the same feeling, only exaggerated a hundredfold, gave rise to the misplaced ingenuity of the Alexandrines to endeavour to discover in them (especially in Homer) the germ of those sciences which had by that time grown up. The great bulk of these productions have perished, but traces of their theories remain in STRABO (passim) and elsewhere. The Alexandrine Jews, from the time of Ptolemy Philometor, attempted the same thing with their sacred books, and the unfortunate results may be seen in the extant writings of PHILO-JUDÆUS.

- Χρηστηρίων δὲ περί, τοῦ τε ἐν Ἑλλήσι¹⁵⁴ καὶ τοῦ ἐν Λιβύῃ, τόνδε Αἰγύπτῳ λόγον λέγουσι· ἔφασαν οἱ ἱρέες τοῦ Θηβαίους¹⁵⁵ Διὸς “δύο γυναικας ἱρήτας¹⁵⁶ ἐκ Θηβέων ἐξαχθῆναι ὑπὸ Φοινίκων καὶ τὴν μὲν αὐτέων πυθέσθαι ἐς Λιβύην πρηθεῖσαν, τὴν δὲ ἐς τοὺς Ἑλλήνας· ταύτας δὲ τὰς γυναικας εἶναι τὰς ἰδρυσάμενας τὰ μαντήϊα πρῶτας ἐν τοῖσι εἰρημένοισι ἔθνεσι” εἰρομένου δέ μιν¹⁵⁷, ὁκόθεν οὕτω ἀτρεκέως ἐπιστάμενοι λέγουσι; ἔφασαν πρὸς ταῦτα, “ζήτησιν μεγάλην ἀπὸ σφέων γενέσθαι τῶν γυναικῶν τουτέων· καὶ ἀνευρεῖν μὲν σφεας οὐ δυνατοὶ γενέσθαι, πυθέσθαι δὲ ὕστερον 55 ταῦτα περὶ αὐτέων τάπερ δὴ ἔλεγον.” Ταῦτα μὲν νυν τῶν ἐν Θήβῃσι ἱρέων ἡκουον· τὰδε δὲ Δωδωναίων φασὶ αἱ προμάντιες¹⁵⁸.

¹⁵⁴ τοῦ τε ἐν Ἑλλήσι. These words would at first sight suggest not the oracle of Dodona, but that of Delphi (see τὸν θεὸν τῶν Ἑλλήνων, i. 90, i. e. Apollo). But Dodona is the oracle, κατ' ἐσχῆν, of the old Pelasgian population. Hence Achilles is made to invoke Zeus by the title, “King Zeus, Dodonæan, Pelasgic!” (Iliad xvi. 223.) If Herodotus is here following, without alteration, the story of a traveller belonging to a country in which the national ritual belonged to the Pelasgic family, the expression in the text may be explained; and probably it is the same person who calls the oracle at Buto, “the oracle in Egypt” (§ 155).

¹⁵⁵ τοῦ Θηβαίους. See note 611 on i. 182.

¹⁵⁶ ἱρήτας. The dissonance of this passage with that above (§ 35), ἱρᾶται γυνὴ οὐδεμία, is not satisfactorily explained by considering the women as inferior attendants, for in Dodona this does not at all answer to their description. It is easier to suppose either that the custom had been changed in Egypt, or that the two passages rest on different authorities.

¹⁵⁷ εἰρομένου δέ μιν. See note 10, above.

¹⁵⁸ Δωδωναίων φασὶ αἱ προμάντιες. There is some difficulty in reconciling this expression with the notices of Dodona in Homer. He represents the Σελλοὶ (whom PINDAR calls Ἑλλοὶ) as the δοκοῦνται of the deity. They are a set of rude ascetics (ἀνιπτόροδες, χαμαιῖναι) living round about the oracle, as the Delphi did round about Pytho in the early times (Iliad xvi. 23). In the Odyssey (xvi. 403), εἰ μὲν κ' αἰνήσωσι Διὸς μεγάλῳ θέμιστες (a passage which refers to the oracle of Dodona) there formerly existed the variation τομοῦραι for θέμιστες, and it was said that this name applied to the same persons who in the Iliad are called Σελλοί. The mountain under which the temple lay was called Τόμαρος or Τυμός (STRABO, vii. p. 126). But it seems not impossible that θέμιστες in this passage are the same as the προμάντιες spoken of by Herodotus, the same word being, perhaps, used to designate both the deity and the sacred minister, as was the case with Βάκχος, Μέλισσα, and Ζεῖληνος. (See note 216 below.) The alternative reading τομοῦραι has a feminine termination, and therefore is not unfavourable to this hypothesis. STRABO (l. c.) says that the female prophetesses came in at the time when the worship of Dione was associated with that of Zeus. If this be true, the state of things at Dodona may be illustrated by that at Pytho. The Selli and the Delphi are severally pericæans, perhaps originally hierodules, living around spots where oracles are delivered, the religion being an elemental one, and the sacred symbol an oak in the one case, a strangely shaped rock (γῆς ὀμφαλός) in the other. The original deity at Dodona was apparently considered a male one, and to this was superadded a female (Dione). The original at Pytho was female (ÆSCHYLUS, Eumenid. 2), and to this was superadded a male (Zeus, represented by his προφήτης, Apollo Loxias, Eumenid. 19). But the Apollo-worship of the Delphians gave a marked anthropomorphic character to their traditions, which, in its results, produced a strong contrast with those of Dodona in later times, although at first there was apparently a great affinity between the religions of the two places.

¹⁰⁰ Πελασγίης. It is to be observed that the author here makes the name Pelasgia co-extensive with what in his time was called Hellas, perhaps from an inaccuracy of language. For the phrase τῆς αὐτῆς ταύτης, compare § 158: ἐκ τῆς βορήνης θαλάσσης ὑπερβῆναι ἐς τὴν νοτίαν καὶ Ἐρυθρὴν τὴν αὐτὴν ταύτην καλεομένην.

^a τὴν Ἑλλάδα γλῶσσαν. According to the view of Herodotus, the Pelasgians, and not the Hellenic language, would have been learned by the female. With a similar forgetfulness, he makes the Greek name Peleiades to be given to the priestesses, although he elsewhere declares the Pelasgian language to be a barbarous one. See note 187 on i. 57.

¹⁰⁰ Πελειάδες. SERVIUS (ad Virgil. Ecl. ix. 13) says that in the Thessalian tongue the word Peliades signified both “doves” and “prophetesses.” The parallel case of Melissa (see note on v. 92) somewhat confirms this. But, if this is true, the origin of the synonym seems rather to be looked for in the pantheistic views which regarded the motions of animals as ominous, and as directed spontaneously towards sacred places. A relic of this superstition exists in the habit of the Indian Mohammedans to conceal the

¹⁶² ἡ μαντιτῇ . . . εἶναι. That the mode of divination at Thebes and Dodona may have been similar in the time of the writer is possible; but it seems certain that in the early times the divination at Dodona was from the sound of the leaves of "the talking oaks" (αἱ προσήγοροι ὄρκες, Æsch. Prom. 832). Odysseus went to Dodona "to learn the counsel of Zeus from a divine oak of lofty boughs" (Odys. xiv. 328). In later times an augury appears to have been sought from the sound of certain gongs. The first of these was made to vibrate by being struck with a scourge of brass by a figure rotating (as the wind blew) upon a fixed axis, upon which, either from juxtaposition, or from being properly harmonized, the rest sounded too, and continued so long that τὸ Δωδωναῖον χαλκίον became a proverbial expression. MENANDER applies the phrase to a female whom, when once set a-talking, it was impossible to stop (Steph. Byzant. v. Δωδώνη).—If it is this mode of divination to which the author alludes in the text, it might well be resorted to where the original conception of the deity was very different; and the identity of religion may be only a later inference from similarity of ritual. It seems pretty certain that originally the Zeus of Thebes and of Ammon were θεοὶ ὀρνέμιοι, and that the Zeus of Dodona was a θεὸς χρόνιος.

^a προσαγωγὰς. This word is apparently used to denote the introduction of the worshipper into a sanctuary in which the idol or some sacred relic of the deity was preserved, which was exhibited to him by the hierophrant.

¹⁶⁴ Βούβαστιν. Several MSS have Βούβαστον. But below (§ 67) all but one have Βουβάστι, and that one Βουβάστη; and in § 137 all have Βουβάστι. The name of the town is, according to another passage (§ 156), the same as the name of the deity. For its site, see note on § 158.

considered that Bubastis had, above all other places in Egypt, the best claim to be the birthplace of Osiris (cp. Plutarch. De Is. et Os. p. 359). Dionodorus (i. 88) says that the word means in the Egyptian language, "the tomb of Osiris" (see note on § 45). The ruins at Bahbeit are supposed to be on the site of the temple of Isis.

which was in the western part of the Delta (see note on iii. 12), not far from the head-quarters of the army which observed the north-west entrance into the country.

¹⁶⁸ εἴρηται πρότερόν μοι. This seems to refer to § 40, but it is a singular thing that there the name of the deity should not be mentioned, and also that in that passage the mournful ritual should be described as preceding, and here as following the festival. The MSS bear marks of having varied considerably in that passage; and, perhaps, the variation was once much greater than now can be traced. See note 117, above.

¹⁷⁰ ὅσῳ καὶ τὰ μέτωπα κόπτονται μαχαίρησι. Compare the conduct of the priests of Baal described in 1 Kings xviii. 28. As the circumstance of their being foreigners is regarded as being evinced by this proceeding, it seems likely that they were settlers in the country, mixed up with the population, not mercenary troops, whom no one would for an instant think of confounding with the native population. And, if settlers, they would not improbably be Phoenicians—whom, in fact, CORINNA and BACCHYLIDES identified with Carians (ap. Athen. p. 174)—a people which, from their proximity to Egypt, as well as from their commercial habits, would naturally spread into the country, and settle in it.

¹⁷¹ Λυχνοκατῇ. In the temple of Athene Polias at Athens, a lamp used to be kept burning before the idol, which was said to be replenished with oil and supplied with a new wick only once a year, on a special day. (STRABO, ix. p. 240, and PAUSANIAS, i. 26. 7.) Although the perennial character of this lamp is probably a later fiction, yet the burning lamp itself, as an appropriate emblem of the goddess, is doubtless very ancient. In the Odyssey (xix. 34) she holds it to Telemachus and his father while arming themselves.

¹⁷³ ἀπότροφον, "brought up away from home," συμμῖξαι, "to communicate with." See i. 123, συμμίσγων ἐνὶ ἐκάστῳ δ' Ἀρπαγὸς τῶν πρώτων Μήδων.

¹⁷⁴ τῶν δὲ εἵνεκεν ἀνείται τὰ ἱρὰ, "but the reasons for which the sacred animals are held sacred." The word ἀνείσθαι would properly denote the being let go free, and would originally apply to such a case as an ox or horse "turned out" to enjoy a holiday for the remainder of life. Such an indulgence, if granted on religious grounds, would be a species of dedication; and the description which STRABO gives of the Apis-bull at Memphis answers to this. JULIUS CAESAR, when he passed the Rubicon, turned loose, by way of consecration, several troops of horses ("consecravit ac vagos sine custode dimisit." Suetonius, Julius Cæs. c. 81). The Calmucks are said to turn camels loose in the same way. The term probably passed from cattle to animals where it was inappropriate, and, they being feræ naturæ, all that remained of its original meaning was the dedication to this or that deity. After undergoing this change, there was no reason the word should not be applied to the dedication even of land, especially if let go out of cultivation, and devoted to pasture or the growing timber. ¹⁷⁵ τῇ μελεδωνῷ. As the conservators of the sacred animals were of both sexes, it seems strange that the feminine gender should here be used. Possibly, in the particular case that the author had in his eye, the functionary was a woman. And the sacred animal, too, must have been of an ichthyophagous character, such as an ichneumon or cat. Such an offering as fish would have been unacceptable to a cow, sheep, goat, or asp. For a crocodile it would have been unnecessary to chop the fish in pieces. Perhaps it was in the city Bubastis that the information was gained. In the neighbourhood of that city was a very ancient Hellenic trading settlement (see note on § 154), and it appears from § 87 that there were the head-quarters of the cat-mummies.

¹⁷⁷ ἀπαγέεται. This is the reading of F, the others having the common form ἀπάγονται. There is the same variation above, § 47, where all the MSS but F have ἐκδίδονται and ἔγονται, and in i. 209, where F has κηδέεται, and the rest (with one exception, which has κηδέονται) the common form κήδονται.

¹⁷⁸ ἐν Βουβάστι πόλει. See note on § 168.

¹⁷⁹ τὰς μυγαλάς, "shrewmice." The story ran in later times that Latona, when nursing Horus, changed herself into one of these animals to escape the pursuit of Typhon, by burrowing in the earth (ANTONINUS LIBERALIS, Fab. 28). PLUTARCH (Sympoe. iv. 5, p. 670) says that the animal being regarded as blind was considered an emblem of primeval darkness. The mummies of the shrew-mouse are said to be found at Thebes, Buto, and Aithridis, probably the Atar-bechis of Herodotus (§ 41). (WILKINSON, Ancient Egyptians, ii. p. 135, 2nd Series.)

See notes on § 41 and § 141.

¹⁸⁰ ἐς Βουτοῦν πόλιν. See §§ 155, 6.

¹⁸¹ τὰς δὲ ἱβίς ἐς Ἑρμέω πόλιν. The ibis-mummies are found in abundance at Thebes and Memphis, as well as at Her-mopolis. There were three towns in Egypt which went by the last name, and there is nothing to show which Herodotus meant, or indeed whether he had any one especially in his eye, as he appears to be speaking at second-hand.

¹⁸³ χαυλιόδοντας, "tusks." This description is quite false. PORPHYRY (ap. Euseb. Præp. Ev. x. 3) says that the account of the mode of capturing the crocodile, as well as the descriptions of the phoenix and the river-horse, are, with very slight changes, taken verbally from Hecateus. It seems likely that here also the writer is speaking at second-hand. See note 19, above.

¹⁸⁴ τυφλὸν δὲ ἐν ὕδατι. This notion probably arose from the appearance of the so-called "nictitating membrane," a horny substance which the animal has the power of drawing over its eye. The crocodile was, like the tiger in some parts of India, the impersonation of the Evil principle, and received at an early period divine honours, doubtless by way of propitiation. The silly syncretism of the neo-platonists, missing the original conception of the creature as a symbol of a destructive power, fixed upon this organ as the cause of the animal's deification.

Like the Supreme Deity, it saw all things while not observed to see them! (Plutarch, De Isid. et Os. p. 381.)

¹⁸⁷ χάμψαι. WILKINSON says that this word is "a corruption of the Coptic or Egyptian Meah or Emsoh, from which the Arabs have derived their modern appellation femedh." (Ancient Egyptians, ii. p. 231.)

¹⁰⁰ νομῶ Παπρημίτῃ. See note on iii. 12.

¹⁰⁰ [ὅπλαι βοός.] These words seem undoubtedly to have crept into the text from the margin, after having been written there as an explanation of the word δίχηνον. The description is entirely false, for the foot of the animal is divided into toes like that of the elephant. Neither has it the tail of a horse. Herodotus, therefore (or his authority, see PORPHYRY, cited in note 183), could never have seen the real animal, which, indeed, is not found in the river below Thebes. But at Hermopolis, in the lower Delta, there was an image of Typhon, under the form of a river-horse, having a hawk, with a serpent in its talons, perched on its back; and on the seventh day of the month Tybi there was a festival at which the inhabitants used to eat cakes made into the form of the animal (PLUTARCH, De Is. et Os. p. 371). There was, therefore, probably, a traditional shape, which, in the course of years, had doubtless deviated considerably from its archetype, and from this the description may have been originally drawn. It is a curious circumstance that now in some of the representations in the temples the animal is found depicted with cloven hooves and with huge projecting tusks, as described by Herodotus (HAMILTON, Ægyptiaca, pl. 22); and it is a remarkable proof of the carelessness of the Greeks for the sciences of observation, that 700 years later ACHILLES TATTIUS, himself an Alexandrine, gives a description of the animal scarcely less incorrect than that in the text. He makes it have cloven hooves and large crooked incisors (iv. 2).

¹⁰¹ ἐνύδριες. The otter is unknown in Egypt, but WILKINSON says that he has known modern travellers mistake the ichneumon, when in the water, for it; and he considers that Herodotus may have been led into the error in the text by seeing this animal swimming. Another view is that he mistook the large monitor-lizard of the Nile for the otter.

^a τοὺς χηνάλωπεκας. These animals are the geese of the Nile, which obtained their name from living in holes on the bank, like foxes. They appear continually in Egyptian monuments.

¹⁹³ διὰ ἐτέων πεντακοσίων. SCHOLZ (Lez. Egypt.) supposes that the word φῶνις is derived from the Egyptian fenech, "a secular period," a conjecture which is confirmed by the circumstance that some accounts made the interval between two consecutive apparitions of the bird 1461 years, which is undoubtedly the "annus omicularis" or Sothic period (see note on § 142). But it is not easy to see what cyclical period would coincide even roughly with 500 years. IDLER (Handbuch der Chronologie, i. pp. 188, seqq.) discusses the question at length, and gives solutions by himself and others. The real cycle, which approaches the nearest to the number in the text, is that which would arise from taking the year without its intercalated days. For 487 years of 360 days equal 480 Julian years, so that in this time a civil year of that length would adjust itself to its proper place in the natural year. During this period, too, the heliacal rising of Sirius (see note 13, above) would seven times coincide with the first day of the month Thoth. The opinion of DES VIGNOLES is, that it is really this cycle expressed in round numbers to which the number 500 in the text refers. It must be said, however, on the other side, that there is no positive evidence of the recognition of such a year or such a cycle in Egypt. IDLER himself considers that 500 is merely a round number for one-third of the Sothic period of 1461 intercalated years. It seems not impossible that it is one-third of the Sothic period, regarded as the representative of an early cycle of 487 non-intercalated years. If stated itself in terms of non-intercalated years, it would be nearly 494 years, which comes closer to 500.

¹⁹⁴ ἀνθρωπομή. See the first note on ix. 31.

¹⁰⁵ κατὰ Βουτοῦν πόλιν. If this Buto is the same as that mentioned in § 69, and described in § 155, it is very difficult to give any other sense to the expression than that it is on the same line (in this case on the same parallel of latitude) as that city. It is very conceivable that a navigator would refer all the places inland to their projections (so to speak) on the course which he himself was taking,—which here would be up the river. In this way, perhaps, κατὰ Σινώπην is to be understood in i. 76. Pterie is there regarded as lying in the line which, drawn directly to the line of coast, would pass through Sinope, but without any reference to its distance.

^a τὰς δὲ ἱβίς. The ibis is a bird of a weak bill, like a curlew, and could not by any possibility destroy real snakes.

^b ἦδε. The manuscripts M, K, P, F have ἦ. The rest omit the word. I have introduced ἦδε, which is the conjecture of Schweighäuser. Gaisford follows the majority of the MSS in omitting the word; but the resulting text could not have been written by Herodotus even as a memorandum.

^c αὐχένος. Gaisford, with the majority of MSS, has τοῦ αὐχένος.

¹⁰⁶ οἷα περ τῶν ὕδρων. This statement must be second-hand, as the writer only professes to have seen the bones of the Arabian snakes. In a description of some others which he identifies with these, he calls them μικροὶ τὰ μεγάλαι (iii. 107). WILKINSON (Anc. Egypt. ii. p. 218) considers that what the author saw was the remains of bats, which are found in large quantities in some parts of Egypt. The conjecture is somewhat confirmed by the description of the wings

¹⁹⁷ λογιώτατοι, "the richest in legendary lore." See above, § 3. The abundance of monuments, to each of which a tradition attached, was singularly favourable to the cultivation of this talent. WESSLING quotes a passage from PROCLUS, which well illustrates the Egyptian practice, and shows the foundation which existed for many of their narratives: Αἰγυπτίοις δὲ ἔτι καὶ τὰ γεγονότα διὰ τῆς μνήμης ἀεὶ νέα παρέστιν, ἥ δὲ μνήμη διὰ τῆς ἱστορίας, αὐτὴ δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν σπηλαίων. The PSEUDO-SANCHONIATHON professed to derive his information ἐκ τῶν κατὰ πάλιν ὑπομνημάτων καὶ τῶν ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς ἀναγραφῶν (Eusebius, Præp. Evang. i. 10). These ἀναγραφῆαι, however, were undoubtedly in many instances not contemporaneous, but the result of a previously calculated chronology. Of this the Parian Chronicle is one obvious example, and the synchronism of Semiramis with the siege of Troy (EUSEBIUS, l. c.) another.

¹⁹⁸ ὕγιηρέστατοι. So Gaisford reads, with the majority of manuscripts. S, V, δ, d have ὕγιεστοι. The form ὕγιηρότατος is used in iv. 187. A proof of the fact stated in the case is the extremely small number of infant mummies which are found, as compared with those of adults.

¹⁹⁹ τῶν τε ἄλλων . . . μάλιστα. These words are omitted in S, V, and d.

²⁰⁰ κυλλήστεις. This was the local name given to loaves twisted into a point (POLLUX and ATHEŒNÆUS, cited by Larcher). Possibly this shape had a reference originally to the same idea which dictated the pyramidal figure. The display of religious symbolism in articles of food is found every where. See PLUTARCH, cited in note 190. VARRO (De linguâ Lat. iv. p. 30) has a fanciful derivation of the word "panis" from the god Pan, whose shape, he says, was originally given to loaves. This figure may very likely have been only a symbol something like a sugar-loaf (see note 367 on i. 105). Cakes called πυραμίδες, or πυραμῶντες, were eaten in the nightly festivals (IATROCLES, ap. Athen. xiv. p. 647), and the word panis was one of the surnames under which Ceres was worshipped in Italy.

The word was notorious as coming from Egypt, and was used as such by ARISTOPHANES in his play of the Danaides. But it has no affinity with any known Egyptian word (JABLONSKY, Vocæ Egypt. p. 117), so that possibly it belongs to the naturalized foreigners whom Herodotus elsewhere appears to treat as Egyptians. (See notes on § 43 and § 46.)

Ancient chant, called by the Egyptians Maneros, identical with the Hellenic Linus.

²⁰¹ οὐ γὰρ σφι εἰσι ἐν τῇ χώρῃ ἄμπελοι. There were no vines in that part of Egypt which was overflowed by the Nile, but there were on the banks of the lake Mareotis, and also in the Faioum, or the neighbourhood of the lake Moeris (STRABO, xvii. p. 452). See note 111, above.

²⁰² ἰχθύων. The priests never ate any of these. See above, § 37.

²⁰³ ἐξ ἄλμης τεταριχευμένους. See note 54, above.

²⁰⁴ χωρὶς ἢ ὁκόσοι. The change of gender to the masculine may perhaps be accounted for in the following manner. In the notion of the Egyptians, it was not the whole species of any animal which was primarily held sacred. At first, certain individuals, selected as the symbolic ὀνόματα of particular deities, were dedicated; and the veneration attaching to these gradually extended itself, first of all to those which resembled the sacred animal (a stage of the process which appears in the custom described above,

²⁰⁵ πάντα. This word when applied to measurements always means “in every dimension.” Here, therefore, it would imply that the mummy was of a cubical figure, which there seems no reason to suppose. I suspect the word has slipped out of its place, and that originally it occupied the site of the words καὶ γραφῇ καὶ ἔργῳ, which crept in from the margin as an interpretation of it.

^a ὧντος εἶναι. So Gaisford prints, and does not notice any MS variation. But in v. 52, there is an equal unanimity for ἐντός.

²⁰⁶ τὸν Δίων, “the Linus.” Compare νόμον τὸν ὕπνιον, “the reveillé,” i. 24. The article is used from the well-known character of the melody. So below, § 92, τῇ μέλῳ.

²⁰⁷ ἔστι δὲ Αἰγυπτιστὶ . . . Μανέρως. According to JABLONSKY (Voc. Egypt. p. 128) the word “Maneros” is equivalent to “let us sing.” He conceives the phrase to have been the beginning of the song referred to in the text, which was accordingly known by that name. Compare ARISTOPHANES, Nub. 967: ἡ "Παλλὰδα Περσέπολιν δεινὴν" ἡ "Τηλέπορον τι βοᾶμεν." In all probability this chant was used on the occasion described in § 132, and in all cognate rituals, viz. all such symbolized the temporary suspension of the vital powers of nature, whether these were represented by the decadent sun (as in the case of Osiris), or the sown seed (as in the Eleusinia), or the fertilizing showers (as in the Hyacinthia of Amyclæ). Adonis, Gingras, Iānus, Zagreus, and others, are all so many different local variations, with more or fewer adventitious features, of the same myth. The song of BRON, Aldēu tōn 'Aδωνιν, is, probably, only a Hellenic version of the ancient "Maneros" adapted to the taste of the Ptolemaic times. That of the female in THEOCRITUS (xv. 100) is another specimen, only much altered from its original style for the purpose of courtly compliment.

If Jablonsky be right, the mistake of the word "Maneros" for a proper name is another instance of the turbid nature of the sources from which Herodotus drew. In the time of PLUTARCH a place had been found for this personage in the Osiris-cycle.

²⁰⁰ 'Ελλήνων μύνοισι. In Lacedæmon the respect to the aged was most conspicuous; though the customs mentioned in the text seem to have existed universally throughout Hellas (XENOPHON, Memorab. ii. 3, 16). But the new style of education introduced by the sophists was hostile to the traditional forms of reverence as well as to most others, and hence ARISTOPHANES makes the δικαῖος λόγος exhort the young Athenians τῶν θάκων τοῖς πρεσβυτέροις θύαντασθαι προσιῶσιν (Nub. 993). As the Lacedæmonians were the most conservative of ancient usages, the difference might appear so strongly marked between them and others to a casual observer as to warrant the observation in the text.

²⁰¹ καλασίρις. JABLONSKY (Vocce. Egypt. p. 103, seqq.) is very uncertain as to the etymology of this word. He rather inclines to think that in its native form it was pronounced Shal-ha-schar (væstis ad cutem). The word Kal, however, appears to have meant "the leg," and he thinks that possibly there may be some etymological connexion.

²¹⁰ 'Ορφικοῖσι καὶ Βακχικοῖσι. The two are united in the phraseology of EURIPIDES, Hippolyt. 952:

ἤδη νυν ἀβχεῖ, καὶ δὲ ἀβήχου βορᾶς σίτοις κατήλεν, 'Ορφεύ τ' ἀνακτ' ἔχον βάκχευε, πολλῶν γραμμάτων τιμῶν καπ-νόε.

The ascetic character of the orgies, or rather of the preparation for them, as well as their substantial identity with those of the Idæan deities, may be seen in the second fragment from the Kρήτες of EURIPIDES (p. 98, Dindorf.).

²¹¹ ὁδοὶ δὲ Αἰγυπτίοισι. The transfer of these ceremonies from Egypt to European Hellas probably took place through the intercourse which was established between the two countries in the time of Amasis. It seems to have been effected mainly through the agency of Onomacritus, of whom Herodotus speaks, vii. 6. Such ἔργα or τελεταί must not, either in the case of Dionysus or any other deity, be confounded with the public ritual of the same deity, although doubtless there was a connexion between the two. They were the vehicle for what may be called the personal religion of antiquity, as the public ceremonies were for the state religion. The latter are what VALLAR calls "Theologies genus civile, quod maxime sacerdotibus nosse atque administrare debent; in quo est, quos deos colere, quae sacra et sacrificia facere quoniam par sit." The former are referred to by PLATO, ἀγόνται καὶ μάντις ἐπὶ πλεονάζον θύρας ἰόντες πείθουσιν, ὡς ἐστὶ παρὰ σφῶν δυνάμει ἐκ θεῶν ποριζομένη θούσιαι τε καὶ ἀνθρώποις εἶτε τι ἀδίκημα γίγνεται αὐτοῦ ἢ προγόνων ἀνοῖσθαι (Rep.

ii. p. 364). See HESYCHIUS, sub ε. Δύσιαι τελεταί, and EURIPIDES (Bacch. 72—81). In the time of DEMOSTHENES, the active management of these ceremonies had become a subject for contemptuous ridicule (see Orat. c. Ctesiph. p. 313), and the participation in them indicated extreme superstition (THEOPHRASTUS, Charact. 25, 4) although at the same time Aristotle could be successfully charged with blasphemy against the state religion for his scôlism to Herminias.

²¹² ἱρὸς λόγος λεγόμενος. Possibly the real origin of the practice of burying in linen was the same as that of burying in woollen in England, the desire to encourage the staple manufacture of the country.

²¹³ ὅγε μάλιστα ἐν τιμῇ ἄγονται. In § 155, he calls this oracle τὸ χρηστότερον τὸ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ, as if there was no other worth speaking of. It was probably more accessible to the foreign merchants, from its situation; and perhaps from the symbolism being analogous to that found in other mercantile haunts, for instance at Delos. See §§ 155, 6.

²¹⁴ ἐπεξωσμένοι . . . μαζοὺς. The girdle prevented the tunic from falling lower than the waist, which, when loosened for the purpose of beating the breast, it would otherwise have done.

²¹⁵ κατέεται. The Sancroft MS has κατατετάχεται, which seems to be a gloss.

²¹⁶ ἐπὶ τοιούτῳ πρήγματι. See note on § 132. WILKINSON says that Herodotus is wrong in stating that there were three distinct modes of finishing the decoration of the mummies, there being really an indefinite variety. Also that the imitation of the form attributed to Osiris was not confined to the first class of them (A. E. ii. p. 455, 2nd Series). It would appear that every individual who was considered worthy of admission to the presence of Osiris after death was allowed to assume his name and form. A parallel to this appears in the Dionysiac mysteries, the worthy participant in which was himself termed Bacchus: (Βάκχος ἐκλήθη δισσώδεις. ΕΥΡΙΠΙΔΗΣ, fragm. 2 of the Κρήτες). Hence the proverb: πολλοὶ μὲν νερθηκοφόροι παῖδοι δὲ τε Βάκχοι. See note 158, above.

πάσαν ἐκκαθήραντες δὲ αὐτὴν καὶ διηθήσαντες οἶνῳ φοινικίῳ, αὐτὶς διηθέουσι θυμῆμασι τετριμμένοισι· ἔπειτα τὴν νηδὺν σμύρνης ἀκηράτου τετριμμένης, καὶ κασίης, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων θυωμάτων πλὴν λιβανωτοῦ πλήσαντες, συρράπτουσι ὀπίσω ταῦτα δὲ ποιήσαντες, ταριχεύουσι λίτρω²¹⁹ κρύψαντες ἡμέρας ἑβδομήκοντα²²⁰ πλεῦνας δὲ τουτέων οὐκ ἔξεστι ταριχεύειν. ἐπεὰν δὲ παρέλθωσι αἱ ἑβδομήκοντα, λούσαντες τὸν νεκρὸν κατείλισσουσι πᾶν αὐτοῦ τὸ σῶμα σινδόνης βυσσίνης τελαμῶσι^b κατατετμημένοισι, ὑποχρίοντες τῷ κόμμῳ· τῷ δὲ ἀντὶ κόλλης τὰ πολλὰ χρέωνται Αἰγύπτῳ· ἐνθεῦτεν δὲ παραδεξάμενοι μιν οἱ προσήκοντες, ποιεῖνται ξύλινοι τύπον ἀνθρωποειδέα· ποιησάμενοι δὲ, ἐσεργνύσι τὸν νεκρὸν καὶ κατακλητάσαντες οὕτω θησαυρίζουσι· [ἐν οἰκήματι θηκαίῳ, ἰσάντες ὀρθὸν πρὸς τοίχον· οὕτω μὲν τοὺς τὰ πολυτελέστατα σκευάζουσι νεκρούς²²⁰.] Τοὺς δὲ τὰ μέσα βουλο- 87 μένους τὴν δὲ πολυτελετήν φεύγοντας, σκευάζουσι ὧδε²²¹. ἐπεὰν

²¹⁹ λίτρω. So Gaisford reads, with several MSS. Others have νίτρω. The substance meant is no doubt the trona of commerce (hydro-carbonate of soda), which was obtained from the so-called Natron lakes to the south of Alexandria. The words λίτρω κρύψαντες are to be taken together. The body was immersed in a bath of brine.

^a ἡμέρας ἑβδομήκοντα. DIODORUS SICULUS (i. 72) sets down seventy-two days as the time occupied, not indeed in embalming, but in mourning for the deceased, a part of which only was taken up by the actual process. (See Genesis i. 3.) That the number seventy-two should be expressed roundly as seventy may be illustrated by the parallel case of the supposed seventy-two translators of the Old Testament into Greek being habitually called the seventy.

^b σινδόνης βυσσίνης τελαμῶσι. These words have occasioned a good deal of difficulty, as the writer appears to speak of something other than linen. Yet it is ascertained that the bandages of the mummies are of that substance. Cotton was indeed in after-times cultivated in Egypt, and the dresses of the priests made of it; but, when Herodotus speaks of cotton, he calls it εἰριον ἀπὸ ξύλου (iii. 47. 106), and in the latter passage he speaks of the tree as growing in India, and does not mention it in a way to induce the belief that he saw it either in Egypt or elsewhere. Perhaps it was introduced into Egypt from India after the conquests of Alexander. The substance of which he here speaks is (I believe) a linen made from an imported flax (bysus). The Elean bysus was, according to PAUSANIAS (v. 5. 2), of a pale yellow colour (somewhat perhaps resembling raw silk). Pausanias notices that Elis is the only place in Hellas where this grows; and on this coast there was in very early times a town Samos, which undoubtedly was a settlement for commercial purposes, and probably made from the island of the same name. It existed apparently in the time of Stesichorus, and its name survived in the Σαμικὸν πεδῖον to that of Pausanias (PAUSANIAS, l. c., and STRABO, viii. 3, pp. 160, 1). It seems to me likely that the commodity began to be brought to Egypt in Psammetichus' reign from Elis by Samians; and that previously it came from Syro-Phoenicia. See notes on § 184, below. Pausanias compares the colour of the "Hebrew" bysus with that of the Elean.

²²⁰ ἐν οἰκήματι . . . νεκρούς. These words are omitted from the manuscripts S, V, d. They can hardly have dropped out; but on the other hand there is no reason to suppose them an interpolation. I look upon this as another evidence of a twofold recension.

²²¹ τοὺς δὲ τὰ μέσα . . . σκευάζουσι ὧδε. This is rather a loose expression at

- τοὺς κλυστήρας²²³ πλήσωνται τοῦ ἀπὸ κέδρου ἀλείφατος γινομένου, ἐν ᾧν ἐπλησαν τοῦ νεκροῦ τὴν κοιλίην, οὔτε ἀνατμόντες αὐτὸν οὔτε ἐξελόντες τὴν νηδὺν, κατὰ δὲ τὴν ἔδρην²²⁴ ἐσηθήσαντες· καὶ ἐπιλαβόντες τὸ κλύσμα τῆς ὑπίσω ὁδοῦ²²⁵, ταριχεύουσι τὰς προκειμένας ἡμέρας· τῇ δὲ τελευταίῃ ἐξίεισι ἐκ τῆς κοιλίης τὴν κεδρίην, τὴν ἐσήκαν πρότερον· ἡ δὲ ἔχει τοσαύτην δύναμιν, ὥστε ἅμα ἐωυτῇ τὴν νηδὺν καὶ τὰ σπλάνγχνα κατατετηκότα ἐξάγει· τὰς δὲ σάρκας τὸ λίτρον κατατῆκει· καὶ δὴ λείπεται τοῦ νεκροῦ τὸ δέρμα μόνον καὶ τὰ ὀστέα· ἐπεὰν δὲ ταῦτα ποιήσωσι, ἀπ' ᾧν ἔδωκαν οὕτω τὸν νεκρὸν οὐδὲν ἔτι πρηγματευθέντες²²⁶. first sight, but it really admits of a most satisfactory explanation. There is, in fact, no accusative case after the verb; for, if τοὺς βουλομένους, &c., were to be taken with σκευάζουσι, it would be implied that every person determined beforehand for himself how he should be embalmed. On the other hand, if the dative had been used, together with such a phrase as τὸν προσήκοντα νεκρὸν for the object of σκευάζουσι, that case (which doubtless often happened) would be excluded. The existing expression includes both cases, and τὸν νεκρὸν in the next sentence is equally applicable to the one and the other.

²²³ τοὺς κλυστήρας, "their injecting instruments." The article is used as if the reader were familiar with the fact that such things were employed,—a feature which indicates that the writer took down the exact words of a native authority, or of one who habitually saw the proceeding described.

²²⁴ κατὰ τὴν ἔδρην, "in situ," "in its natural position."

²²⁶ Ἑλληνικοῖσι... ἀνθρώπων νομαίοισι. This sentence is unintelligible as it stands. It is not to be explained on the hypothesis that φεύγουσι χρᾶσθαι is equivalent to οὐ χρᾶνται, for in that case we should have οὐδὲ... οὐδαμὰ... οὐδαμῶν in the following clause of the sentence. And the manuscripts S and V leave out the words φεύγουσι καὶ μηδαμὰ. I am disposed to think a deep corruption exists, arising probably from the combination of two different recensions. The words are as incoherent as those contained in S and V in some places where there is a great deficiency in them compared with the other MSS. See note 136 on i. 45.

(= Ham), which in Coptic is said to denote the name of the country. Dionysius (i. 18) says that Χέμμις is the name of the city, and that its meaning is Πανὸς πόλις. If it be identical with the modern Akhmim, it is on the eastern branch of the Nile, in lat. 26° 40'.

²³⁰ ταῦτα μὲν πάντα. It is not easy to say to what these words exactly refer, but it seems plain that they do not to what has immediately preceded. I should be inclined to think that once they stood next to the word θάπτουσι, which closes the ninetieth section. Οἱ κατύπερθε τῶν ἐλέων as opposed to οἱ ἐν τοῖσι ἔλεσι are not the inhabitants of Upper Egypt exclusively, but include the dwellers in the Delta, with the exception of those who lived about the region of the Sebennytic mouth, and the two false channels derived from that branch (see note 61, above), and, perhaps, also of those who inhabited the islands in the lake of Buto, if WILKINSON is right in assigning Elbo (the refuge of Amyrtaeus and the blind Anysis) to that locality. See note on § 140.

²³¹ καὶ τὰ ἄλλα καὶ γυναικὶ μὴ ἕκαστος αὐτῶν συνοικεῖ. This has been supposed equivalent to the English "in all other respects, except that each man cohabits with only one wife." But no slovenliness of style will warrant the supposition that a specially copulative conjunction is used in a specially disjunctive sense. The difficulty arises mainly from the circumstance of DIODORUS affirming that polygamy, except for the priests, was customary in Egypt (i. 80), and the consequent theory that Herodotus here wishes to note the difference in this respect among the marshmen. But it does not seem at all certain that Herodotus took the same view as Diodorus of this very point. If his notion of Egyptians was derived mainly from naturalized Ionians and Carians, the case might well be quite otherwise. If the two authorities are to be reconciled with one another, the least violent method would be to erase the word Αἰγύπτιοι after ἄλλοι, considering it to be a gloss of the latter word misunderstood.

²³² τῇ μήκωνι. The article is used from the notoriety of the μήκων or poppy-head. See notes 206 and 222, above.

²³³ ἐγγλύσσει, "gives a sweet taste." The word is explained in HESYCHIUS by the phrase ἐγγλυκάζει.

²²⁵ ὁμοιότατον. The change of gender here is observable: "a thing very like a wasp's comb." It is not the καρπὸς, but the fleshy receptacle described in the last note, which presents this appearance.

²²⁶ ἐς ἄλλο τι τράπουσι. See § 96.

²²⁷ οἱ δὲ ἂν . . . τρώγουσι, "but those who wish to have the byblus in thorough perfection stop till they have baked it in a piping-hot oven, and then eat it." The word διαφανῆς, perhaps, was originally applied in this sense to stones, which with increase of heat appeared bright to the eye (see iv. 73). But from such a case the transition is easy to other bodies where no such test of heat is applicable. This seems a more natural explanation than to suppose that ἐν κλιβάνῳ διαφανεῖ means "in a pipkin made red-hot." For the force which the word οὕτω exerts, see note 22 on i. 5.

²⁴² τῶν γὰρ ὧν ἀπορραίνουσι κατ' ὀλίγους τῶν κέγγρων. Much difficulty has been occasioned by this expression, and I am not satisfied with any explanation which has been given, or any emendation which has been proposed. If the passage be not corrupt, τὰ ὡς must be taken to mean "the roe" in the aggregate, and οἱ κέγγροι the individual eggs of which it is composed; and the passage must be translated "they keep spawning their roe by a few eggs at a time." But ὧν in the singular is so habitual an expression that it is difficult to conceive that Herodotus would have thus used the plural to denote a composite unit; and

I should be rather inclined to believe the text made up of two separate readings, each of them independent of the other:

 Description of the river-craft.

²⁴⁶ κίκι. The Hellenic name of this plant was, according to HESYCHIUS, κρότων, it being in fact that from the seeds of which the modern "Croton oil" is derived. It is the same which, in the English version of JONAH iv. 6, is called "a gourd," the old ante-hieronymian Latin versions having rendered the κολοκύνθος of the LXX by "cucurbita." A very curious dispute, not unaccompanied with bitterness, took place between S. Jerome and S. Augustine on occasion of the former having adopted the word "hedera" in his new translation from the Hebrew as a more analogous plant to the kiki. A tumult was occasioned in one of the African churches by the change, and to allay it a compromise had to be made. See AUGUSTINE, Ep. lxxv.

²⁴⁷ Ἑλλάσι. S has ἐλεσι, which is, perhaps, the true reading.

²⁴⁸ δυσώδεα. On this account the kiki ointment was used chiefly by the lower classes, and the olive oil fetched a high price.

²⁴⁹ ἀπιποῦσι, "squeeze out the juice." ARISTOPHANES makes Cleon use this word in threatening the Sausage-seller that he will "drain him dry as hay" with property-taxes:

*δόσεις ἐμοὶ καλὴν δίκην
 (Eggit. 923.)

²⁵⁰ τῷ τῆς μὲν ἡμέρης ἰχθύς ἀγρεύει. Possibly the same word in Egyptian might be used for a mosquito-net (κωνοπίον) and a fishing-net (δίκτυον), and thus occasion furnished for this story; and afterwards, to solve the difficulty of supposing that a mosquito could not pass the meshes of the latter, a further fiction invented (οὐδὲ περῶνται ἀρχῇν). But two points appear from the story; one, that the author is not speaking here from his personal knowledge; the other, that the manufactures of thread must have reached a great perfection in Egypt to allow of the fine gauze which is requisite for a mosquito curtain.

²⁵¹ ἀρχῇν. See note 42 on i. 9.

²⁵² ὁμοιοτάτῃ τῷ Κυρηναίῳ λωτῷ, "the Cyrenman lotus," i. e. that which is called "the lotus" at Cyrene. The epithat is used distinctively, because the author has just before been speaking of the Egyptian lotus (§ 92) without any distinctive epithet. The two plants were of totally different kinds, the Egyptian lotus being a bulbous water-plant, the Cyrenæan a kind of thorn (Zizyphus napæca). The tree is called in Arabic sîdr, and its fruit nabk, whence the botanical "napæca." This latter is said to be a kind of berry about the size of a wild plum, containing a nut of a sweetish taste like that of a date. In Barbary it is sold in the markets, and a liquor analogous to date wine made from it. Cattle, too, are fed with it. There can be no doubt that this is the food of the Loto-phagi (iv. 177), and probably the foundation for the story in the Odyssey (ix. 94).

²⁵³ ναυπηγεύμενοι τρόπον τοιόνδε. The great distinction between the ordinary ship-building and that of the Egyptian river-craft seems to have arisen from the circumstance that the latter were flat-bottomed, with vertical sides, and the former built with a framework, of which the several pieces were curved ribs (νομεῖς), set in a keel. The first step in making the Nile boats apparently was to set up a number of long vertical stakes near to each other, thus tracing out the outline of the sides of the barge. These are the γόμφοι of the text. Round them were carried strings of acacia plank, one course above the other (πλινθηδόν), thus producing a kind of thin bulwark. When this had been carried up a sufficient height, cross-beams (ζυγὰ) were laid on to preserve it in shape; and, this being completed for the whole length, the result was a rude flat-bottomed lighter lying bottom upwards. It does not appear to me necessary to suppose that the passing the courses of acacia plank inside and out of the stakes is involved in the word περιείρουσι. It may be observed that, in navigation like that of the Nile, no inconvenience would follow from the want of a keel, and no convexity of the sides would be required to resist a sea, while for a given draft of water a larger freight could be carried in such a build than in an ordinary vessel.

²⁵⁵ διὰ τῆς τρόπιος, "through the cut-water." The LEXICON GUDIANUM interprets this word τρόπις by τὸ κατῳάτατον μέρος τῆς νηὸς περὶ ὃ σχίζεται τὸ κύμα. Where the vessel was built with a keel, the τρόπις would be continued all along it, and hence the word might be applicable to the whole extent. But the word δρόχον seems (see POLLUX, i. 85) to be the specially appropriate term for the keel, properly so called, i.e. the backbone (as it were) in which the ribs of the vessel are set. The point which Herodotus puts prominently forward in his description is, not that the rudder is carried through the keel, but that, instead of being lashed by the side of the cut-water, it pierces it. Vessels such as the βάρης would have stem and stern alike, and would, when floating down the stream, be steered forward, the stone towing aft. See note 259.

²⁵⁶ διαβύνεται. This is the reading of the majority of the MSS. But S and V have διαδύνεται. The form διαβύνεται is found, however, in all the copies in iv. 71: διὰ τῆς ἀριστερῆς χειρὸς ὁστοῦς διαβύνεται.

At the time of the inundation, the face of Egypt is like a sea studded with islands. Boats sail from Nau-cratia to ²⁵⁷ θύρη κατερραμμένη ῥίπτει καλάμων, "a door-shaped board lashed to a crate of reeds." I conceive the machine to have acted on the principle of a ship's log, and when in operation to have presented the same appearance that the log would if thrown out from a vessel at anchor in a stream. It was probably a considerable surface of wattled work, strengthened by the parallelogram of tamarisk wood in the middle. From the centre of the whole a rope would proceed, made fast to the cut-water of the barge, and probably under water. When the barge dropped down with the stream, this machine would assume a vertical position in the water, and would be acted upon over its whole surface by the stream at a velocity equal to the difference between the velocity of the Nile current and that of the artificially retarded barge. This in some cases would be very considerable, and would be most so where an additional force would be most requisite. See note 259.

²⁵⁸ τετρημένος. S and F have τετρημένους, which would mean (if genuine) a rubbed stone or boulder, a kind very likely to be employed. But τετρημένος is more likely to be the true reading.

²⁵⁹ κατιθύνει τὸν πλόον. If the barge had floated freely in the stream, she would of course not have answered the helm. But the friction of the stone towing astern on the bottom of the river would cause her velocity to be slightly less than that of the stream, and thereby allow her to be steered. In this way, therefore, the weight may be said "to guide the course," although it did not really do so, but merely supplied the necessary conditions for enabling the helm to do it. Captain Basil Hall, in descending the river Guayaquil in South America by the force of the stream, found the same method employed for the same object. Occasionally this stone might lodge in the weeds, and the force of the stream upon the barge scarcely be sufficient to overcome the obstacle, and it seems to be for this case that the pilot-crate was intended. If it were floating in front of the barge, any sudden check received by the latter would be partially counteracted by the momentum of the stream upon the flat surface of the machine.

²⁶⁰ τῇσι ἐν τῇ Αἰγυπτῷ πόντῳ νήσοις. A very likely object of comparison to occur to a Samian trader.

writer's statement. To take ἔστι δὲ οὐκ (or οὐδ') οὗτος to mean "this is not the usual course," which Schweighäuser unscrupulously does, appears to me quite unwarranted.

²⁶² παρὰ Κερκάσωρον πόλιν. See above, § 15. 17.

the water of the Nile was in all probability out. This state of things synchronized with the prevalence of the Etesian winds, which allowed of a southward course under sail. See note 59, above. STRABO, on the other hand, seems to have visited Egypt when the waters were confined to their bed. Hence Anthylla is less likely to be his Gynæcopolis, as has been thought.

²⁶⁵ ὄψις τε ἐμῇ. These words must be taken as considerably qualified by the word γνώμη which follows them. It is impossible to suppose that the author saw any one covering himself when asleep with a fishing-net (§ 94) to keep out the mosquitoes, or live winged snakes (§ 76), or a river-horse with cloven hooves (§ 71), or a crocodile with tusks (§ 68). It is difficult to conceive that he was at Elephantine (see note 84, above), or saw swine employed in threshing (see note 52, above), or even was at Thebes itself (see note 10, above).

²⁶⁶ Αἰγυπτίους ἐρχομαι λόγους ἐρέων. What follows until § 147, must be regarded as pure Egyptian legends, in the shape retailed by the ἐξήγηται (especially at Memphis) to those who visited the temples.

²⁶⁷ κατὰ τὰ ἔκουον. See note on iv. 76, κατὰ τὰ ὄρα.

²⁶⁸ τοῦτο μὲν. See note 276, below.

²⁶⁹ ἀπογεφυρῶσαι. This word properly means to "dyke off," i. e. by means of πάντα ῥέειν παρὰ τὸ ὄρος τὸ ψάμμινον πρὸς Διβύης²⁷⁰, τὸν δὲ Μῆνα ἀνωθεν, ὅσον τε ἑκατὸν σταδίους ἀπὸ Μέμφιος, τὸν πρὸς μεσαμβρίας ἀγκῶνα προσχῶσαντα, τὸ μὲν ἀρχαῖον ῥέεθρον ἀποξηράναι²⁷¹ τὸν δὲ ποταμὸν ὀχετεῦσαι²⁷², τὸ μέσον τῶν οὐρέων ῥέειν²⁷³. ἔτι δὲ καὶ νῦν ὑπὸ Περσέων ὁ ἀγκῶν οὗτος τοῦ Νείλου ὃς ἀπεργμένος ῥέει²⁷⁴ ἐν φυλακῇσι μεγάλῃσι ἔχεται, φρασσόμενος ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος· εἰ γὰρ ἐθελήσει ῥήξας ὑπερβῆναι ὁ ποταμὸς ταύτην, κίνδυνος πάσῃ Μέμφι κατακλυσθῆναι ἐστὶ—ὥς δὲ τῷ Μῆνι τούτῳ τῷ πρώτῳ γενομένῳ βασιλεῖ χέρσον γεινομένην τὸ ἀπεργμένον²⁷⁵, τοῦτο μὲν²⁷⁶ ἐν αὐτῷ πόλιν κτίσαι ταύτην, ἥτις νῦν a dam to recover land which would be otherwise overflowed, like the polders of Holland. But, as the phrase ἀπογεφυρώσαι τὴν Μέμφιν is rather vague, the writer interposes a description of the operation which was effected.

²⁷⁰ πρὸς Διβύης, "on the Libyan side [of its present course]." τὸν πρὸς μεσαμβρίας ἀγκῶνα is "the reach southward [of Memphis]".

²⁷¹ τὸ μὲν ἀρχαῖον ῥέεθρον ἀποξηράναι. RENNELL (Geography of Herodotus, p. 501) considers that the operation here described consisted in assisting the natural tendency of the river to change its bed by filling up the existing one. He supposes that this process had gone on so long while the stream ran under the ridge which extends on the western bank of the river in a parallel direction to it, that a considerable portion of the water must have deviated into another channel, and that by the dam Herodotus mentions this secondary channel was made the primary one. If the operation really was such as this, the old bed of the river might be converted into a canal for the purpose of receiving the overflow of the Nile at the time of inundation, and husbanding it for use in the dry season; and it is not improbable that this was a use it was put to by the aid of sluices, and that it formed a portion of a canal-system communicating with the lake Moeris. See note on § 149.

²⁷² τὸν ποταμὸν ὀχετεῦσαι, "conveyed the river through a made channel."

²⁷³ τὸ μέσον τῶν οὐρέων ῥέειν, "so as to flow midway between the mountains," i. e. the Libyan and the Arabian. See above, § 8.

²⁷⁴ ὁ ἀγκῶν οὗτος τοῦ Νείλου ὃς ἀπεργμένος ῥέει. This phrase is a very remarkable one. If the words ὃς ἀπεργμένος ῥέει be applied to the single substantive Νείλου, they are a mere platitude, "a river which flows in a made channel." If they be applied to the composite substantive ἀγκῶν τοῦ Νείλου, it seems unusual that the word ἀγκῶν, which is appropriate to the windings of a land-valley, should have the term ῥέει coupled with it. Nevertheless I believe this to be the true way of pointing and constructing the passage. The rivers of European Hellas, with very few exceptions, were mere brooks, no where presenting that appearance of one long "reach" after another which is so striking in a large navigable river. When, therefore, this phenomenon first came under notice in the Nile, a new term had to be invented; and analogy could certainly suggest nothing more appropriate than ἀγκῶν. I would therefore translate this passage: "This reach of the Nile which runs in a made channel." Memphis being situated in the narrow part of the Nile valley, a spectator from thence would see two distinct lines of river, according as he looked upwards or downwards, their continuity being broken to the eye by the city and its traffic, even if there was no obvious change of direction. Nothing would under such circumstances be more natural than to call the one "the southern reach" (ὁ πρὸς μεσαμβρίας ἀγκῶν) and the other "the northern one."

²⁷⁸ μία δὲ γυνὴ ἐπιχωρή. That the patriotism of the Egyptians should not allow them to consider Nitocris a foreigner is not to be wondered at. They laid claim to Cambyzes in the face (according to Herodotus) of facts of which they could not possibly be ignorant. See iii. 2. The name Nitocris is only the hellenized form of Neit-okr, a name which, according to Champollion and others, appears on the monuments, and is equivalent to Ἀθήνη Νίκη, an interpretation which was actually given to the word by Kratosthenes. The identity of the Egyptian Νηθ with the Hellenic Ἀθήνη had been remarked by ΠΛΑΤΟ (Timæus, p. 21). And the etymological connexion of Neith with Anaitis is the same as that of Derceto with Atergatis, Cyphas with Acyphas, στόχους with ἄσταχους, λατίζω with ἀλατίζω, τέλω with ἀτέλεις; or of νῆσσα with the Latin anas, ποτὶ with apui, τραχὺς and trus with atras, ῥάχος with ἀράχη and aranea, λάχη and laxanon with alga, and probably κελαινός with aquila and aquilo. The interchange of the elementary structure an-th with aith-a may be illustrated by the pairs ἀκίδνός and κίναδος, ὀθνείος and νοθείος, ζηρός and σκυρός, and the English ask and its archaic but now vulgar form axe. It may be observed that the Egyptian name remained at Thebes of Boeotia in the Νητὰι πόλιν (ÆSCHYLUS, Theb. 460).

²⁷⁹ καινοῦν τῷ λόγῳ, “pretended to hansom it.” The more usual term would be καυλίζω or ἐγκαυλίζω. CALLIMACHUS says of Perillus, the inventor of Phalaris’s brazen bull, whom the tyrant shut up in it as the first victim, πρῶτος ἐπεὶ τὸν ταῦρον ἐκαίνισε (fr. 119).

²²⁵ πλοίοισι μακροῖσι ὁρμηθέντα ἐκ τοῦ Ἀραβίου κόλπου. Perhaps it was this circumstance, combined with the belief of it having been Sesostis to whom the internal water communication of Egypt was due (see § 108), that gave birth to the tradition (which STRABO mentions as if resting on as high authority as any other), that he was the commender of the canal which was intended to connect the Nile with the Red Sea (xvii. c. i. p. 443). It is the assertion of the author of the Aristotelian Meteorologica (i. p. 352) who does not mention any one repeating the attempt between him and Darius. It seems probable also that the ὄλκοι ἐπί-θλοιοι, of which Herodotus speaks below (§ 159) were the nucleus of traditions orally transmitted, and varying in the names of the personages to whom they were attributed. See notes on §§ 158 and 159.

²²⁶ τοὺς παρὰ τὴν Ἐρυθρὴν θάλασσαν κατοικημένους. STRABO (in a passage where he professes to be following Eratosthenes) gives an account of the traditions relative to Sesostis's wide conquests, which plainly shows the origin of them. Just on the Asiatic side of the strait which forms the mouth of the Arabian gulf, there was said to be a stèle of Sesostis recording in hieroglyphics the fact of his passage over: φαίνεται γὰρ τὴν Αἰθιοπία καὶ τὴν Τρωαδοτυκὴν πρῶτος καταστρεψάμενος οὗτος, εἴτα διαβάς εἰς τὴν Ἀραβίαν, κἀν-τεῦθεν τὴν Ἀσίαν ἐπελθὼν τὴν σύμψασαν διδὼ καὶ πολλὰ τοῦ Σέσοςτριος χάρακες προσσγορεύοντα, καὶ ἀφιδρόματά ἐστιν Αἰγυπτίων θεῶν ἱερῶν (xvi. p. 386). In the same way, the expedition of Jason to Colchis was said to have been extended through Albania and Iberia (i. e. the modern Georgia), and even as far as Ar-out of the Arabian gulf, and afterwards overran the continent of Asia with an army.

Passing over into Europe he subdued the Scythians and Thracians, which constitute the limit of his expedition.

menia and Media, from the circumstance of a number of temples existing in which a cognate ritual prevailed: ὡς μαρτυρεῖ τὰ τε ἱερῶν καὶ ἄλλα ὁμομήματα πλείω (xi. p. 417; compare p. 463). In the time of Alexander this hypothesis became converted into history by the fiction of one Armenus from Armenium, a Thessalian town situated between Pheræ and Larissa, who was said to have accompanied Jason as an ally in his expedition. See notes 621 and 628 on Book I.

²⁹⁷ ἐνίστη. The MSS vary between this and ἀνίστη, but in vi. 43 they are as unanimous for κατίστα. In § 106, below, they vary between ἴστα and ἴστη, with a preponderance for the former.

²⁹⁸ δυνάμει. See note 132 on i. 41.

²⁹⁹ δῆλα βουλόμενος ποιέειν ὡς εἶησαν ἀνάλκιδες. In the time of Diodorus a feature was supplied to the story of Sesostris, which, as Herodotus does not mention it, we may suppose did not exist in his days, viz. that the monuments on which the conquest of brave nations was recorded were distinguished by the analogous symbol of virility. His conquests, too, were extended beyond the main, even to the including some of the Cyclades (i. 65), doubtless from the symbolism appropriate to the orgiastic worship of Dionysus which would be found at Naxos and elsewhere. Subsequently to the rise of the Greek dynasty at Alexandria, the habit of considering the mythical narratives of the early times as a merely poetical garb thrown around historical facts grew rapidly, and the identification of Dionysus and Sesostris as great conquerors would be a generally received explanation of their several stories. There can be no question that the figure spoken of in the text had nothing to do either with Sesostris the Egyptian historical king, or with the idea of effeminacy. It was a symbol belonging to the system of religion of which the Theismophoria was a festival. See HERACLIDES the Syracusan, ap. Athenæum, xiv. p. 647, and AUGUSTINE, De Civ. D. vi. 9.

³⁰⁰ οὐ προσώτατα. This is the reading of the majority of MSS. Gaisford, on the authority of P and F, omits οὐ. But a very good sense may be given if that particle be retained. Translate, "But I conceive the Egyptian army to have reached [only] these, and not the extreme parts of the earth."

Evidence that these Colchians are Egyptian. Circumcision is a native custom with both, but not with the Phœnician and Syrians either of Palestine or Pontus.

²⁹² εἰρόμην ἀμφοτέρους. This expression goes to prove the fact of the author, or the individual whom he impersonates, having been on the Phasis; and indeed it seems certain that some of his statements must be derived from Phasian merchants. Yet it is very strange that in this case he should not ever mention the name of the town (which was the same as that of the river), nor give any of the curious particulars relating to the trade there (see note 363 on i. 104). It is even stranger that he should say nothing of Dioscurias, which was in the actual μυχὸς of the Euxine. (See note on vi. 9.)

²⁹³ μελάνγχροες καὶ οὐλότριχες. The mummies have always been found to possess straight hair, and an European, not African, configuration of skull. And in the paintings the Egyptians are represented as red, not black. Is it possible that the Egyptians here alluded to are the same race as those pirates (apparently the relic of an African tribe) which haunted the marshes of the Bucolic branch of the Nile? See above, note 61 on § 17. They are described as φοβεροὶ καὶ ἄγριοι ἄνθρωποι, μεγάλοι μὲν πόδες, μέλανες δὲ τὴν χροίαν οὐ κατὰ τὴν Ἰνδῶν τὴν ἄκρατον, ἀλλ' ὅσος ἂν γένοιτο νόθος Αἰθίοψ. (ACHILLES TATIUS, iii. 9.) The novelist, however, goes on to say that they are ψιλοὶ τὰς κεφαλὰς and λεπτοὶ τοὺς πόδας, which are not negro characteristics.

²⁹⁴ Σύριοι οἱ ἐν τῇ Παλαιστίνῃ. This phrase has occasioned some difficulty from Herodotus's notice being supposed to militate against the passages of the Old Testament (1 Sam. xviii. 25; 2 Sam. i. 20, &c.) in which the Philistines are distinguished as "the uncircumcised;" and occasion has been taken to argue that the interior of the country (the Holy Land) was regarded by him as part of Palestine. But it has been overlooked that subsequently to the time of Saul a great change took place in the population of the Philistine cities (see note on § 157, below), and that a considerable Egyptian element had probably been introduced. I do not believe that Herodotus has here any thing but the coast in his mind.

²⁹⁵ οἱ περιταμνόμενοι ἀνθρώπων μῦνοι. It is remarkable that here no mention should be made of the Jews or the Arabians, as practising this same rite, and that the narrator should pass at once from the seaboard of Palestine to that of Pontus. The Syrians of Pontus are the Cappadocians, i. e. the inhabitants of that large portion of Asia Minor which lies east of the Halys (see note 27 on i. 6). Is it to be supposed that only those who dwelt immediately in the neighbourhood of the Thermodon had the custom he speaks of, or was he unacquainted with any others than these? If the latter be the true solution, it becomes easy to understand that his knowledge must have gained as a trader in the maritime ports, and that the information obtained was limited by this condition. See note 363 on i. 104, and note 26 on ii. 7.

The mode of manufacturing linen is similar, and so is the language, and the whole mode of life.

²⁹⁶ κατὰ τὰ αὐτά. See above, § 35. STRABO (xi. 2) mentions this circumstance of the similar manufacture as being the principal ground of the opinion held by some that the Colchians were of Egyptian origin, but he does not make any special reference to Herodotus.

²⁹⁷ ἡ γλῶσσα ἐμφερὴς ἐστὶ ἀλλήλοισι. This expression probably refers to the effect produced on the ear of a traveller who understood neither language, and must not be regarded as in itself a proof of any near etymological affinity. Such a similarity may be remarked between Italian and Bohemian, especially by a person who has been for a considerable time accustomed to the sounds of any dialect of the German just before visiting Bohemia. There can be no doubt that Herodotus employed a Greek interpreter in Egypt, and probably also at Phasis. See note 338 on i. 95, and note 128, above.

²⁹⁷ Σαρδονικόν. The manuscripts S, F, a have the variation Σαρδονικόν.

Whichever reading be adopted, the reference appears to be to the island Sardinia (Σαρδία); and it is not easy to say how a Colchian product should have acquired such a name. The island Sardinia itself was very little known to the Greeks (see note on v. 106), although its repute for abundant resources was very great. But its produce appears to have been simply agricultural. RITTER (Vorhalle Europäischer Völkergeschichten, p. 48) supposes the word to have no connexion with Sardinia at all, but to be synonymous with Σαρδονικόν, and denote the muslins brought from the Σινδός. But unless the text be altered very violently, and without any external ground, this view seems utterly untenable. As a mere stop-gap, I am disposed to propose the following explanation. It is well known that the Carthaginians had manufactures of linen in the island of Malta, the produce of which was remarkable for its extreme fineness and softness (λεπτότητι καὶ μαλακότητι. DIODORUS, v. 12). The effeminate Verres kept the whole population of the town (Melita) employed for three years in supplying him with the article (CICERO in Verr. ii. 4. 46). From the deficient knowledge which the Greeks had of the places to which the Phoenicians and their colonies traded, it seems very possible that they should believe these manufactured articles to have come from Sardinia itself, just as the spices produced in the islands under the line may now be called Indian. If now the articles which came from India by way of the Colchians were similarly distinguished by their texture from the Egyptian linen (which was undoubtedly, for the most part, coarse in comparison: Εἰπτα, l. c. p. 45), possibly the term Σαρδονικόν came to be applied to them, with a reference not to any locality, but only to the quality of the manufacture. This secondary usage of a term originally denoting locality, may be illustrated by the use in our own time of the words muslins, calicoes, and cashmeres, to denote European fabrics of an analogous kind to those originally brought from the East.

²⁹⁸ τὰς δὲ στήλας. Some MSS have αἱ δὲ στήλαι.

^a ἐν δὲ τῇ Παλαιστίνῃ Συρίῃ. The worship of Derceto or Atargatis prevailed in the Philistine towns. See the note 366 on i. 105.

²⁹⁹ δύο τύποι. The latter of these two reliefs was discovered in the year 1817 by the Rev. G. C. Renouard, chaplain at Smyrna, and has since been the subject of much discussion among the learned. A figure of it is given in the Classical Museum, vol. i. p. 232. It is on a rock called Karabel (the black hip), which has been cut almost perpendicular, and forms a smooth, almost square, wall somewhat broader than high. The rock is seen at a considerable distance, and on approaching it closer one perceives, if not the figure itself, at least the square cavity on the ground of which the figure is cut, in the same manner in which the reliefs are wrought on the monuments of Egypt. The inscription on the breast, if any ever existed, has been effaced by the effect of time, which has left very little more than the mere outline of the figure remaining. The dimensions of this agree pretty well with the account of Herodotus, but there is considerable variation in the details. The head-dress is a high tiara (such as that which Herodotus mentions as having been worn by the Sacæ: κυρβάσις ἐς ἄθροισμα ὁρθή, vii. 64), very different from the Egyptian pshent or the Phrygian bonnet. The shoes are turned up at the toes, and the clumsiness and rudeness in the proportions of the body and the whole execution do not agree with other well-known Egyptian monuments of the time of Sesostris, or with Egyptian art in general. The only circumstance favourable to the hypothesis of an Egyptian origin is a bird in a kind of ornamented frame before the face of the warrior,—a feature which has hitherto not been seen on any other than Egyptian monuments. On the other hand, the omission of the name of Sesostris is remarked by Lepsius himself (who is otherwise favourable to Herodotus's view) as being contrary to the Egyptian custom.

The rock on which the figure is cut is represented as being near Nymphis (the ancient Nymphæum), close to which one of the great roads from Mysia to Lydia ran. Professor Welcker says that an attentive traveller cannot fail to perceive the monument. But its distance from the road is such that no details can have been discernible; and these it seems likely that Herodotus obtained at second-hand. (See notes 329 and 331 on i. 93.) The figure really has a lance in its left hand, and in its right the string of a bow which hangs over its back. The bird in the frame is far too important an object to have been overlooked by an eyewitness. It is remarkable too, that although the writer speaks of having himself seen the Sesostris monuments in Palestine, he alters the form of his expression in describing these Ionian reliefs. If we suppose that in passing along the road his attention was caught by the remarkable appearance of the rock, and that his informant as to the details was a fellow-traveller, or one of the country-people at the next halting-place, we shall have no occasion either to question his accuracy or to fetter our judgment as to the origin of the existing monument by what he says respecting it. Taking into account all circumstances connected with it, the costume, the rudeness of workmanship, and the similarity to some rock reliefs found near the ruins of an ancient town east of the Halys, which are undoubtedly neither Persian, Lydian, Phrygian, Egyptian, nor Hellenic, the most plausible hypothesis seems to be that the monument described in the text comes down from the time of some Cimmerian or Scythian conquest, and was the work of a barbarous race.

³⁰⁰ μέγας πέμπτῃ σπιθαμῇ, "of the size of four cubits and a half," the σπιθαμή, or "span," being considered equal to half the cubit. The idiom therefore is in fact the same as ἐναυτον ἡμιτάλαντον (i. 51), a well-known form of expression.

³⁰¹ τοὺς δύο ἐπὶ τὴν πυρὴν ἐκτείναντα. Wesseling calls this narrative "an old wives' tale," and praises Diodorus, who tells the same story in a way which strips it of its marvellous features. According to him (i. 57) Sesostris, after offering up a prayer to Hephæstus, dashes through the fire and escapes. He also accounts for the fire not being extinguished by the king's retinue. They were unable to exert themselves effectually from the quantity of wine they had drunk at the banquet! But this toning down of the story to make it harmonize with ordinary history really destroys the historical value which it intrinsically possesses, viz. as an indication of the Moloch-worship (in which parents "made their children pass through the fire") having formerly existed at Daphnæ. See note on iii. 11, ἐς δὲ τὸν πατέρα.

He assigns the land of Egypt in square plots, for which a rent is paid, equitably assessed by commissioners.

³⁰³ πλατυτέροισι. HESYCHIUS explains the word πλατὺ by ἄλμυρον, and it is used in that sense by ARISTOTLE (Meteorologica, ii. p. 368, A, line 28). It is not, however, easy to trace any connexion between the meanings. That the water obtained by sinking wells in Egypt should be brackish is not unlikely. The rock of which the desert is composed and on which the alluvium from the river rests is considerably impregnated with salt, and the water in the wells would really be the Nile water filtered through this stratum. THEOPHRASTUS, in his treatise περὶ ὑδάτων, spoke of the Nile water itself as being a gentle laxative from holding salts in solution (op. Athen. ii. p. 42).

³⁰⁴ κατανεῖμαι τὴν χώραν. This appears to be a description of the settlement of the land on a principle which commonly prevails in the East. The theory of the system is that the sovereign is regarded as the actual owner of the soil, and only the usufruct is granted by him to the occupier, he himself retaining the power of resuming this grant at pleasure. The land-tax, which usually consists of a certain proportion of the produce, is considered to be the acknowledgment of this right. The narrative in Genesis (c. xlvii.) gives the circumstances under which it was acquired in Egypt. According to the account followed by Herodotus, Sesostris is represented as parcelling out the land, and as exercising a discretionary power in exacting the tax under peculiar circumstances. But there is nothing to indicate an actual census of the available property, to serve as a basis for the commutation of the produce-rents; something like which seems afterwards to have been effected by Amasis. See note on § 177, below.

³⁰⁵ ἀποφορὴν. This is explained by the Herodotean glossographer as τὸ ὑπὸ τῶν ὀνηκῶν τοῖς ἀρχουσιν ὑποτελούμενον. This is true if by the ὀνηκοὶ are meant the subjects of an absolute prince; but it would be inapplicable to the tribute rendered by foreign states, for which the term φόρος is the appropriate one. The ἀποφορὰ is a rent paid out of the fruits of the holding.

Ethiopia was under his dominion. He erected six colossal figures in front of the Hephaestaeum, which occasion a rebuke of Darius by the priest of the deity.

δοκέει δέ μοι ἐνθεῦτεν γεωμετρὴν εὐρεθεῖσα, ἐς τὴν Ἑλλάδα ἐπανελθεῖν. πόλον μὲν γὰρ καὶ γνώμονα, καὶ τὰ δυνάδεκα μέρη τῆς ἡμέρης, παρὰ Βαβυλωνίων ἔμαθον³⁰⁶ οἱ Ἕλληνες. ³⁰⁶ παρὰ Βαβυλωνίων ἔμαθον. It does not seem necessary so to press these words as to make them mean that the Hellenic race got this knowledge direct from Babylon, but only that it was from that quarter, and not from Egypt, that it was originally derived. Still it is far from impossible that it came with the worship of the Sun-god from Babylon to Patara in Lycia, and from thence to the coast of Asia Minor and Delos. See i. 182.

As for the instrument which is here described, it is an error to suppose that Herodotus meant the τόλος and the γνώμων to be regarded as different instruments. They were originally parts of the same instrument, which was, in fact, a kind of model of the path of the sun in the heavens, by which not only his daily, but his annual motions might be explained. The τόλος was a hemispherical basin of any material (but most naturally of brass), from the centre of which a vertical pin (the γνώμων) was carried up to a level with the rim of the basin. It is obvious that the extremity of the gnomon would trace, by the shadow falling upon the side of the basin, the variation of the sun's position in the heavens, and thus serve as a dial. Then if the locus of the extremity of the shadow were marked (by a piece of chalk for instance) upon the τόλος, and the instrument reversed, the mark remaining would show the actual path of the sun in the heavens (on the hypothesis of the declination being constant through the day), and the basin in fact become a representative of the hemisphere. This was the cause of both being called by the same name. Both the term and the instrument were probably introduced at Athens in the time of Pericles's administration, when every branch of art and science received so strong an impulse. At the time the Birds of ΑΙΣΧΥΛΟΥΣ was acted, the nomenclature had become sufficiently familiar to the public to furnish material for comedy. Peisthetærus gives the Ἔρως a lesson on the use of the celestial sphere (175—183), as Meton in the sequel lectures him on civil engineering:—

³⁰⁷ καὶ δὴ καὶ Σκύθας. The manuscripts S and V add the word ἐλεῖν, leaving out the words Δαρεῖον δὲ οὐ δυνασθῆναι.

³⁰⁸ οὐ δυνασθῆναι Σκύθας ἐλεῖν. This feature in the anecdote occasions some difficulty, if the anecdote itself belongs to the same historical cycle which Herodotus follows in the continuous narrative τῶν ἐκείνου ἀναθημάτων, μὴ οὐκ ὑπερβαλλόμενον τοῖσι ἔργοισι."

He was succeeded by his son Pheros, who brought a judgment of blindness upon himself by an act of blasphemous arrogance. After ten years he recovered, by following the advice of the oracle at Buto; which leads to his making a holocaust of unfaithful wives.

After recovery, he set up, among other offerings, two monolith obelisks at of Darius; for there is no time subsequent to the return from Scythia in that narrative in which he can be supposed to have visited Egypt. He seems to have intended to go in person to quell the revolt which broke out there in the fourth year after the battle of Marathon, but his intentions were defeated by death (see vii. 1—3). ARISTOTLE, however, followed an account which made Darius conquer Egypt antecedently to the expedition being sent against Hellas (Rhet. ii. 20, p. 1363). This would not be the only instance of heterogeneous materials being made use of by Herodotus. See note 517 on i. 183.

³⁰⁰ συγγνώμην ποιήσασθαι. By the time of DIODORUS some additional features appeared in this narrative. The wish of Darius to set up his statue is discussed in a sanhedrin of the priests, and their decision is that "he has not yet equalled the feats of Sesostria." Darius replies, that by the time he has lived as long as Sesostria did he trusts he shall have done so, and he requests the priests to compare him with Sesostria at the same age (i. 58). This view of the proceeding seems to regard Darius as a young man.

³¹⁰ Φερῶν. It is scarcely possible to doubt that here Herodotus (or his authority) mistook an appellative for a proper name, the word Pharaoh denoting merely "king." See note 243 on i. 72.

He was succeeded by Proteus, a Memphite, who now possesses a sanctuary south of the Hephestæum, in which stands a temple of Aphrodite Xeine, a deity probably identical with Helen.

tical with Helen. Round about the sanctuary is the Tyrian quarter, and the whole district is called "the Tyrians' camp."

τὰ περὶ Ἑλένην, γενέσθαι ὧδε Ἀλέξανδρον ἀρπάσαντα Ἑλένην ἐκ Σπάρτης ἀποπλέειν ἐς τὴν ἐωυτοῦ καὶ μιν, ὡς ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ Αἰγαίῳ, ἐξῶσται ἄνεμοι¹¹⁴ ἐκβάλλουσι ἐς τὸ Αἰγύπτιον πέλαγος· ἐνθεύτην δὲ (οὐ γὰρ ἀνίει¹¹⁵ τὰ πνεύματα) ἀπικνέεται ἐς Αἴγυπτον, καὶ Αἰγύπτου ἐς τὸ νῦν Κανωβικὸν καλούμενον στόμα τοῦ Νείλου, καὶ ἐς Ταριχεῖας¹¹⁶. ἦν δὲ ἐπὶ τῆς ἡϊόνος (δὲ καὶ νῦν ἐστὶ) Ἑρακλέος ἱρὸν¹¹⁷, ἐς τὸ ἦν καταφυγὼν οἰκίτης ὅτεφ ἀνθρώπων¹¹⁸ ἐπι-

¹¹⁴ ἐξῶσται ἄνεμοι. An apparently technical phrase for gales which force a vessel out of the course on which she has been laid. Compare EUCIPIDES, Cyclop. 278:

πνεύμασιν θαλασσίοις
σὴν γαῖαν ἐξώσθ' ἐντες ἤκομεν, Κόκλωφ.

¹¹⁵ ἀνίει. See note on iv. 125.

¹¹⁷ Ἑρακλέος ἱρὸν. In the time of TACITUS, the city Canobus was said to have been founded by the Spartans returning from Troy with Menelaus, and so called after his pilot, who was there buried (Annal. ii. 60). This is a precise parallel to Virgil's story of Palinurus.

¹¹⁸ οἰκίτης ὅτεφ ἀνθρώπων, "a slave belonging to any man whatever." The preference of the dative to the more common genitive does not, in my opinion, arise from any connexion of ἐπιβάλλεται with ὅτεφ ἀνθρώπων, but rather from the fact that the master's interests are affected by the loss of the slave. Thus, if the form of the sentence be changed, the sense would be adequately given by the English, "If any man whatever should have a slave take sanctuary," &c. The genitive ὅτεφ ἀνθρώπων would merely express that the rank of the slave's master did not affect the question, but would not imply (as the dative does) that the rights of property were affected. The so-called pleonastic use of the dative case of the personal pronouns is derived from a similar usage. See note 120 on i. 34, and that on iv. 162, ἡ δὲ μήτηρ οἱ ἐς Σαλαμίνα ἔφυγε. No doubt this delicate shade of meaning continually disappeared, and the pronouns became strictly pleonastic. Where Petruchio says, “Knock me at this gate,

 And rap me well, or I’ll knock your knave’s pate,”

the original use of the pronoun is plain. It is less so, when he bids the tailor, “Go hop me over every kennel home:

 For you shall hop without my custom, Sir;”

and the merely pleonastic usage appears in Shylock’s account of Jacob’s artifice:

“The skilful shepherd peeled me certain

³¹⁰ στίγματα ἱρά, “sacred tattoo-marks.” See below, vii. 233, τοὺς πλεῖνας αὐτῶν ἔστιζον στίγματα βασιλῆα.

This practice of escaping from the oppression of a master by means of a religious dedication, is beautifully applied by St. PAUL to his own escape from the bondage of the law to that service which was perfect freedom: τοῦ λοιποῦ κόπους μοι μηδεὶς παρεχέτω· ἐγὼ γὰρ τὰ στίγματα τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματί μου βαστάζω (Gal. vi. 17).

³²⁰ τῷ οὐνομα ἦν Θῶνις. In the Odyssey (iv. 238) Thon is the husband of Polydamna, from whom Helen is represented as receiving a present of drugs. Herodotus does not, any more than Homer, mention the city Thonis on the Canobic branch of the Nile, or the place called Heleneus, then existing in the same region. (Hecatæus, ap. Steph. Byzant. sub v.)

³²¹ κότερα . . . ἐῷμεν, ἢ ἀφελώμεθα; “Which must we do, let him sail away unharmed, or strip him of the wealth he brought with him?” This is the direct form, corresponding to the oblique ei with the subjunctive. See note 170 on i. 53.

³²⁴ ἀναπτερώσας αὐτήν. The use of the word in this passage where the seducer is represented as turning the head of his victim so as to make her forgetful of all the bonds which held her, is excellently illustrated by ARISTOPHANES in the dialogue between Peistheterus and the Informer, who had wanted a pair of actual wings for his own purposes (An. 1436):

²²⁶ κατὰ γὰρ ἐποίησε . . . πλάνην τὴν Ἀλεξάνδρου. The word κατὰ is not the Ionic form of καθά, as has been supposed, but is the preposition separated from the last part of the compound verb καταποιεῖν. It is very true that this compound is never found; but it is regularly formed, and the reason of its not elsewhere appearing is that the simple verb very rarely has a sense admitting of that modification which results from the prefixing the preposition κατὰ. But in this passage the original meaning of "create" (from which the word ποιητής is derived) is entirely lost sight of in the secondary sense "to embody in language;" and the preposition κατὰ admits of composition with a word denoting this, just as appropriately as one signifying "to speak" or "to write." καταποιεῖν therefore would mean "to notice in the course of making a poem," as καταλέγειν is "to notice in an oral narrative," καταγράφειν "to set down in a draught." Hence the expression κατὰ γὰρ ἐποίησε ἐν Ἰλιάδι is to be rendered "for he notices in his poem, the Iliad." But, as the passage alluded to is somewhat vague, it was natural that a reader should look for some other in which the poet might return to the subject,—in which case something might be said to modify the inference that otherwise would be drawn from the mention made of Alexandrus, viz. that the poet recognized the account which took him to Egypt. But this, Herodotus observes, is not the case; in no other passage does Homer return to the subject (ἀνερόδισε ἑωυτὸν, "bring himself back on his own track:" see note on v. 92). Hence, Herodotus argues, as Homer alludes to Alexandrus in a way which seems to point to the Egyptian legend, and, as he nowhere else qualifies this allusion, we may presume that the Egyptian legend was known to him, and that he only rejected it because it was less manageable for his purpose.

²²⁷ καὶ ἐς Σιδῶνα τῆς Φοινίκης ἀπικέτο. The normal structure of the sentence would require καὶ ἐς Σιδῶνα ἀπικόμενος. But if Herodotus had terminated it in this manner he would have connected the clause with ἀπηνείχθη, and thus have implied that the arrival of Alexandrus at Sidon was an involuntary act, he being carried thither, as Odysseus was to Phæacia, by the winds and waves. This, however, would be a glaring misrepresentation of the Homeric passage, and accordingly he modifies the form of his sentence as in the text.

²²⁸ ἐν Διομήδεος ἀριστείῃ. This name is given by the Alexandrine grammarians to the fifth book of the Iliad, whereas the passage quoted in the text is in vi. 289, seqq. In defence of the accuracy of the citation it has been rightly observed that there is no reason to suppose the present division into twenty-four books to be so ancient as the time of Herodotus; and it has been argued, that under these circumstances the Διομήδεος ἀριστείῃ may have included this passage. But it seems scarcely possible to believe that, if that subject extended into Book VI., which is far from improbable, it went beyond v. 236. After this the scene changes to the interior of Troy, and Diomedes is no more mentioned.

³²⁹ ἐπιμέμνηται. Schaefer includes the text from this word to the end of the second quotation from the Odyssey between brackets as a later addition. The quotations certainly do not bear on the question at issue, for they relate to Menelaus's return from Troy.

³³⁰ τόδε τὸ χωρίον. This expression for "a passage" in a writing is unparalleled, and has excited great suspicion of the whole section, which is, however, found in all the MSS.

³³¹ ἐν δὲ Ἰλιάδι λέγει ὡς ἐπλάζετο ἄγων αὐτὴν. The present text has not this phrase. Perhaps all that the writer means is that such a description of the transit of Alexander may be inferred from what is said in the Iliad: ἐπιπλᾶς εὐρέα πόντον. But such a deduction is scarcely warranted. In the description of the passage from the Κύπρια the poetical phraseology of the original can hardly be missed, and an attempt has been made to restore the actual lines:

Σπάρτηθεν δὲ τριταῖος Ἀλέξανδρος [θεοειδής]

Ἴλιον εἰσαφίκανεν ἄγων Ἑλένην [Ἀργείην]

Εὐαεῖ τ' ἀνέμων πνοῇ λείῃ τε θαλάσῃ.

But it may be remarked that, if Paoctus (quoted by Clinton, Fasti Hellenici, i. p. 353, note 2) is to be depended upon, this passage does not give a true account of the way in which Alexander was, in the Cypria, made to come from Sparta to Ilium; for he is said to have captured Tyre on his voyage thither.

³³² ἐς τὴν Τευκρίδα γῆν. This is obviously, in the view of the writer, the same as the Troad of the Homeric poems. But the first poet who brought the Teucri to Asia was CALLINUS (ap. Strabon. xiii. p. 117). He made them come from Crete, στρατιὴν πολλήν, βοηθεύσαν Μενέλεω· ἐκβάσαν δὲ ἐς γῆν καὶ ἰδρυθεύσαν τὴν στρατιὴν πέμπειν ἐς τὸ Ἴλιον ἀγγέλους· σὺν δὲ σφι ἵεναι καὶ αὐτὸν Μενέλεω· τοὺς δ' ἐπεὶ τε ἐσελθεῖν ἐς τὸ τεῖχος, ἀπαιτέειν Ἑλένην τε καὶ τὰ χρήματα τὰ οἱ οἴχετο κλέψας Ἀλέξανδρος, τῶν τε ἀδικημάτων δίκας αἰτέειν τοὺς δὲ Τευκροὺς τὸν αὐτὸν λόγον λέγειν τότε καὶ μετέπειτα, καὶ ὁμνύντας καὶ ἀνωμοτὶ, μὴ μὲν ἔχειν Ἑλένην³³³ μῆδὲ τὰ ἐπικαλούμενα χρήματα, ἀλλ' εἶναι αὐτὰ πάντα ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ καὶ οὐκ ἂν δικαίως αὐτοὶ δίκας ὑπέχειν³³⁴ ἃ Πρωτεύς ὁ Αἰγύπτιος βασιλεὺς ἔχει· οἱ δὲ Ἕλληνες καταγελασθαι δοκούντες ὑπ' αὐτῶν, οὕτω δὴ³³⁵ ἐπολιόρκεον ἐς δ' ἐξεῖλαν· ἐλοῦσι δὲ τὸ τεῖχος ὥς οὐκ ἐφαίνετο ἡ Ἑλένη, ἀλλὰ τὸν αὐτὸν λόγον τῷ προτέρῳ ἐπυνθάνοντο, οὕτω δὴ πιστεύσαντες τῷ λόγῳ τῷ πρώτῳ οἱ Ἕλληνες αὐτὸν Μενέλεω ἀποστέλλουσι παρὰ Πρωτέα. Ἀπικόμενος δὲ ὁ Μενέλεως ἐς τὴν Αἰγύπτου καὶ ἀνα- 119 πλώσας ἐς τὴν Μέμφιν, εἵπας τὴν ἀληθινήν τῶν πρηγμάτων, καὶ ξεινίων ἤντησε μεγάλων καὶ Ἑλένην ἀπαθέα κακῶν ἀπέλαβε, πρὸς δὲ, καὶ τὰ ἐαυτοῦ χρήματα πάντα. τυχὼν μέντοι τούτων, ἐγένετο Μενέλεως ἀνὴρ ἄδικος ἐς Αἰγυπτίους· ἀποπλέειν γὰρ ὠρμημένον αὐτὸν ἴσχον ἄπλοιοι· ἐπειδὴ δὲ τοῦτο ἐπὶ πολλὸν τοιοῦτο ἦν, ἐπιτεχνᾶται πρήγμα οὐκ ὅσιον λαβὼν γὰρ δύο παιδία ἀνδρῶν ἐπιχωρίων, ἔντομά σφρα ἐποίησε· μετὰ δὲ, ὥς ἐπάϊστος ἐγένετο τοῦτο ἐργασμένος, μισηθεὶς τε καὶ διωκόμενος, οἴχετο φεύγων τῆσι νηυσὶ ἐπὶ Λιβύης³³⁶. τὸ ἐνθεῦτεν δὲ ὅκου ἐτράπετο, καὶ

Menelaus was hospitably received in Egypt, and recovered his wife and property, but afterwards incurred hatred by sacrificing two children of the country, and was forced to and made them call Ida by that name after the Cretan mountain. Strabo says that, though the first who adopted this tradition, he was followed by many. If Callinus really did originate the legend, it follows that his time furnishes the superior limit (chronologically) to all stories in which the Teucri appear as located in Mysia; for instance to that in the text, and to the expedition into Europe spoken of in vii. 20, notwithstanding that is assigned to a time before the Trojan war.

³³³ μὴ μὲν ἔχειν Ἑλένην. This passage is quoted by GREGORIUS, De dialectis, as an example of the rule he lays down, that where the common dialect employs μὴν the Ionic has μὲν. But in the case of Herodotus the MSS vary so arbitrarily between ἢ μὴν and ἢ μὲν, οὐ μὴν and οὐ μὲν, that it is impossible to lay down any such definite rule for his usage from existing data.

³³⁴ δίκας ὑπέχειν, "to be sued." The accusative ἃ which follows is governed by these words, which are nearly equivalent to ἀπαιτεῖσθαι, and therefore used in the same regimen.

³³⁵ οὕτω δὴ. See note 22 on i. 5.

³³⁶ ἐπὶ Λιβύης. This is the reading of all the MSS. PLUTARCH, who quotes the passage (De Malign. Herod. p. 857), seems to have found ἐπὶ ἐπὶ Λιβύης. This would probably be a combination of two readings, ἐπὶ Λιβύης and ἐπὶ Λιβύης, and some of the editors have wished to substitute the former of these in the text here. But there seems no reason for setting aside the testimony of the MSS. As for the particular direction of the course which Menelaus was stated to fly towards

his reasons.

Ταῦτα μὲν Αἰγυπτίων οἱ ἱρέες ἔλεγον ἐγὼ δὲ τῷ λόγῳ τῷ περὶ 'Ελένης λεχθέντι καὶ αὐτὸς προστίθεμαι, τάδε ἐπιλεγόμενος· εἰ ἦν 'Ελένη ἐν 'Ιλίῳ, ἀποδοθῆναι ἂν αὐτὴν τοῖσι Ἑλλήσι, ἥτοι ἐκόντος γε ἢ ἄκοντος Ἀλεξάνδρου οὐ γὰρ δὴ οὕτω γε φρενοβλαβῆς ἦν ὁ Πρίαμος, οὐδὲ οἱ ἄλλοι προσήκοντες αὐτῷ, ὥστε τοῖσι σφετέροισι σώμασι καὶ τοῖσι τέκνοισι καὶ τῇ πόλει κινδυνεύειν ἐβούλοντο³³⁷, ὅκως Ἀλέξανδρος Ἑλένη συνοικέῃ· εἰ δέ τοι καὶ ἐν τοῖσι πρώτοισι χρόνοις ταῦτα ἐγίνωσκον, ἐπεὶ πολλοὶ μὲν τῶν ἄλλων Τρώων ὁκοτε συμμίσγοιεν τοῖσι Ἑλλήσι ἀπώλλυντο, αὐτοῦ δὲ Πριάμου οὐκ ἔστι ὅτε οὐ δύο ἢ τρεῖς ἢ καὶ ἔτι πλείους τῶν παίδων μάχης γινομένης ἀπέθνησκον, (εἰ χρή τι τοῖσι ἐσποιοῖσι χρωόμενον λέγειν,) τούτων δὲ τοιούτων συμβαινόντων, ἐγὼ μὲν ἔλπομαι, εἰ καὶ αὐτὸς Πρίαμος συνοικεεῖ Ἑλένη, ἀποδοῦναι ἂν have taken, it seems to have been determined by the existence of the Μενελάος λιμὴν very near the site of the first settlement of the colonists of Cyrene. See iv. 169.

³³⁷ ἐβούλοντο. This use of the word ἐβούλοντο after ὅτε is not a mere substitution of the indicative for the infinitive, which the normal form of construction would require. It implies more than would be meant by the infinitive, viz. that Priam and the rest of Alexander's relatives did choose to risk their lives. It is, in fact, a compression of two clauses (each involving a distinct proposition) into one. The sense is the same as if Herodotus, instead of ἐβούλοντο, had written βούλεσθαι (ὃ καὶ ἐποίησαν). Very analogous to it is an expression in Iliad x. 244 :

ὣα εἶδομεν εἰ κεν Ἀχιλλεύς
νῶϊ κατακτείνῃας, ἔναρα βορρὸν ἔντα φέρηται νῆας ἐπὶ γλαφυρὰς, ἥ κεν σφ' οὐρὶ δα-μείη,

where the optative δαμείη is not an arbitrary substitution for the normal subjunctive, but contains the wish of the speaker for the contemplated result, over and above the sense which would follow from the subjunctive; "or fall (as the gods grant he may!) under thy spear." This peculiar idiom is one remarkably common in THEOCRITUS. Thus :

"Ἄδιον, ὃ ποιμᾶν, τὸ τέον μέλος ἢ τὸ καταχῆς τῆν' ἀπὸ τῶν πετρῶν καταλείβεται ὕψθεν ὄδωρ.

(Idyll. i. 8.)

See also Idyll. ii. 45; iii. 54; vii. 154. In the same way ÆSCHYLUS makes Clytemnestra say of her husband on his return :

καὶ τραυμάτων μὲν εἰ τόσων ἐτήγχανεν ἄνθρωπος, ὥς πρὸς οἶκον ὥχετε ἔνετο φάτις, τέτρωται δυκτὸν πλέω λέγειν (Agam. 866),

where the sense is ὥς ἔφερε φάτις πρὸς οἶκον ὀχετευομένη. And on the same principle may be explained a passage in SOPHOCLES which has given a great deal of trouble to commentators :

τί δ' ἐτήλλακται τῆς ἀμερίας [scil. ὄρας] νῦξ ἥδε βάρος;

(Aj. 207.)

This expression is, in fact, equivalent to τί δὲ βάρος ἤνεγκε νῦξ ἢ ἐτήλλακται τῆς ἀμερίας ὄρας, the two ideas being implied in the compressed proposition.

³³⁸ περιήιε. This expression is equivalent to ἔμελλε περιελθεῖσθαι, which shows that it must be considered as having the force of an imperfect. It is conjoined with the imperfect ἀπελάβετο in iii. 51.

³³⁹ τοῦ δαιμονίου παρασκευάζοντος. By the way in which Herodotus argues in this section, it would appear that he was not disposed to recognize the legend (Strabo, op. cit. Plat. Repub. ix.
 p. 586) in which Paris was made to carry off a phantom of Helen and take her to Troy with him in mistake for the real queen of Lacedæmon, who in the meantime was detained in Egypt. This legend is the foundation of the play of EURI-PIDES. It is itself a poetic fiction to reconcile two independent accounts (that of the Homeric poems and that of the Egyptian traditions) with one another.

 Herodotus connects them in a more matter-of-fact manner, by the scepticism of the Hellenic army as to the protestations of the Trojans.

³⁴⁰ τὸν δὲ . . . θέρος. These words are omitted in the manuscripts a and c.
 Also S and V, which contain them, continue the text τὸν δὲ πρὸς νότον χειμῶνα obviously from an error of the eye.

³⁴¹ τὸν δὲ χειμῶνα. The manuscripts which omit τὸν δὲ . . . θέρος, just above, here have τὸν δὲ πρὸς νότον χειμῶνα, which shows that the omission did not arise from an error of the eye, like the variation of S and V, mentioned in the last note.

³⁴⁴ τεχνάσασθαι οἰκοδομέων τὸν θησαυρὸν τοῦ βασιλέως. MÜLLER (Orchomenus, pp. 98, seqq.) endeavours to show that the story of the two brothers robbing the treasury of the king, and the escape of one of the two by the bold expedient of decapitating the other who was caught, is an ancient Minyean tradition, which was carried (he conceives) like many others to Egypt, and afterwards reproduced by the ἐξήγηται as a native Egyptian story. The grounds of this opinion consist mainly in the existence of a story, almost identical in its circumstances, in which the two brothers are Agamedes and Trophonius. PAUSANIAS found it current at Orchomenus in Boeotia, where Hyrieus (the eponymous founder of Hyre) was made the owner of the robbed treasure-house (ix. 37. 3). CHARAX of Pergamus related a similar adventure in the treasure-house of Augeas at Elis. He made Agamedes king of Stympthalus in Arcadia, and Trophonius his son; and the victim who lost his head Cercyon, another son of Agamedes; and he added the further circumstance that Dædalus, who happened to be at the court of Augeas, both devised the snare in which Cercyon was taken and put Augeas on the track of the fugitives (ap. Schol. ad Aristoph. Nub. 508). But, although an ethnical connexion between the Minyæans and the Epeans (Augeas's subjects) may be allowed, and the names of the masonic brothers may well have been familiar in any locality where there were remarkable domical buildings like those at Orchomenus, it can hardly be doubted that the tradition found by Pausanias at that place was formed upon the model of this very story in the text. His mention just before of the pyramids, and the undue interest attached by writers of reputation to foreign wonders, seems pointedly directed against Herodotus. The work of Charax, too, appears to have been constructed on the same principles as that of Apollodorus. Its object was to collect and arrange in a connected story the several local myths, so that it is no authority whatever for the genuineness of any given story in the form related. The mention of Augeas as king of "Elis" is a modern feature, for Elis did not exist before the Persian war (see note on viii. 73, below), and the introduction of Dædalus into the story is another. Dædalus was said at Lebadea to be the sculptor of an idol there, which was usually concealed, but exhibited to the votary of Trophonius for worship just before he descended into the cave (PAUSAN. ix. 39. 8). Charax is certainly not earlier than the time of Nero, and belongs to the class of mere book-makers. See note 162 on i. 51.

³⁴⁷ καὶ ἐς γέλωτα προαγαγέσθαι. This is not an instance of the use of the middle voice for the active, or indeed of the middle voice at all. The subject of the verb includes the brother, who feigned himself to be overcome by the sense of the ridiculous, stimulated by the jokes of some of the soldiers. Translate: "and as more talk sprang up and some went on to joke him, and they were brought into a merry mood."

³⁴⁸ ξυρῆσαι τὰς δεξιὰς παρηγίδας. The same insult was put upon the envoys of David by Hanun the prince of Ammon (2 Sam. x. 4), and was the occasion of a war; and Niebuhr the traveller (quoted by Rosenmüller, Das alte u. neue Mor- genland, iii. p. 136) says that an exactly similar affront caused an important expedition to be made in the year 1765 by Kerim Khan against Mir Mahenna, an independent chief of Benderrigh, a small principality on the Persian gulf. So constant are the habits and feelings of Orientals.

³⁴⁹ [ῥέ.] This word is found in all the MSS but S. Bekker omits it.

³⁵⁰ ἐπ' οἰκῆματος. This expression recurs below, § 126, and in both cases what is meant is a "public brothel." The word had become almost appropriated to this use at Athens in the time of Socrates. Xenophon (Memorab. ii. 2. 4) says: ἐπεὶ τοῦτου γε [τοῦ τῶν ἀφροδισίων ἐπιθυμεῖν]

πρὶν συγγενέσθαι ἀναγκάξειν λέγειν αὐτῇ ὅ τι δὴ ἐν τῷ βίῳ ἔργασται αὐτῷ σοφώτατον καὶ ἀνοσιώτατον ; ὃς δ' ἂν ἀπηγγήσεται τὰ περὶ τὸν φῶρα γεγενημένα, τοῦτον συλλαμβάνειν καὶ μὴ ἀπιέναι ἔξω· ὡς δὲ τὴν παῖδα ποιεῖν τὰ ἐκ τοῦ πατρὸς προσταχθέντα, τὸν φῶρα πυθόμενον τῶν εἵνεκα ταῦτα ἐπρήσseto, βουλευθέντα πολυτροπίῃ τοῦ βασιλέως περιγενέσθαι, ποιεῖν τάδε νεκροῦ προσφάτου ἀποταμόντα ἐν τῷ ὤμῳ τὴν χεῖρα³⁵¹, ἵεναι αὐτὸν ἔχοντα αὐτὴν ὑπὸ τῷ ἱματίῳ· ἐσελθόντα δὲ ὡς τοῦ βασιλέως τὴν θυγατέρα³⁵² καὶ εἰρωτώμενον τάπερ καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι, ἀπηγγήσασθαι ὡς ἀνοσιώτατον μὲν εἴη ἐργασμένος, ὅτε τοῦ ἀδελφεοῦ ἐν τῷ θησαυρῷ τοῦ βασιλέως ὑπὸ πάγης ἀλόντος ἀποτάμοι τὴν κεφαλὴν· σοφώτατον δὲ, ὅτι τοὺς φυλάκους καταμεθύσας καταλύσειε τοῦ ἀδελφεοῦ κρεμάμενον τὸν νέκυν τὴν δὲ, ὡς ἤκουσε, ἄπτεσθαι αὐτοῦ· τὸν δὲ φῶρα ἐν τῷ σκότει προτείνειν αὐτῇ τοῦ νεκροῦ τὴν χεῖρα, τὴν δὲ ἐπιλαβομένην ἔχειν, νομίζουσιν αὐτοῦ ἐκείνου τῆς χειρὸς ἀντέχεσθαι, τὸν δὲ φῶρα προέμενον αὐτῇ οἴχεσθαι διὰ θυρέων φεύγοντα· ὡς δὲ καὶ ταῦτα ἐς τὸν βασιλέα ἀνευεῖχθαι, ἔκπεπλήχθαι μὲν ἐπὶ τῇ πολυφροσύνῃ τε καὶ τόλμῃ τὰνθρώπου τέλος δὲ, διαπέμποντα ἐς πάσας τὰς πόλεις ἐπαγγέλλεσθαι, ἁδείαν τε δίδοντα καὶ μεγάλα ὑποδεκόμενον ἐλθόντι ἐς ὄψιν τὴν ἐωυτοῦ· τὸν δὲ φῶρα πιστεύσαντα ἐλθεῖν πρὸς αὐτόν· Ῥαμφίνιτον δὲ μεγάλως θωυμάσαι, καὶ οἱ τὴν θυγατέρα ταύτην συνοικίσαι ὡς

At last he is offered a free pardon to discover himself, and rewarded by the hand of the king's daughter for his talents.

τῶν ἀπολασόντων μεσσηται μὲν αἱ ὁδοί, μεσσηται δὲ τὰ οἰκήματα, and PLATO (Charmid. § 23) uses the expression ἐν οἰκήματος καθῆσθαι as equivalent to "corpore quæstum facere." In later times, says Valcknaer, the terms στέγος or τέγος were specially applied to the same thing. This allowed the bitter sarcasm (ascribed by Diogenes Laërtius to Diogenes the Cynic, but probably of much later origin) to be passed upon a person of infamous character, on the enquiry being made "of what country was he?" Τεγάτης ἐστί.

³⁵¹ ἀποταμόντα ἐν τῷ ὤμῳ τὴν χεῖρα. The word χεῖρ is used for the whole of the arm from the shoulder to the tips of the fingers, as well as for the mere hand. This last HIPPOCRATES terms ἄκρα χεῖρ when distinguishing it from the βραχίον and πῆχυς, as being the last of the three parts which make up the arm. The term χειρονομεῖν, applied to the pantomimic gestures of a dancer, must have been coined while the word χεῖρ suggested the notion of the whole member. Hence Herodotus says of the feat of Hippocleides (vi. 129), τοῖσι σκέλεσι [not ποσσι] ἐχειρονόμησε. See too the note on iv. 62, σὺν τῇσι χερσὶ. Translate, "having cut off the arm at the shoulder."

³⁵² ὡς τοῦ βασιλέως τὴν θυγατέρα. This is the reading of Gaisford, following M, P, S, V, and K. Schweighäuser reads ἐς for ὡς, with R, F, a, and c. But there are no data for determining which form was used by the author, nothing being more inconstant than the practice of the transcribers. See notes on § 135, ἐς Μυτιλήνην, on § 147, ἐς γὰρ δὴ συνελέγοντο, and on iii. 140, τοῦτον τὸν ἄνδρα.

A subsequent descent of Rampsinus into Hades, and return therefrom, is commemorated by a festival.

The Egyptians consider that Dionysus and Demeter are the rulers of Hades.

³³³ Rampsinus has been supposed to be a word made up of the two names Rameses and Neit, in which case it would intimate the union of a deity of each sex. From the story in the text, we may suppose that this pair was a Poseidon and Demeter, or a Hades and Cora.

³³⁴ ὑπὸ δύο λύκων. The wolf is a conspicuous object in Egyptian representations of Amenthe, the Egyptian Hades. See the last note.

³³⁵ παρὰ πάντα τὸν λόγον. It does not seem at all necessary to confine the application of these words to the author's account of Egypt. He appears to have had no special standard of belief in one part of his work differing from that in another. Where he expressly declares that he rests upon a distinct authority (as, for example, in § 99, and the beginning of § 142), the assertion seems called forth mainly by a sense of the impossibility of harmonizing the account with the commonly received legends of the Greeks.

³³⁶ Δήμητρα καὶ Διόνυσον. The meaning of the writer doubtless is that those deities whom the Greeks understood by Dionysus and Demeter held sway, according to 'the Egyptians,' over the lower world. This is the religion of the Eleusinian mysteries. See the Frogs of ARISTOPHANES, vv. 316—413, and notes 128, 134, above. It must be remembered that the Dionysus here meant is not the rural deity, the god of the vine-dressers. Neither is the Demeter the Roman Ceres. See below, note 429.

³³⁷ πρῶτοι δὲ καὶ τὸνδε τὸν λόγον. The meaning of the author appears to be, not that the Egyptians were the first who maintained the immortality of the soul, and added to that belief the theory of metempsychosis, but that they were the first who propounded the doctrine of the soul's immortality in the form of a theory of metempsychosis.

³⁵⁹ τὸ Λιβυκὸν καλούμενον ὄρος. This is the low range on the western side of the Nile. The pyramids are built on a spur of this ὀρεινὴ ὄφρυς, as STRABO calls it.

³⁶⁰ κατὰ δέκα μυριάδας ἀνθρώπων, "by gangs of 100,000 men."

³⁶¹ τῷ ἄλλῳ λαῷ. This is the reading of the manuscripts P, M, C, K, F. But Gaisford, following S, V, and the rest, leaves out the word ἄλλῳ. The retention of the word implies some distinction between the labourers; and this, from the nature of the case, is not improbable. The building up of the pyramids would be a more difficult task than the quarrying and removal of the stones and the erection of the causeway. It is conceivable that the services of the whole population were pressed in turn for the one, although they might be unavailable for the other.

³⁶² ὅκτῳ ὀργυαὶ. WILKINSON (i. p. 360) remarks that the numbers here must be at fault, as Herodotus himself (§ 127) makes the hill on which the pyramids stand 100 feet high. He describes a causeway which runs from the third pyramid for the length of about 1000 yards, and which is 85 feet high and 32 broad; but as the outer faces have fallen it must have been originally more. This causeway was used by the caliphs for carrying the stones, quarried from the pyramid, back to the Arabian shore, where they were employed in constructing some of the finest buildings of Cairo.

³³³ ταύτη τε δὴ. The MSS vary between ταύτη τε, ταύτη δὲ, ταύτη δὲ δὴ, and ταύτη τε δὴ. Bekker conjectures ταύτης τε δὴ, which certainly gives a more symmetrical construction. But the meaning of the author seems to be slightly different from what would be given by ταύτης. Ταύτη is "in this part of the operation," which is probably meant to include the preparation of the site for the base of the pyramid as well as the mere building of the causeway, and therefore is a correction of the τῆς ὁδοῦ used just before. When the rough miscellaneous preparations were completed the regular work began,—the raising of the pyramid and the construction of the subterranean chambers.

³³⁴ διώρυχα τοῦ Νείλου ἐσαγαγόν. It seems quite certain that this statement as it stands cannot be true. The base of the pyramid stands even now 100 feet above the level of the highest inundation; and, from the raising of the alluvium since the time of Herodotus, the difference of level must then have been even greater. But by digging to a considerable depth into the limestone rock which forms the nucleus of the pyramid—rising up in it, according to Colonel Vyse, to a height of 22 feet—water might possibly be found: for the Libyan mountain is said to rest upon a clay stratum, which would retain the percolating fluid. (WILKINSON, i. p. 338.) Now it appears that the rock has really been perforated diagonally, and a chamber in it exists 105 feet below the base of the pyramid, and on about the same level as the plain under the rock on which the pyramid stands. In the floor of this chamber is "a pit placed diagonally with regard to the walls, which was excavated by Colonel Vyse to the depth of 36 feet, without leading to any result." (WILKINSON, i. p. 335.) It seems not impossible that further excavations may discover a termination of these passages in some chamber presenting an appearance like the pool and shrine described by Herodotus at Buto (§ 156). The water in such a pool (if it existed) would partially be Nile water filtered through from the river, rising as in a well, but the level would be far below the base of the pyramid. The error which the use of an interpreter naturally involves, might very well out of these facts produce such a statement as that in the text, and in § 127, below. And even if such a chamber should not be found to exist, yet, if it was contemplated, the description might be given. It may be added that such an arrangement would be in accordance with the theory that the pyramids are temples, and belong to the same religious system as the Belus of Babylon (see Strabo's expression Βήλου τάφος in note 607 on i. 181) the Apollo of Delos and Patara (i. 182), the Mithras of Bactria, Media, and Persia, and the Osiris of Egypt in Herodotus's time.

³³⁶ οὐδεὶς τῶν λίθων . . . ἐλάσων. He means, no doubt, the outer tier: the inner stones are much less. The dimensions of the pyramid, when perfect, were the following, taking the mean between Colonel Vyse's and Sir G. Wilkinson's estimates. Length of side 760 feet; perpendicular height 481 feet. Vyse makes its former area 13 acres, 1 rood, 22 poles. Wilkinson's estimate would make it stand on nearly half an acre more of ground than the area of Lincoln's Inn Fields. Herodotus does not mention what is the fact, that its sides, as well as those of the other pyramids, exactly face the cardinal points.

Mode in which the pyramid was built.

³⁶⁷ τοὺς ἐπιλοιπούς λίθους. These would be the stones intended for the outside tier. See the last note.

³⁶⁹ ἐν τῇ πυραμίδι. This has been generally interpreted to mean "on the face of the pyramid;" and unless the violence of Cambyses led him to open the pyramids while in the country, it does not seem likely that access to the interior would have been allowed. But may not Herodotus have been shown something in the Hephæsteum at Memphis professing to be a copy of an inscription that had been hid in the recesses of the pyramid, just as we deposit medals in the foundations of our buildings? WILKINSON, who interprets ἐν τῇ πυραμίδι as above, finds much difficulty in it. "From the manner in which Herodotus speaks of the inscription, we might suppose it to have been in Hieratic or Enchorial hieroglyphics. But the latter was then [i. e. when the pyramid was built?] unknown, and the Hieratic was not used on monuments." (i. p. 333.) VYSE found hieroglyphics containing the king's name (Shesô = Sephis = Cheops) in a chamber inside. On the other hand an Arabian historian, Abd-el-Azeez, is said by Wilkinson to confirm Herodotus's statement as he understands it.

³⁷⁰ συρμαίνην καὶ κρόμμυα καὶ σκόροδα. The συρμαίνη is said by WILKINSON to be the figl, now commonly eaten in Egypt by the lower classes. (i. p. 328.)

³⁷¹ μοι ἐπιλεγόμενος τὰ γρ., "while reading the inscription for me." The use of the phrase is such as to indicate an action like that of Cyrus (i. 125). The dragoman professed to read the inscription off to Herodotus; and nothing is more likely than that he gave the sum estimated in terms of talents without any sense of the incongruity. In estimating the value of the interpretation it should not be overlooked that the articles in question did not constitute the workmen's food, as has been erroneously assumed, but only the dyon, or condiment to the stiria, or food. That persons who described the wonders of the country should be thought, or even profess, to "read off" the substance of the tradition they related, is very natural. When Germanicus visited Thebes, among the ruins there remained "structis molibus literæ Egyptiæ priorem opulentiam complexæ, jussusque æ senioribus sacerdotum"

(TACITUS, Annal. ii. 60.) No one will suppose that this is a translation of what was really inscribed in hieroglyphics.

³⁷² τὴν δὲ τὰ τε ὑπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς . . . δωρέοιτο. It seems quite clear that this story as well as that of Rhodopis belong to the same type as the Sardin legend commented upon above (note 329 on i. 92). The fact furnishing the foundation would be the union of two religions,—a Belus-worship and a Mylitta-worship.

The smaller pyramid was regarded as peculiar to the goddess.

³⁷³ τὴν ἐν μέσῳ τῶν τριῶν ἐστηκυῖαν, "standing in the middle of the three." There are three small pyramids opposite to the eastern face of the great pyramid. They are rather less than three others which are opposite to the southern face of Mycerinus's. (WILKINSON, i. p. 361.)

³⁷⁴ δλου καὶ ἡμίσεος πλέθρου. WILKINSON says that this edifice is only 122 feet square, but considers that the difference may be accounted for by its ruined condition. (i. p. 361.)

³⁷⁵ ταῦτα γὰρ ὦν καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐμετρήσαμεν. VYSE gives as the dimensions of this pyramid when complete: length of side 708 feet; perpendicular height 454·3; area 11 acres, 1 rood, 38 poles.

pect that this sentence is of the nature of a note, whether appended by the author or not. It is not called for by the expression ἐς τὰ ἐκείνου μέτρα οὐκ ἀνήκουσαν, but it is suggested by it, as another point in which the second pyramid fell short of the first. For the subject-matter see note 364, above.

³⁷⁷ λίθου Αἰθιοπικοῦ ποικίλου. This is the Syenite granite, the lapis pyrrhoreus of PLINY (xxxvi. 8). Blocks of this lie scattered about the base of the pyramid. (WILKINSON, i. p. 343.)

³⁷⁸ τεσσεράκοντα . . . μέγας, "having taken forty feet short of the other in the same dimension," i. e. the length of the side. This would not be quite accurate; but the difference (760—708) or 52 might be less in Herodotus's measurement, exact determination being extremely difficult.

³⁸⁰ ποιμένος Φιλιτῶνος. This was doubtless the popular belief of the Egyptian boors, among whom the vague tradition of the country having been once overrun by nomad shepherds, "an abomination to the Egyptians," was united with another of the stupendous edifices they saw having been built by task-work. It is not likely that these poor people should be versed in the genealogies, which constituted a branch of the learning of the priests. The condition of the mass of the country-people at the time Herodotus visited the country—sixty or seventy years after the ruin brought upon it by Cambyses—may be perhaps understood by comparing it with that of the modern Greek peasantry at the present time. Of these a traveller in Crete, in 1834, says: "Out of a party of half a dozen Greeks not one knows the year, or has any idea of an era. They reckon neither from Christ nor Mohammed, but tell me that they believe in Christ. On my asking who he was, they answer, 'How should we know? we are ignorant peasants, and only know how to cultivate our fields and vineyards.' Scarcely any Cretan Greeks, except some of the Patéres in the monasteries, have ever heard of the Christian era; but they all date events one by another. Thus in Crete, the year of the great earthquake; the time when Khadjí Osmán-pashá was governor of Khania; the outbreaking of the Greek revolution; the peace of Khusein-bey, &c., are the principal epochs to which all the events of the last twenty-five years are referred." (PASHLEY, Travels in Crete, i. p. 273.) In the eighth century of the Christian era, FIDELIS, a French monk, while proceeding up the Nile, was struck with astonishment at the sight of "the seven barns built by Joseph, which looked at a distance like mountains, four in one place and three in another" (ap. Dicuil. De mensurâ orbis, vi. 3). The tradition which Herodotus received has probably as little claim to authority as that of Fidelis. In both cases the tradition is shaped by the ideas prevalent among the people who transmit it; and a ³²¹ τοῦτους ὑπὸ μύσεος . . . τὰ χωρία. This sentence appears to be of the nature of a note, although very possibly from the hand of the author. The antecedent of the word τούτους may be easily discovered by inference; but nothing can be harsher than the construction grammatically, if the clause be regarded as forming part of a continuous text.

Mycerinus receives an oracle from Buto pro-

³²³ τὸν οὐκ ὀνομαζόμενον θεὸν ὃν ἐμεῦ ἐπὶ τοιοῦτῳ πρήγματι, “the deity whom in such a matter is not named by me.” The deity in question was Osiris, and Herodotus’s objection was not to naming him, for that he does elsewhere (§§ 42. 144), but to naming him in conjunction with a ceremony indicating woe. In the mystical ritual in question Osiris was the Egyptian Adonis, represented as dead: ὁ τριπλάσιος Ἄδωνις δὲ κτὴν Ἀχέροντι φιλεῖται. (THUCYDIDES, xv. 86.) See note 123, above. It was this circumstance which excited the religious feelings of a Dorian Greek. He shrank from associating the name of a deity in many respects analogous to the Apollo of his own traditions, a deity of the upper regions, with a word (κρίπτονται) implying the lamentation for death. On the same principle he preserves a religious silence in speaking of the same thing in § 171, his feeling being that of Xenophanes, who bade the Egyptians in reference to these rituals of sorrow: εἰ θεοὺς νομίζουσιν, μὴ θρηγεῖν· εἰ δὲ θρηνοῦσι, θεοὺς μὴ νομίζειν.

³²⁴ φασὶ γὰρ αὐτὴν . . . κατιδεῖν. In the time of PLUTARCH a consistent physical explanation was given to this ritual. The exposition of the golden cow, covered at that time with a black robe, took place on four days, from the seventh to the tenth of the Egyptian month Aithyr. It was at the time when the overflow of the Nile began visibly to subside, and the land to appear. Hence the lamentation for the death of Osiris (in this proceeding identified with the rising Nile) and the appearance of Isis (the fertile earth); in a robe of black however, as lamenting the departure of her husband the Nile, whose society has left her in a condition to become a mother, and produce the crops which grow upon the saturated plain. But Osiris was also to be lamented if considered as the Sun; for at this time the nights began to be longer than the days. It is to be observed that Isis was, according to Plutarch, not the whole Earth, but only that portion of it which was overflowed by the river,—the aiethyria. So likewise Osiris was not absolutely identical with the river, but was regarded as developing himself in its inundation. (NEEDES’ Osiridos ἀποροσὴν νομίζουσι: De Iside et Osiride, p. 366.) This view is easily connected with the notion of Osiris being the Sun by the adoption of such a modus operandi as Herodotus contemplates in § 25.

³⁸⁶ τῷ θεῷ. The oracle appears to have belonged to Leto, or at least to some deity who in the time of the writer had become analogous to the Hellenic Leto; and therefore it has been proposed to read τῇ θεῷ. But all the MSS have the masculine article; and it seems far from unlikely that the primeval ritual of this Egyptian deity was not one in which the distinction of sex was an important point. CREUZER (Symbolik, iii. pp. 240, seqq.) has shown her substantial identity with the goddess in the Heræum at Mycenæ, of which some circumstances suggest the belief that the original was an androgynous deity. See note on viii. 104.

³⁸⁷ γῆς. This word (which does not exist in any of the MSS) is restored by Valcknaer from a citation by Gregorius. De dialecto Ionicâ.

³⁸⁸ ἐνηβητήρια. This word is explained by the grammarians as ἐνωσχητήρια. The character of the places alluded to may be easily understood by remembering the attractions which the "fornix et uncta popina" possessed for Horace's slave. SALLUST represents the army of Sylla as corrupted by the "locæ amœna voluptaria" which they found in Asia. (Catil. § 11.)

These were no doubt abundant in a place situated as Buto was, in the highway of maritime traffic. It may be remarked that the habits ascribed to Mycerinus, combined with the form of his daughter's shrine, imply a return to the service of deities whose ritual was analogous to that into which the Israelites fell (Exod. xxx. 4-6); for it should be remembered that the revelry in question was regarded as a species of religious service.

³⁸⁹ κῶλον ἕκαστον, "in each side." These words are governed in the same way as τὸν μέγαν in § 127. But the passage is probably corrupt, as it seems impossible to bring the numbers into accordance with known facts. The present base of the pyramid is 333 feet by measurement, and the former length is estimated by VYSE as 354·6 feet. The confusion appears to me to lie in the words which I have included in a parenthesis. In this parenthesis I conceive the writer, whether Herodotus himself, or, as I believe, a later hand - intended to state the amount of difference between the dimensions of Mycerinus's pyramid and his father's; but how the present text grew out of this statement I cannot suggest.

³⁹⁰ λίθου Αἰθιοπικοῦ. Wilkinson censures STRABO (xvii. p. 448) for calling this substance ‘black stone,’ which he supposes to be ‘a bad translation of the λίθος Αἰθιοπ. of Herodotus.’ But Strabo uses the expression merely in contradistinction to the white stone of the calcareous formation, and by no mistake; as is obvious by his qualifying it as meaning “that stone out of which they make the θύια, bringing it from the confines of Ethiopia, far away.”

³⁹⁴ κηρυσσόντων Δελφῶν. PLUTARCH (De serâ N. vindictâ, p. 556) relates that Æeop was sent by Croesus to sacrifice at the oracle of Apollo, and to present each of the Delphians with four mina; but that, some dispute arising between them, he sent the money back to Croesus, and the Delphians in anger, under a false charge of sacrilege, threw him down a precipice. After this a curse fell upon the land, and it was for the removal of this they were desirous of making a propitiation. It is strange that Herodotus should not mention the connexion of Æeop with Croesus, if that feature in the narrative had existed in his time. See note 173 on i. 54.

³⁹⁵ κατ' ἐργασίην. He uses a similar expression, αὐτὴν ἐνεργάζμεναι παιδίσκῃ, i. 93.

⁴⁰³ τῆς τοῦ λαμβάνοντος θήκης, "the tomb belonging to the borrower." The original power seems to have been to mortgage the sepulchre; the subsequent law rather to have been passed to prevent the scandal which might arise if the practice had become common, and the habit of not redeeming the pledge had weakened the religious feelings of the people.

⁴⁰⁴ ἐν τῇ. See note 369, above. It seems most probable that the pyramid here spoken of is the northern brick one of those at Dashur, the former three being those at Giseh. BUNSEN (Aegyptiens Stelle in der Weltgeschichte, ii. p. 89) very plausibly conjectures that Herodotus had this pyramid described to him while he was at Giseh looking at the three he has already mentioned. The pyramid at Dashur is most admirably built of brick, and according to PARRING (quoted by BUNSEN, l. c.) does possess a pre-eminence among all the others—with the exception of the three at Giseh—equal to that claimed for it in the text. Bunsen's notion is that it was built before the three Giseh pyramids, and that the inscription does not refer to them but to the other Dashur edifices. He believes Herodotus to have misplaced Sasychia's reign from a misconception of this point. Bunsen himself places him immediately before Cheops at the close of Manetho's third dynasty. In the Dashur pyramid half a block was discovered, which appears when complete to have borne the name Seserkera. (BUNSEN, p. 94.) Perring gives the side of the pyramid at the base as 360 feet, and estimates its height when complete at 215·6. It is in ruins, and was apparently so in the time of the Egyptian kings, as mummies and later hieratic inscriptions are found in erections among the ruins. (BUNSEN, pp. 91, seqq.) According to Bunsen's view of the case, the only substantial truth in the inscription (said to exist) would be the relative superiority of the pyramid to those antecedently built. This Bunsen and Perring make to consist in the regularity of its brick masonry as compared with the irregular stonework of its two neighbours, the stone pyramids of Dashur, although in point of size it is much inferior, one of them being estimated at 719 feet square when complete. (VYSE ap. Wilkinson, i. p. 370.)

⁴⁰⁷ μάλιστα μὲν Βουβάστι πόλις. Several MSS, among which are S and V, have μάλιστα ἢ ἐν Βουβάστι πόλιν. The mention of Bubastis here and the description of the site of the temple appears to me like a subsequent insertion into the text. Bubastis was in an entirely different locality. See note on § 158, below.

⁴⁰⁸ ἐστὶ Ἄρτεμις. He repeats this below (§ 156), where see the note, and implies it above (§ 59). In point of fact Bubastis is Pi-beseth, where the first syllable is the Egyptian article pe, as in the word πίρωμις, and Basht or Bast is the name of the Egyptian Artemis.

⁴⁰⁹ ἐσέχουσι. This word is used in a very peculiar sense, for Herodotus goes on particularly to remark that the canals do not run into any thing, but approach one another within a certain distance and then stop. It seems possible that in a locality full of canals, like the delta of the Nile, the word originally used to denote direction for the purpose of communication came to be provincially applied in all cases where the appearance occurred of a channel cut for the admission of water. See ii. 11: κόλπος θαλάσσης ἐσέχων ἐκ τῆς Ἐρυθρῆς καλεομένης θαλάσσης, and κόλπον ἐσέχοντα ἐπὶ Αἰθιοπίας, and the note 42, above. In § 121 the word seems used of the communication allowed by a party-wall. See note 342, above.

⁴¹⁰ κατορᾶται πάντοθεν περιϊόντι. WILKINSON, who describes the ruins of Tel Basta, the site of Bubastis, mentions this notice as being strikingly confirmed by the great height of the mounds. (Modern Egyptians, i. p. 427.)

⁴¹¹ πάντη σταδίῳ ἐστὶ. WILKINSON (p. 428) makes the sacred enclosure about 600 feet square. The length of the temple (which was built of the finest red granite) he estimates at about 500.

⁴¹² ἐπὶ σταδίου τρεῖς. WILKINSON (l. c.) found the distance from the outer circuit of the one temple to the other 2250 feet. The agora is about 900 feet from the temple of Bubastis. He could not ascertain the breadth of the road from the quantity of ruins which cover it. From the under-estimate of the length of the dromos and the mention of the Hermæum merely as its termination, one may conjecture that the writer did not go beyond the temple of Bubastis.

⁴¹³ τέλος δὲ τῆς ἀπαλλαγῆς. Valcknaer endeavours to explain this strange expression as being equivalent to ἀπαλλαγῇ, just as θανάτου τέλος and φόνου τέλος are used where θάνατος and φόνος only are meant. This does not appear to me satisfactory, but I can offer nothing better.

⁴¹⁴ ἀλλὰ γὰρ οἱ ἐξεληλυθέναι . . ἐκχωρήσιν. The whole of this sentence is to be taken as the protasis in the construction; then follows its explanation in an account of what the oracle in Ethiopia had said; and at last comes the apodosis, ἐς ἃν ὁ χρόνος, &c. But this last, owing to the length of the parenthesis and its character—it being not the words of the king, but a statement of a fact—changes into an account of what he did, instead of the sentence ending in its original form. Translate: “‘he would not do this though; no, as the time had run out which he had been allowed by prophecy for ruling over Egypt and going,’—for while in Ethiopia the oracles which the Ethiopians consult declared to him that it was his destiny to reign over Egypt for fifty years,—as then this time was run out, and the appearance of the vision came upon the back of it, disturbing his mind, this Sabacos took himself off voluntarily out of Egypt.”

⁴¹⁵ ἕτα πεντήκοντα. BUNSEN (vol. iii. p. 138) considers that, instead of the single king Sabaco, it is distinctly proved that an Ethiopian dynasty of three kings reigned in Egypt for fifty years (their names being SCHEBEK, SHEBEK, and THRK, i. e.

Sabacos, Sebichus, and Tirhakah). The error of Herodotus he ascribes to the fact of an oral communication being the source of his information. This dynasty he makes the 26th of the Egyptians. It is succeeded by the 26th or Saitan, consisting of the Egyptian princes Stephanes, Nechepous, Necho, Psammitichus, Necho II., another Psammitichus or Psammuthis, Vaphres, and Amosis. During the first 12 (or 18) years of this Bunsen conceives Ameris (an Ethiopian) to have maintained his ground against the Saitan dynasty. If Herodotus is to be judged by the standard of other authorities, we must suppose a thorough confusion spreading over several centuries, between the Anysis and Sethos of his account. But this is inconceivable upon any hypothesis short of the one that the narrative he received at the Hephaestum at Memphis differed enormously from those which were current at other temples, and upon which the diverse traditions which have come down to us through the Alexandrine chronographers were founded. A mechanical arrangement of these, while the law of their growth remains undiscovered, seems to furnish a most uncertain basis for historical conclusions.

⁴¹⁶ οὐκ οἶοι τε ἦσαν . . . Ἀμυρταίου. This statement seems to prove satisfactorily that one part at least of the story of the blind king is of very late date. (See CLINTON's Fasti Hellenici, s. 455 a.c.) The chronology of the passage would throw the time of the Ethiopian invasion back to the middle of the twelfth century a.c., 300 years at least too early to be manageable by any chronologer. Accordingly it has been proposed to alter the numbers. But they are defended by the authority of all the MSS without exception. WILKINSON (i. p. 418) fixes the site of Elbo as "in the s.e. corner of the lake of Buto, now lake Boorlos." He does not say on what authority, and it is difficult to suppose that such a site would be secure. One would rather have supposed a refugee hiding some where in the Sebennytic branch (see note 61, above).

⁴¹⁷ τῶν μαχίμων. It has been proposed to read τὸ μάχιμον. But we may suppose that it was some individuals only of the military caste which were slighted by Sethos, although the whole body took the quarrel up, knowing his dislike of them.

τε καὶ Ἀσσυρίων did not exist in the copies of Herodotus used by JOSEPHUS (Archæol. x. 1. 4). They are found however in all the modern MSS, as, even if they be not genuine, was to be expected as soon as the desire began to prevail among the Christians to bring the various pagan traditions into harmony with the Old Testament history; a desire which they inherited from the Egyptian Jews of the Ptolemaic times, Aristobulus and his followers.

⁴¹⁹ ταύτῃ γάρ εἰσι αἱ ἐσβολαί. See note on iii. 10.

⁴²⁰ μῦς ἀρουραίους. These are probably the same animal (the shrew-mouse) called μυγαλὴ above (§ 67). The story perhaps may be, as some have thought, an Egyptian version of the destruction of Sennacherib (2 Kings xix). But all the details are undoubtedly a mere fiction to explain the human figure with the mouse. In the temple of Apollo Smintheus at Chryse the tradition ran that the Teucrians who came from Crete to the Troad had received an oracle that they should settle in the place where Titans (γυγηνεῖς) should attack them. At a place called Amazitis an enormous number of field mice in the course of the night devoured all the leather straps of their armour and every thing else which could be eaten. They recognized in this the fulfilment of the oracle,— and the incident was commemorated by a statue by Scopas, representing the deity with a mouse at his foot. (STRABO, xiii. p. 117.) It is impossible to doubt the similar origin of two such similar stories. But that relating to the Teucrians was certainly not older than the time of Callinus (see note 332, above).

⁴²¹ [ὄπλων]. Gaisford retains this word, but it appears to me to be a gloss of the preceding γυμνῶν. Several MSS have ἀνόπλων, which is obviously so.

⁴²² ἔχων ἐπὶ τῆς χειρὸς μῦν. The shrew-mouse entered as a symbol into the Osiris cycle of the Egyptian mythology, perhaps originally as an emblem of fecundity, being apparently produced from the earth in myriads. In later times another explanation was given of the matter (see note 179, above). It may be observed that the Hephæstus of Memphis was regarded in the time of Cicero as the father of the Sun, i. e. that he was identified with Osiris (De Naturâ Deorum, iii. 21); so that such a symbol as that of the mouse, whatever the meaning of it was, would not be out of place in his temple. The animal passed over from Egypt to Europe and the coast of Asia, as a device of Apollo, under the name of Smintheus, σμινθὸς meaning 'a mouse' in Crete and on the coast of the Troad. (POLEMO, ap.

Villoison Schol. ad II. i. 39.) Apollo also appears with a mouse on his right hand on a coin of Alexandria;—and of his worship under this name the whole coast of Asia Minor and the adjacent islands was full. (See ΣΤΡΑΒΟ, xiii. p. 118, and note 506 on i. 151.) That the title is an ancient one is plain from its appearing in Iliad i. 39:

—Τενέδοί τε ἱφὶ ἀνὰσσεισ

and that the mouse is an ancient symbol on a part of the coast of Greece which had early communication with Egypt, appears from its being found on the oldest coins of Argos. (PAYNE KNIGHT, Inquiry into the Symbolical Language of Ancient Art, § 125, note 3.) As a priestic animal, the mouse would be appropriate to the Achaean or ante-dorian Herē of Mycenae, a θεὸς γαμήλιος. (See notes on vi. 81 and 83; see also note 121 on ii. 41.)

⁴²³ ἑκατέρους τοσούτους, "so many of each sort," i. e. 341 kings and 341 priests.

⁴²⁴ καὶ τοι τριηκόσιαι μὲν . . μύρια ἕτεα. It will be observed that this is an average estimate on the part of the writer. He nowhere says that the priests gave this as the actual number of years which had elapsed between Menes and Sethos; and it is probable that they really did imagine a different and much smaller number to have passed.

⁴²⁵ ἐν τοῖνυν τούτῳ τῷ χρόνῳ . . τοὺς θανάτους. That this clause rests upon an entire misunderstanding of what the priests really intended there can be no doubt; but it is not easy to say exactly what the statement was of which it is the perversion. Herodotus obviously took it to mean that there had been four sudden jumps in the course of the sun, entirely reversing his path in the heavens from what it was before; so that thus during two distinct periods he had risen in the west and set in the east. It seems not impossible that what the priests meant was that two so-called Sothiac periods or canicular years had elapsed, which would give a time of $2 \times 1461 (= 2922)$ years. The Egyptian year at the commencement of their era seems to have begun when the first rising of Sirius as a morning star (see note 13, above) synchronized with the beginning of the rise of the Nile. Supposing this to take place on the 1st day of the month Thoth, the similar rising would next year not take place till the 2nd day, the Egyptian year being 365 days only, about six hours too short. This alteration would steadily increase until in 1461 years of 365 days (= 1460 Julian years) the cycle would be complete, and the heliacal rising of Sirius would again take place on the 1st day of Thoth. This it will be remembered is the space of time which was, according to some accounts, supposed to intervene between two appearances of the phanix, "a bird sacred to the sun" in Egypt. (TACITUS, Annal. vi. 28.) This cyclical variation would be spoken of as a motion of the sun in the heavens, and would easily be misunderstood by a Greek who was no astronomer (see note 12, above), and not aware that the expression had a special reference to Sirius, not to the Earth. Possibly too the dragoman was not careful to avoid a paradoxical way of putting the matter. The Egyptian calendar is excellently described by IDELMER, Handbuch der Chronologie, who explains this passage differently (i. p. 138).

⁴²⁶ Ἐκαταίῳ τῷ λογοποῦ. See note on v. 36.

⁴²⁷ ἐμοὶ οὐ γενεηλογήσαντι ἑμευτὸν. It is very singular that Herodotus should give no description of Thebes, famous as it was from even the Homeric poems, and expressly as he here states that he was a witness of the colossi contained within the very sanctuary. Indeed that a Greek should enter the sanctuary at all shows the extent to which a religious syncretism must have been carried in this case of the Theban Zeus. Cleomenes ventured into the temple of Athene Polias at Athens, only from confidence in his Achæan blood (v. 72). Compare too the case of Miltiades (vi. 135). Is it possible that the reason of the writer's silence with regard to the rest of Thebes is to be looked for in the greater degree of exclusiveness prevailing in the other temples? See note 10, above.

⁴²⁸ Πιρώμης . . . καλὸς κἀγαθός. The word "piremi" is said to mean in Coptic "the man," being the word signifying man with the article prefixed to it (JABLONSKY, Proleg. ad Panth. Egypti. § 18). It seems therefore plain that Herodotus did not understand the language of the country. See note 296 a, above. Jablonsky (l.c.) suggests a clue to his error in the circumstance, that "piremi" in the same language means δὲ δίκαιος. But it seems more likely that the word signifying "man," in the old Egyptian language, like the baro or miles of the middle ages, should have become in course of time a title of honour.

μένῳ γενέσθαι, κατὰ ἑξακόσια ἔτεα καὶ χίλια ⁴³² μάλιστα ἐστὶ ἐς

⁴²⁹ ἐστὶ Διόνυσος κατὰ Ἑλλάδα γλῶσ-σαν. The Dionysus which was identical with Osiris was not the deity of the vinedressers, but the wandering deity symbolized by the Sun. See above, note 356.
DIODORUS (i. 11) and PLUTARCH (De Iside et Osiride) give πολυόφθαλμος as the etymological meaning of the word ὀσ-ίρι. If ἰρι be really an old Egyptian word, signifying ὀφθαλμός, it is probably the root of the word Σείριος (the dog-star), which name, according to Hesychius (v. Σείριον κυνὸς δικήν) ARCHILOCHUS applied to the Sun.

⁴³⁰ δεδήλωται μοι πρόσθε. See § 43.

⁴³¹ αἰεὶ ἀπογραφόμενοι τὰ ἔτεα. This pretension, it will be observed, extends at least to the earliest date mentioned, viz. that of Heracles, 17,000 years before.
But the actual reckoning is backward, and that from no more ancient date than the time of Amasis. There is no hint of an era existing before that time; but the phrase is quite consistent with the notion of an era formed in the time of Amasis by backward calculation, and having its epoch placed far back after being formed. The phrase αἰεὶ λογιζόμενοι betrays the real state of the case in the alleged "registration of the years as they arrived."

⁴³² κατὰ ἑξακόσια ἔτεα καὶ χίλια. Several of the MSS omit the word ἔτεα, and one (S) has κατὰ ἑννακόσια καὶ χίλια. It seems impossible to reconcile this number with any known mythological genealogy, and the emendation κατὰ ἐξήκοντα ἔτεα καὶ χίλια has been proposed. But this does not exhaust the difficulties. The pedigrees current in the time of Herodotus would give the generations as follows, taking the Theban family as a basis.

Probable cause of the difference.

Ταῦτα μὲν νῦν αὐτοὶ Αἰγύπτιοι λέγουσι· ὅσα δὲ οἱ τε ἄλλοι 147

ciated with Amphytryon (the husband of Alcmena) in the attempt to revenge her brothers; and as he is the brother of Jocasta (the wife of Laius), Alcmena may be put in the same generation with him. So again Tydeus and Polynices, marrying two sisters, belong to the same generation; and finally Penelope, being the wife of Odysseus, the associate of Tydides, belongs to the sixth parallel. This arrangement would give, reckoning a century to three generations, 100 years from Pan to Heracles, but less than a century from Heracles to Dionysus. If conjecture is to be allowed, I should be disposed to change καὶ into ἢ in the reading of the Sancroft MS (S), and read κατὰ ἐννηκόσια ἢ χίλια, the difference between Dionysus and Heracles being less than a century, and the author perhaps not choosing in such a matter to break up his centuries, lest he should imply a greater accuracy in the chronology than was possible. This alteration brings the three dates into tolerable harmony with each other; but it will be observed that all of them are two centuries too high according to the received chronology. NIEBUHR (Kleine Schriften, i. p. 196) proposes an extremely ingenious explanation, with reference exclusively however to the date of Heracles. Identifying him with the Alcæus, who was the progenitor of the Lydian dynasty (Herod. i. 7), he assigns a century from him to Agron; and from Agron to the end of Croesus's reign he takes the numbers given by Herodotus, i. e. 505 + 107 years. Hence we should get 775 years from Heracles to 546 B.C., or 900 to 421 B.C., a remarkable coincidence with the text. But, although to controvert Niebuhr on a philological point is little less rash than an opposition to Newton in a question of physics, I cannot acquiesce in his solution. His argument proceeds on the hypothesis that Herodotus in the Lydian dynasty is following an Assyrian chronology of an authentic character,—an hypothesis which I do not admit, it being quite opposed to the phenomena to which I have called attention in the notes on that part of his work. If he follows it here, could he speak of his dates as Hellenic ones? and would he tacitly conform the Hellenic myths of Penelope and Semele to it? I think the supposition a far less violent one, that here, as in many other places, we have an interpolation by some ancient editor, who, in this particular case, would belong to the era of the Ptolemies.

Agreement of Egyptian and foreign accounts.

An oracle declares the future monarch of all Egypt, at a time when 12 kings exist.

ἄνθρωποι καὶ Αἰγύπτιοι⁴³³ λέγουσι ὁμολογέοντες τοῖσι ἄλλοις κατὰ ταύτην τὴν χώραν γενέσθαι, ταύτ' ἤδη φράσω προσέσταί δέ τι αὐτοῖσι καὶ τῆς ἐμῆς ὄψις.

Ἐλευθερωθέντες Αἰγύπτιοι μετὰ τὸν ἱερά τοῦ Ἡφαίστου βασιλεύσαντα⁴³⁴, (οὐδένα γὰρ χρόνον οἰοί τε ἦσαν ἄνευ βασιλέως διαιτᾶσθαι), ἐστήσαντο δωδέκα βασιλείας, δωδέκα μοίρας δασάμενοι Αἴγυπτον πᾶσαν⁴³⁵. οὗτοι ἐπυγαμίας ποιησάμενοι ἐβασίλευον, νόμοισι τοισιδε χρεώμενοι, μήτε καταίρειν ἀλλήλους μήτε πλέον τι δίκῃσθαι ἔχειν τὸν ἕτερον τοῦ ἑτέρου εἶναι τε φίλους τὰ μάλιστα· τῶνδε δὲ εἵνεκα τοὺς νόμους τούτους ἐποιεῖντο ἰσχυρῶς περιστέλλοντες⁴³⁶. ἐκέχρητό⁴³⁷ σφι κατ' ἀρχὰς αὐτίκα ἐνισταμένοισι ἐς τὰς τυραννίδας "τὸν χαλκῆ φιάλῃ σπείσαντα αὐτῶν ἐν τῷ ἱρῷ τοῦ Ἡφαίστου, τοῦτον ἀπάσης βασιλεύσειν Αἰγύπτου."

ἐς γὰρ δὴ τὰ πάντα ἱρὰ συνελέγοντο⁴³⁸. Καὶ δὴ σφι μνημόσυνα ἔδοξε λιπέσθαι κοινῇ· δόξαν δέ σφι, ἐποίησαντο λαβύρινθον⁴³⁹ ὁλόγον ὑπὲρ τῆς λίμνης τῆς Μοίριος κατὰ Κροκοδείλων⁴⁴⁰ καλεομένην πόλιν μάλιστα κη κείμενον· τὸν ἐγὼ ἤδη ἴδον λόγου μέζω⁴⁴¹. εἰ γάρ τις τὰ ἐξ Ἑλλήνων τεύχεά τε καὶ ἔργων ἀπόδεξιν συλ-

⁴³⁴ μετὰ τὸν ἱερά . . βασιλεύσαντα. The participle is used (as in the Latin idiom) where in Greek the infinitive would be more usual. So i. 34, μετὰ Σόλωνα οἰχόμενον. i. 37, ταῦτα οὕτω ποιούμενα. i. 61, ὅπῃ τὸν νηὸν κατακαίοντα.

⁴³⁵ δωδέκα μοίρας δασάμενοι Αἴγυπτον πᾶσαν, "having made a duodecimal partition of all Egypt." Αἴγυπτον is the accusative case after an imaginary verb of which δωδ. μ. δ. is the equivalent. So in iv. 148 there is σφείας αὐτοὺς ἐξ μοίρας διείλον, where some of the MSS insert ἐς before ἐξ by the arbitrary correction of a transcriber. See note 132, above.

⁴³⁶ ἰσχυρῶς περιστέλλοντες. See i. 98. S and V have ισχυρούς.

⁴³⁷ ἐκέχρητο. The manuscripts S and V have this form, the others ἐκέχρηστο. The same difference is found below, § 151, iii. 64. But in vii. 220 ἐκέχρητο is given by almost all the MSS.

⁴³⁸ ἐς γὰρ δὴ τὰ πάντα ἱρὰ συνελέγοντο. In the Hellenic confederacies the meeting of the allies was always held in the same place; consequently, without some explanation, the reader would have imagined that this centre of union for the Egyptian dynasts had been the Hephæstæum at Memphis, and therefore the author adds that their practice had been to meet [in turn] at all the temples. The manuscript S has for ἐς the Attic expression ὧς. (See note 352, above.)

⁴³⁹ λαβύρινθον. The Greek root of this word (λαβρα, i. e. λαβρα) shows that the name cannot be pure Egyptian.

⁴⁴⁰ Κροκοδείλων. This is the reading of all the MSS except S, which has Κροκοδείλου. It should be remarked that Κρ. πόλις is the Hellenic, not the Egyptian name of the city, the word Κροκόδειλος being an Ionian word (§ 68).

⁴⁴¹ τὸν ἐγὼ ἤδη ἴδον λόγου μέζω, "in which at last I had a sight passing description."

λογίσαιτο, ἐλάσσονος πόνου τε ἂν καὶ δαπάνης φανεῖη ἔοντα τοῦ λαβυρίνθου τούτου (καὶ τοι ἀξιολόγός γε καὶ ὁ ἐν Ἐφέσῳ ἐστὶ νηὸς, καὶ ὁ ἐν Σάμφῳ) ἦσαν⁴⁴² μὲν νυν καὶ αἱ πυραμίδες λόγου μέζονες, καὶ πολλῶν ἐκάστη αὐτέων Ἑλληνικῶν ἔργων καὶ μεγάλων ἀνταξίη· ὁ δὲ δὴ λαβύρινθος⁴⁴³ καὶ τὰς πυραμίδας ὑπερβάλλει. τοῦ γὰρ δυνάδεκα μὲν εἰσι αὐλαὶ κατὰστεγοι⁴⁴⁴ ἀντίτυλοι ἀλλήλησι, ἕξ μὲν πρὸς βορέῳ⁴⁴⁵, ἕξ δὲ πρὸς νότον τετραμμέναι συνεχέες⁴⁴⁶. τοίχος δὲ ἔξωθεν ὁ αὐτὸς σφεας περιέργει. οἰκήματα δ' ἔνεστι διπλᾶ, τὰ μὲν ὑπόγαια τὰ δὲ μετέωρα ἐπ' ἐκείνοισι, τρισχίλια ἀριθμὸν, πεντακοσίων καὶ χιλίων ἐκάτερα⁴⁴⁷. τὰ μὲν νυν μετέωρα τῶν οἰκημάτων αὐτοὶ τε ὀρέομεν διεξιόντες⁴⁴⁸ καὶ αὐτοὶ θεησάμενοι λέγομεν τὰ δὲ αὐτῶν ὑπόγαια λόγοισι ἐπυνθανόμεθα· οἱ γὰρ ἐπεστεῶντες τῶν Αἰγυπτίων δεικνύναι αὐτὰ οὐδαμῶς ἤθελον, φάμενοι θήκας αὐτόθι εἶναι τῶν τε ἀρχὴν τὸν λαβύρινθον τούτον οἰκοδομησαμένων βασιλέων καὶ τῶν ἱρῶν κροκοδείλων οὕτω τῶν μὲν κάτω πέρι οἰκημάτων ἀκοή παραλαβόντες λέγομεν τὰ δὲ ἄνω, μέζονα ἀνθρωπηίων ἔργων αὐτοὶ ὀρέομεν⁴⁴⁹. αἱ τε γὰρ ἔξοδοι διὰ τῶν στεγέων καὶ οἱ ἐλγμοὶ διὰ τῶν αὐλέων, ἔοντες ποικιλώτατοι, θῶμα μυρίον παρέρχοντο ἕξ αὐλῆς τε ἐς τὰ οἰκήματα

⁴⁴² ἦσαν. The author uses the past tense from having seen the pyramids before the Labyrinth. They were indeed "passing description" (λόγου μέζονες), but the Labyrinth exceeded them also.

⁴⁴⁴ αὐλαὶ κατὰστεγοι, "roofed courts." The epithet seems used to distinguish the chambers in question from the corresponding portion of a Greek building, which no doubt was always open. But in the latitude of 29° much greater protection from the sun would be requisite.

⁴⁴⁵ πρὸς βορέῳ. Some MSS have πρὸς βορέην. But this seems a change adopted merely for the sake of producing symmetry of phrase. See § 121, above, and iii. 102.

⁴⁴⁶ συνεχέες. See note 451, below.

⁴⁴⁷ πεντακοσίων καὶ χιλίων ἐκάτερα. This is the reading of the MSS, but it is obviously corrupt; nor is there any clue in the variations of the context to suggest an emendation. Perhaps the author wrote πεντακοσίων καὶ χιλίων ἐκατέρῃ ὄντων οἰκημάτων, and continued τὰ μὲν νυν μετέωρα αὐτοὶ τε κ.τ.λ.

⁴⁴⁸ διεξιόντες, "in the course of our circuitous passage." See the note on vii. 234, and below, note 450.

⁴⁴⁹ αὐτοὶ ὀρέομεν. It will be observed that what Herodotus testifies to as an eye-witness is not the number of the οἰκήματα, but the remarkable arrangement of the passages by which they were connected with the αὐλαὶ to which they belonged, and with the open colonnades (παστάδες) which served as a communication between each system of οἰκήματα. The uncertainty of the numbers even of the αὐλαὶ is obvious from the account of STRABO (xvii. c. i. p. 454). It is clear that both he and Herodotus were eye-witnesses, but received very different accounts both of the number of the αὐλαὶ and the cause of that number. In other words, the story of the ἐξηγητὰι had entirely altered in the interval. Strabo gives no particular numbers for the στεγὰι, but says that the αὐλαὶ were twenty-seven, one for every Nome, and that they were used as courts of justice for the inhabitants. In another passage he is even more lax: ὡς δὲ τῶν, τοσοῦτοι ἦσαν οἱ σύμπαυτες νομοί, ὅσαι αἱ ἐν τῷ λαβυρίνθῳ αὐλαί· αὐταὶ δ' ἐλάττους τῶν τριᾶκοντα (p. 416). DIONODORUS SICULUS says of the building, that it is οὐκ οὕτω κατὰ τὸ μέγεθος τῶν ἔργων θαυμαστὸν ὡς πρὸς τὴν φιλοτεχνίαν δυσμύμητον (i. 61).

The lake Mæris, in the middle of which stand two pyramids with colossal figures on their summits,

⁴⁴⁹ διεξιούσι, "while passing by ins and outs." See note on vii. 234.

⁴⁵¹ αὐλὴ δὲ ἐκάστη περίστυλος. This expression seems to show decisively that there can have been no party-wall between two αὐλαί, and therefore that the word συνεχές must not be taken as meaning more than that there was an architectural connexion between the six adjacent halls. This seems to have been effected by means of οἰκήματα and παστάδες. See note 449, above.

⁴⁵² ἐν τῇ ζῶα μεγάλα ἐγγέγλυπται. See note 238 on i. 70.

⁴⁵³ ὁδὸς δ' ἐς αὐτὴν. The manuscripts S and V continue the narrative by the words ὁδὸς δ' ἐς θῶμα ἔτι μέζον πάρεστιν ἡ Μοίριος καλεομένη λίμνη.

⁴⁵⁴ ἴσοι καὶ αὐτῆς Αἰγύπτου τὸ παρὰ θάλασσαν. The construction would be improved by altering τὸ into τῷ. But it seems possible that the sentence is a mere note, originally written in the margin, taken from § 6, and retaining the very words there used.

⁴⁵⁵ δίκαιαι, "complete." The use is like that of the Latin justus in such phrases as justum volumen. XENOPHON (Mem. iv. 4, 6) uses the expression ἴστων δίκαιον ποιεῖσθαι, "to break a horse thoroughly in," and ÆSCHYLUS (Eumenid. 291): πιστὸν δίκαιως, "faithful in every point."

⁴⁵⁶ οὕτω αἱ μὲν πυραμίδες . . ἑξαπαλαιστων. I look upon this sentence as the note of some subsequent διασκευδότης of the work. Herodotus could never have thought it necessary to insert such an explanation for his contemporaries and countrymen. (See note 112 on i. 32.) The manuscripts S and V commence the sentence with τούτῳ instead of οὕτω, and omit the word δίκαια. The case is a very different one from that in iv. 86, where it was necessary for the author to give the mode in which he arrived at his estimate.

Psammitichus had formerly fled to Syria and returned to Sais.

⁴⁴³ ποιήσαντα. Bekker conceives that the words τὰ ἐποίησε are to be inserted. But, if this narrative is a local one, possibly Herodotus retained the very phrase which was used; and ποιεῖν (like the Latin facere) might be employed in the sense of "to sacrifice." Such an usage appears in the Hellenistic Greek,—the dialect of commerce. (See Luc. Evang. ii. 27. Hebr. xi. 28.) Independently of this supposition, τὸ ποιηθὲν, above, helps to explain ποιήσαντα.

⁴⁶⁵ ὡς χάλκεοι . . . τὸ πεδίον. In the Odyssey (xiv. 252—265) is a description of just such a raid made by the Cretan crew, with whom Odysseus is sailing, upon the Egyptians; but these, when they come to the rescue, are themselves armed in brass: πλῆγτο δὲ πᾶν πεδίον πεζῶν τε καὶ ἱππῶν Χαλκοῦ τε στεροπῆς. The writer attributes to them the habits of his own countrymen.

⁴⁶⁶ φίλα τε τοῖσι Ἴωσι καὶ Καρσὶ ποιέεται, "He makes overtures to the Ionians and Carians." So Aristagoras, in the wish to win over the Ionian cities to an alliance with himself, put the several dynasts into the hands of their subjects: φίλα βουλόμενος ποιέσθαι τῇσι πόλεσι ἐξεδίδου (v. 37). The difference between the active and middle voice of the word in such phrases is pretty much the same as that between direct and indirect action. The latter would be especially applicable to the proceeding of a sovereign or person in high office, although the two expressions might very often be used indifferently, on the common principle, "Qui facit per alterum facit per se."

⁴⁶⁷ αὐλήν. STRABO describes Apis as being kept ἐν σηκῷ τινι, and says that there was an αὐλή in front of this, in which was another σηκὸς containing his mother. He was every day let out at a certain hour to run about (xvii. c. 1, p. 448). Strabo says, on the occasion of describing this, that Apis was identical with Osiris. At the time he visited Egypt this deity would be much more familiar to travellers, especially Romans, than Epa-phus. He adds, that the temple of Apis is adjacent to the Hephæsteum.

be regarded in the light of fauvebourgs, appropriated to different communities as a habitation, like the Jews' quarter, the Armenian quarter, &c. in a modern Turkish city. Whatever their origin, they would no doubt in the sequel be chiefly tenanted by traders, and hence, when the commerce of Egypt was transferred to another emporium (as was the case under Amasis), the first occupied locality would soon be deserted. For the description of the site of Bubastis, see above, § 138, and note 481, below; and for traces of the same name in a locality similarly situated, note 588 on l. 174. In the river Nile there were islands called by the names of Ephesus, Chios, Lesbos, Cyprus, Samos, and other Hellenic names (Ἡεκατῆς sp. Steph. Byzant. v. Ἐφεσος), a decisive evidence of the commercial intercourse which existed in early times between Egypt and the trading communities of the Ægean.

⁴⁷¹ κατοίκησε ἐς Μέμφιν. Probably the site was that which in the time of STRABO was called Babylon, a strong fort connected with the Nile by a mole. He mentions the view of the pyramids on the opposite side of the river obtained from it. According to the account he received, it was a settlement extorted from the kings of Egypt by some Babylonians who had revolted, under what circumstances, or at what time, he does not say. DIODORUS makes the rebels captives from Babylon in Mesopotamia, brought by Sesostris to Egypt, and exasperated to secession by the hard task-work in which he employed them. On the other hand CREÆSUS, who followed Medo-Persian traditions, called these Babylonians a colony left in Egypt by Semiramis when she invaded it (ap. Diodor. i. 56). Diodorus adds the sensible remark: περὶ τούτων τὸ μὲν ἀληθὲς ἐκθέσθαι μετὰ ἀκριβείας οὐ βέβηκεν,—a maxim which deserves more respect than it has obtained. Babylon was the station of a Roman legion in the time of Strabo (xvii. c. 1, p. 447). WILKINSON (Modern Egyptians, p. 274) identifies its site with a portion of Old Cairo, but raises an imaginary difficulty in misunderstanding the expression by which Strabo describes the fort.

⁴⁷² πρότεροι γὰρ οὗτοι . . . ἀλλόγλωσσοι κατοικίσθησαν. No doubt they were the first through whom the Hellenic race were brought into contact with Egypt. But from the time of Solomon (1 Kings ix. 18—28) it seems scarcely doubtful but that there must have been much commercial intercourse with Egypt, probably accompanied with settlements there. The example of Jeroboam (1 Kings xi. 40) can hardly have been solitary. The state of things prophetically described by ISAIAH xix. 18—25 is illustrated by JEREMIAH xliv. and EZEKIEL xxix. xxv., from which it is plain that several important cities of Egypt were full of Jews. See too the notice of the Tyrian settlement, § 112, above.

⁴⁷³ τοῦ χρηστηρίου τοῦ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ. The expression by itself would suggest that in the apprehension of the writer there was no other oracle in Egypt. See notes 164 and 213, above.

⁴⁷⁴ ἀναπλέοντι. The words ἐν δεξιᾷ would seem to have fallen out of the text. The city was on the western bank of the Sebennytic mouth of the Nile.

⁴⁷⁵ ἕς τε ὕψος καὶ ἐς μῆκος. The manuscripts S and V have καὶ μῆκος: but there is no important variation in any part of the passage, although it is difficult not to suppose some corruption. τοῦτοις must mean ὕψει καὶ μήκει, and ἕκαστος refer to the same. It seems not necessary to regard the temple as in the view of the writer a dilith structure. His words are compatible with the meaning that each side of it was a single stone of forty cubits square, and that the four were surmounted by another single block which overhung each side by four cubits. It is impossible, however, to conceive how even such masses could have been placed in position: and it is easier, so far as concerns the mechanical difficulty, to imagine the edifice really hewn out of a monolith block found on the spot. The efforts of the orientals in this kind were indeed stupendous. In the ruins of Balbec there are said to be "two stones in position, the fellow to which lies in the quarries about a mile distant, estimated to weigh from 1500 to 1800 tons. It is 68 feet 2 inches long, 16 feet deep, and 18 feet broad, and it has all the holes where the masons' clamps were fixed that lifted it." (Letter to the Evening Mail, Aug. 14, 1861.) The Balbec block would contain 18,405 cubic feet; but the top stone in the text, if it be supposed only one cubit thick, would contain more than four times as much material.

⁴⁷⁶ παρωροφίδα. This appears to be the portion of the roof standing out over the edge of the wall,—the coping. It is explained by JULIUS POLLUX as τὸ μεταξὺ τοῦ ὀρόφου καὶ τοῦ στέγους. It has, however, been understood differently,—as the cornice, or the whole of the entablature above the bed of the architrave,—which in Egyptian buildings is found to occupy a ninth or tenth part of the whole height of the wall. This explanation, however, although perhaps it may accord with what Herodotus was told, does not seem to accord with the impression he received.

⁴⁷⁸ Ἀρτεμις δὲ Βούβαστις. The Artemis with which the Egyptian deity was identical was not the huntress-goddess; so that JUVENAL could in strict truth make the point he does with reference to the religions of Egypt: "Oppida tota CANEM venerantur, nemo DIANAM." The Artemis-Bubastis was more analogous to the Ephesian Artemis, a deity nearly connected with Aphrodite Urania. See notes 567 and 568 on i. 174, and § 60, above.

⁴⁷⁹ Ἀζωτον. This city (Ashdod) was a member of the Philistine Pentapolis; and it is observable, that the only other incident recorded of Psammitichus's long reign, of which the source is not obviously the Hephæsteum at Memphis, is one apparently derived from the Aphrodite temple at Ascalon, another member of the same confederacy. See note 366 on i. 105. The expression of JΕΡΕΜΙΑΗ (xxv. 20 = xxxii. 6, LXX), where "the remnant of Ashdod" is coupled with Ascalon, Gaza, and Ekron, probably has reference to the diminution of population resulting from this siege and capture. The numbers would perhaps be replenished from Egypt, and possibly the practice of circumcision (which certainly existed in later times) then introduced. See note 294 on § 104, above.

He is succeeded by his son Neco, who begins the canal to join the Nile and the Arabian gulf, ⁴³⁰ τριήρεας. It is not to be supposed that Psammitichus made the canal for triremes, but that the informant of Herodotus adopted this mode of giving him a notion of its breadth. Compare i. 179: τεθρίππων περιέλασιν.

⁴³¹ κατύπερθε ὀλίγον Βουβάστιος πόλιος. The site of the city Bubastis is the modern Tel Basta (lat. 30° 36' according to WILKINSON), which stands, as in the days of Herodotus, on the side of a lake. The Pelusiac branch of the river, however, which then ran into this, is now filled up. Basta is, according to RENNELL, about 48 geographical miles to the N.W. of Suez, which again is in the same parallel of latitude as Cairo. The hill which closes in the valley of the Nile at Memphis, forms a kind of arc, of which the two extremities are in the vicinity of Cairo and of Suez, while the vertex runs as far north as Bilbeys, which is about 17 miles S.W. of Basta. Rennell conceives that the canal of Neco passed through this place, and was then carried along the edge of the brow, in an easterly direction, for some time, until the line of the hill turns rapidly southwards and approaches the gorge of which Herodotus presently speaks. From Bilbeys to Suez would be about 30 miles; so that the length of the canal would be about 47 geographical miles. Supposing the barges upon it propelled by men towing, the distance given by Herodotus would not be unreasonable, especially if we suppose him to mean that vessels clearing out from Bubastis on one day got into the port at Suez on the fourth. PLINY makes the distance 62 Roman miles, which is even less.

⁴³² παρὰ Πάτουμον. This city is the Pithom of Exodus i. 11, where the first syllable is considered to be the Coptic article, as in piromis.

⁴³³ ἐσέχει δὲ ἐς τὴν Ἐρυθρὴν θάλασσαν. Herodotus repeats this assertion in iv. 39 incidentally; but, from the way in which he speaks of the geography of the region elsewhere (see note 28 on ii. 8), it is scarcely possible to conceive that he ever saw the entrance. He perhaps is following the account of a Bubastian cicerone, and possibly mistaking his phraseology. See note 409 on ii. 138.

⁴³⁴ ἐν τῷ αἰ λιοτομῖαι ἐνεῖσι. The quarries from whence the stone for the Gizeh pyramids was brought. See ii. 8.

⁴³⁵ φερούσας. This is the reading of the majority of the MSS. Gaisford (with some) has φέρονσα, which makes the statement of the entrance of the canal into the head of the Arabian gulf more positive than it otherwise would be in the text. The gorge (διασφάγες) is probably what Pococke describes as "a sort of fosse that is thought to be the canal of Trajan," through which part of the road from Ajeroud to Suez runs. Niebuhr remarked the same appearance, but doubted whether it was a part of a canal or the bed of a torrent. Pococke also, together with Niebuhr and Volney, describe the ground for some five miles to the N. of Suez as appearing to be the deserted bed of the sea, or rather that bed filled up with sand to a height above the ordinary level of the sea; and the first speaks of "the high ground with broken cliffs looking very much like such an alteration" (ap. RENNELL, Geogr. of Herod. p. 474). From this description of the site it seems very unlikely that, if the canal were completed into the Arabian gulf, it remained many years without being choked up.

And it is remarkable that while Herodotus represents Darius as cutting through the whole (iv. 39), Diodorus and Strabo (or their common authority, who was perhaps Aristotle) relate him to have been deterred by the notion that the level of the Red Sea was higher than that of the Nile, and the feat to have been performed by Ptolemy Philadelphus; whereas PLINY (vi. 29. inf.) asserts that the work was not carried out even by Ptolemy. Some authorities, among which is the Aristotelian Meteteorologica, attributed the beginning of the canal to Sesostris. See note 285 on § 102.

⁴⁸⁶ τὴν αὐτὴν ταύτην. See note on § 56, above.

⁴⁸⁷ ἀπαρτί. This word, which exists in none of the MSS, is recovered from a quotation by the SCHOLIAST ON ARISTOPHANES, Plut. 388.

⁴⁸⁸ πολλῶ μακροτέρη. The canal itself can never have been so long as 1000 stades; but the whole course of the navigation by the canal from sea to sea would have been; and this is perhaps the foundation of the statement of Herodotus.

⁴⁸⁹ ἀπώλονται δυνάδεκα μυριάδες. VOLTAIRE states that the building of Petersburg by the Czar in 1714 cost the lives of more than a hundred thousand men. The foundations of the city were laid in a marsh, and labourers were pressed from every portion of his dominions (ap. Grote, History of Greece, iii. p. 423).

⁴⁹⁰ βαρβάρους . . . ὁμογλώσσους. This must either be an instance of adaptation, meaning that the Egyptians had a word co-extensive in application to the Hellenic βάρβαρος (see note 523 on § 171, below, and note 471 on i. 139), or else “the Egyptians” are the naturalized foreigners resident in that country.

⁴⁹¹ τῶν ἔτι οἱ ὅλκοι ἐπίδηλοι. See note 285 on § 102, above.

⁴⁹² Μαγδόλῳ. This town stood very near Pelusium on the coast-road which led into Egypt from Syro-Phoenicia. From the disposition to identify the battle here mentioned with that related in 2 Kings xxiii. 29, it has been supposed that Magdolos is the Megiddo of that passage, and that Kadytis is Jerusalem. But see note 13 on iii. 5. No doubt there is some difficulty in understanding how the Syrians should penetrate so far as the Pelusiatic Magdolos, and their defeat there entail as an immediate consequence the capture of Kadytis. But it is possible that the war commenced by an invasion of Egypt in great force, when, if the intruders were defeated, they would probably be annihilated from the want of water in their retreat (see iii. 5). In this case the conqueror, especially if he still ⁴⁹³ ἐς Βραγχίδας τὰς Μιλησίων. See note 528 on i. 157.

⁴⁹⁴ ἐπὶ τούτῳ δὴ τὸν Ψάμμῳ. The anecdote which follows is referred by DIODORUS (i. 95) to the time of Amasis. PLUTARCH (Quæst. Platon. § 2, p. 1000) gives the Egyptian remark as a saying of σοφῶν τις. The substantial part of the story is the principle contained in the saying, and it is not strange that there should be a variation in the dramatis personæ. See note 116 on i. 32, and note 519 on i. 155. The reputation of the Eleans for impartiality gave occasion to one of the sayings of Agis, reported by PLUTARCH (Apophthegm. Reg. p. 190). See note 477 on i. 141. That Eleans should come to Egypt is in itself by no means an improbability; but not specially for the purpose of comparing their σοφία with that of the Egyptians. The yellow flax which they grew (dyssus), and which was consumed largely in Egypt, especially when circumstances, such as a war with Tyre, checked the importation of that from Palestine, would give rise to commercial intercourse between the two countries. See note 219, δ, on § 86, above, and note 554 on § 182, below.

Apries, son of Psammis, makes war on Sidon, Tyre, and Cyrene, in the course of a twenty years' reign.

The Egyptians revolt from him after the last-named expedition.

Amasis, whom he sends to quell the revolt, becomes leader of the rebels.

⁴⁰⁵ Ἀπρίης. This is the Horära of JEREMIAH XXXVII. 8 and 11. ΜΑΝΕΤΗΟ calls him Uparis, where the letter U is the equivalent of the aspirate.

⁴⁰⁶ εὐδαιμονέστατος τῶν πρότερον βασι- λέων. This well-known Greek idiom, in which the subject of the adjective is not regarded as one of the class of instances with which it is compared, is imitated by MILTON (Par. Lost, iv. 323):

“Adam, the goodliest man of men since born

His sons,—the fairest of her daughters Eve.”

An analogous idiom caused the expression in Luc. Ezech. xlii. 32: ἤγοντο δὲ καὶ ἄλλοι δύο κακὸν γοῖν ἐν αὐτῷ ἀναιρε- θῆναι.

⁴⁰⁷ μεζόνως μὲν ἐν τοῖσι Λιβυκοῖσι λό- γοισι. See note on iv. 159.

⁴⁰⁸ αὐτοί. Gaisford with the MSS has οἱ. But the revolt seems to have arisen out of the dissatisfaction among the friends of those who perished, caused by the reports of those who came back (of ἀπο- νοστήσαντες). These friends would be the remainder of the corps which occupied Mareia; for it would doubtless be from this division that an army sent against Cyrene would be drawn. See § 36, and note #4, above.

Apries falls back upon his Ionian and Carian auxiliaries.

⁴⁹⁹ μέμψεσθαι. Gaisford with the MSS has μέμψασθαι.

⁵⁰⁰ αὐτῷ. The conjectural emendation ἐαυτῷ has been proposed, but without necessity.

⁵⁰¹ τρισμυρίους. The manuscript M omits this word, but it exists in all the rest. In the parallel narrative of DIONYSIUS (i. 68) the auxiliaries are said to be ὡς τρισμυρίους, and it is not impossible that the number may have been introduced into the MSS of Herodotus from thence.

⁵⁰² ἐν Σαί πόλει. The city Sais was situated inland, two schœni removed from Naucratis, which was on the eastern bank of the Bolbitine branch of the Nile. (STRABO, xvii. p. 442.) Herodotus was at Sais (see ii. 28. 170), and doubtless derived his account of the fate of Apries from the γραμματεῖστίς there. The proximity of Naucratis to Sais would account for the ready availability of the Carian and Ionian force. Indeed, by the phrase ὥπλιζε τοὺς ἐπικούρους, one might be led to suspect that Apries in his distress resorted to the expedient of throwing himself upon the commercial population resident in Naucratis, just as an Oriental prince might take refuge in a British factory. Of course the native traditions would give a very different colour to such a proceeding. By the way in which these Ionians and Carians are mentioned one can hardly believe that the narrator intended to represent them as the same he had spoken of before (§ 164). It is more reasonable to suppose that he is here following a Saitan than a Memphitic authority.

⁵⁰³ Μωμέμφι. STRABO describes the city Memphis as being on the right bank to a person sailing up the Bolbitine branch of the Nile towards the head of the Delta. He places it above the canals which connected the river with the lake Marœotis and below the salt lakes. Aphrodite was the tutelary deity of the city, and a sacred cow was preserved there, like the sacred bull Apis in Memphis, or Mævis

⁵⁰⁴ ἐγένοντο ἀμφοτέρω. It was very natural that the remnant of the army which returned from Cyrene should be on the western bank of the river. The track along the coast would take them to the shore of the Mareotic lake, the s. w. bank of which they would traverse on their way towards Saïs, care being no doubt taken, when the report of their mutiny arrived, to deprive them of the means of passing by water. Apries on the other hand, by holding Naucratis, would have a large command of vessels, and thus might cross the river (as he did) when he felt himself sufficiently strong.

⁵⁰⁵ κυβερνήται. By these we must understand not the pilots of sea-going vessels, but the navigators of such craft as those described above, § 96, by whom probably the whole internal traffic of Egypt was conducted, foreign bottoms discharging their cargoes at Naucratis. See § 179. It is remarkable that in the enumeration of castes artificers are not named,—certainly an important class, as they manufactured the papyrus-stem into sail-cloth (ii. 96), and the flax into fine linen (iii. 47). (See ISAIAH xix. 7. 9; EZEKIEL xxxvii. 7; 2 Chron. i. 16.) Possibly they are not named because the Hellenic traders may have had only to do with the middle-men (κάπηλοι).

⁵⁰⁶ Καλασιρίες τε καὶ Ἑρμοτύβιες. These words are interpreted by JABLONSKY as being equivalent to "youths" and "warriors." If so, we should perhaps be near the truth in regarding the division as one involving liability to, or exemption from, foreign service and having reference to the age of the soldiers. The name of "warrior" may have been confined to the veteran campaigners.

⁵⁰⁷ ἀνέονται. This anomalous form is the reading of the MSS. Bekker has adopted the conjecture ἀνέονται.

⁵⁰⁸ Ἀθριβίτης. See note 121 on § 41, above.

⁵⁰⁹ οὗτος ὁ νομὸς ἐν νήσῳ οἰκεῖ. The use of the phrase νομὸς οἰκεῖ is paralleled by νήσων, αἱ ναλοῦσι πέραν ἁλὸς Ἠλίδος ἄντα (Iliad ii. 626), and to a certain extent by the address to Salamis in SOPHOCLES:

ὃ κλεινὰ Σαλαμῖς, σὸ μὲν πού ναλεῖς ἀλίπλαγτος, εὐδαίμων, πᾶσιν περίφαντος ἔελ. (Aj. 596.)

Zenodotus, however, altered the Homeric verse to Νήσων, οἱ ναλοῦσι. The expressions πόλεις εὐ ναιετάσας (Iliad ii. 648) and ναιετάουσι πόλεις ἐπιχθονίαν ἀνθρώπων (Iliad iv. 45) serve to show the train of thought which led to the phrase in the text.

¹¹⁰ ἐς τὸν πόλεμον ἀνειμένους, "deμένους (let go) see note 174 on § 65, above. But, as those who were set free from secular pursuits were enabled to perform others the better, the word acquired the meaning in the text. The Latin 'vacare' experienced a similar change of sense.

¹¹¹ ὁ Αἰγύπτιος πῆχυς. BOECKH has made out from a mean measure of seven Egyptian cubits, all of which come from Memphis, that the length was 525.587 millimeters, or about 232.55 lines. (Me-tetrologische Untersuchungen, p. 227.) The Babylonian cubit (calculated) he makes to be 234.655 lines (see note 597 on i.
178), and from the small difference (amounting only to about one-fifth of an inch in a measure of nearly 21 inches) he infers that the two cubits are identical, whether the Egyptian measure was at an early period introduced at Babylon, or the Babylonian imposed upon Egypt at the time of its conquest. The former theory seems favoured by the circumstance that one of the Egyptian measures was (if Champollion's interpretation of the hieroglyphics upon it be correct) buried in the grave of an individual the contemporary of Horus son of Ameno-phis. But it is singular that all the Egyptian measures seem to have been divided into seven παλαιστα each of four δακτυ-λοι, whereas the Greek πῆχυς (and in Boeckh's opinion the Babylonian also) consisted of six of the former divided into twenty-four of the latter; so that the septenary division appears to be the regulating principle in the one case and the duodenary in the other. In commercial intercourse, however, the subdivision of the πῆχυς was an unimportant matter, and it does not seem to follow from the text that the Samian division of the measure was septenary. (See note on vi. 42.) The coincidence of the Babylonian with the commercial cubit of Samos explains the difficulty in i. 178. See note 597 on that passage.

¹¹² ἐν περιτροπῇ ἐκαρποῦντο, καὶ οὐδαμὰ όντοί. Perhaps this assertion is to be interpreted by supposing a given area of soil appropriated to the maintenance of a given garrison, and these latter shifted from one station to another. The custom is a totally different one from that ascribed to the Germans by TACITUS (Germani § 26).

⁵¹⁵ οἰκία. One MS has οἰκία. Possibly the original form of the text was ἐς τὰ οἰκία πρότερον ὄντα τότε δ' Ἀμάσιος ἥδη βασιλήϊα, and ἐκωτοῦ was written in the margin as a gloss of οἰκία. If afterwards the pronoun was taken into the text, the change from οἰκία into οἰκία would readily suggest itself. But there seems no place for any distinction between οἰκία and βασιλήϊα. For the expression βασιλήϊα see § 130.

⁵¹⁶ εἰσιόντι ἀριστερῆς χειρός. The proximity of Naucratis to Sais (see note 502, above) accounts for the familiarity with this locality here apparent.

⁵¹⁷ ἐν τῇ αὐλῇ τοῦ ἱοῦ. WILKINSON (Modern Egyptians, i. p. 183) describes the principal part of the remains to consist of "a large enclosure surrounded by massive crude brick walls. These last are about 70 feet thick and of very solid construction. Between the courses of bricks are layers of reed intended to serve as binders." (Compare the account of the walls of Babylon, i. 170.) This enclosure measures 2825 feet by 1960, of which the north side is occupied by the pool mentioned by Herodotus. This is, however, now long and irregular.

scribed in the text seems to be something like the so-called "arch of Janus" at Rome, only with two instead of four doors. These may be conceived as opposite to each other, and forming respectively the termination of two limbs of a colonnade. If the size of the building was very small as compared with these apertures, the tomb which it contained might be termed "within the doors."

⁵¹⁹ ἐπὶ τοιούτῃ πρὶν ἡμέρᾳ. See note 583 on § 152.

⁵²⁰ πάντος τοῦ τῆς Ἰσθμιαίας ἐχομένου τοῖχου, "joining on with the whole extent of the wall of Athens." There was a similar association of the fane of Pandrosus with the temple of Athens Polias at Athens. See the note on v. 77: ἀντίον θὲ τοῦ μεγάρου τοῦ πρὸς ἐντέραν τετραμῆνον.

⁵²¹ ἢ τροχοειδὴς καλεομένη. CALLIMACHUS (Del. 261) calls this τροχόεσσα.

⁵²² τὰ δεικῆλα τῶν παθόντων αὐτοῦ, "the exhibition of his woes,"—a ritual of a scenic description, like that of Dionysus and the Cretan Zeus. See note 76 on

i. 23. The expression δεικῆλα is perhaps Lacedæmonian. They gave the name δεικῆλα to certain pantomimic performers. (ATHENÆUS, xiv. p. 621.)

⁵²³ τὰ καλέουσι μυστήρια. Here appears to be another instance of adaptation. See note 490, above.

⁵²⁴ πλὴν ὅσον αὐτῆς ὅση ἐστὶ λέγειν. In the place of these words S has only λέγειν ὥς,—a reading which gives what follows the air of a note. The ceremonies to which Herodotus here alludes are those in honour of Dionysus and Demetris Prosymna, which were celebrated at Lerna near a pool in the midst of a grove. They belonged to a time antecedent to the Heracleid invasion. (PAUSANIAS, ii. 37. 1—3.)

⁵²⁵ ἐξαπώλετο ἡ τελετὴ, "the ritual died out." See notes 164 and 179 on Book I.

⁵²⁶ Σιούφ. The modern Sufi, situated about three leagues to the N.W. of Saï, on the Eastern bank of the Nile. (CHAMPOLLION quoted by Kenrick.)

176 Among other places, Memphis is adorned by him with a supine colossal figure similar to one at Sais, and with a temple of Isis.

³³⁸ καὶ πυγόνος. The πυγὸν is to be taken as five-sixths of the πῆχυς.

³³⁹ ἐνθυμιστὸν ποιησάμενον. It was the ill-omen, arising from the groan to which the architect gave vent, which made Amasis pause, not the magnitude of the task which had been performed.

³⁴⁰ ἑόντες. All the MSS have ἑόντος, but vary between Αἰθιοπικοῦ and τοῦ αὐτοῦ. Schweighäuser conjectures ἑόντες, which I have adopted as a slight change. But it seems not impossible that Herodotus wrote τοῦ αὐτοῦ λίθου, Αἰθιοπικοῦ ἑόντος, δύο κ. The reading of Gaisford is Αἰθιοπικοῦ ἑόντος λίθου.

³⁴¹ τοῦ μεγάλου. Gaisford and the MSS have τοῦ μεγάλου.

³⁴² ἔστι δὲ λίθινος ἕτερος τοσοῦτος καὶ ἐν Σαί. It seems strange that Herodotus should not have mentioned this most remarkable colossus before he quitted the subject of the sculpture at Sais. Possibly, although he certainly was at Sais, this statue was not seen by him, but when he arrived at Memphis he was told of its existence. Or perhaps it was not wrought by Amasis, but by some former king. It is quite clear that the image at Memphis was the more celebrated one, from the use of the article: τὸν ὕπ. κ. κ., "the colossus on its back (which all know)."

³⁴³ πόλιν ἐν αὐτῇ γενέσθαι . . δισφυρίας. These must be regarded as merely townships, such as those under the jurisdiction of an Aga at present. The proceeding of Amasis probably was of the nature of a census, to serve as the basis of a regular land-tax. The organisation would be similar to that which prevails generally in the East at the present day. See note 304 on § 109, above. The aga, or farmer of the revenue of a township, would be the party in direct communication with the tax-payer; but there would be a check upon him by the returns made to the nomarch (or pasha). The indirect effect of any system of this kind would doubtless be to discourage vagrancy or idleness; but it is a mere misapprehension on the part of later writers, such as Ælian, to represent it as instituted with this special object. That the principle of an assessment was the essential part of the regulation is evident from the assertion (whether true or not), 'that Solon adopted the system and that the Athenians continued to act upon it.' This could be said of nothing else. The superior productiveness of a regular tax to arbitrary imposts would readily lead to the current belief in the bad times which followed, that the country had been unusually fertile during the reign of the king who adopted such a policy.

⁵⁴⁴ ἔδωκε Ναυκρατίην πόλιν ἐνοικήσαι. In the time of STRABO the prevalent local account was that Naucratis was built by the descendants of some Milesians. They were said to have come in the time of Cyaxares against Psammitichus in thirty vessels, to have entered the Bolbitine mouth of the Nile, and there fortified a place called τὸ Μιλησίων τεῖχος. Afterwards they sailed up the river, defeated Inarus, and built Naucratis (xvii. p. 439). In the latter part of this story one can hardly doubt there is a confusion with the Athenian expedition of which THUCYDIDES speaks (i. 103), somewhat facilitated, perhaps, by the circumstance that the father of Inarus bore the name of Psammitichus. (HEROD. vii. 7.) SCALIGER (Animadversiones ad Eusebii Chronica, p. 74) observes on the enormous anachronism contained in Strabo's notice, but does not attempt to explain it. See an instance of similar confusion in note 213 on i. 63. For the site of Naucratis see notes 263 and 502, above.

⁵⁴⁵ Ῥόδος. If this section is the genuine production of Herodotus, it is strange that this phrase should be used. Rhodes (the city) was a συνοικία from the smaller towns, first built in the time of the Peloponnesian war by Hippodamus of Miletus, the architect of the Piræus. If it be said that the author means Rhodes (the island), it is strange that he should adopt such a mode of speech instead of enumerating the towns (as he does in i. 144, where speaking of the participants in the Triopian temple). It is also observable in the last section, that the chronological order of Solon's legislation and his travels is reversed, as compared with i. 29, 30.

The manuscripts S and V have in place of these words αἱ δὲ ἄλλαι πόλεις.

¹⁷⁹ ἦν δὲ τὸ παλαιὸν κ.τ.λ. This section must be regarded rather in the light of a note than as a continuation of what precedes it. The 'ancient time' of which the writer speaks must be taken as ancient with reference to himself,—not with reference to Amasis,—for the practice which he describes is cited to show the honour in which Naukratis was held after it became the commercial emporium. This, in Herodotus's notion, was in the days of Amasis; but there can be little doubt that Naukratis was an emporium in very early times,—perhaps so early as to produce the different accounts of the time and particulars of its foundation, a subject of one of the lost works of APOLLONIUS RHODIUS.

¹⁸⁰ μισθωσάντων τὸν ἐν Δελφοῖσι νῦν ἔοντα νηὸν. The contract to rebuild the temple was taken by the Alcmaeonids. See v. 62.

¹⁸¹ Ἀμφικτυόνων . . . ἐξ Αἰγύπτου ἐνέικαντο. The construction of this sentence is somewhat irregular; but the irregularity arises from the introduction of fresh matter into a statement originally of a general character. The liberality of Amasis towards the Greeks is the point especially in hand at the beginning of § 178, and this object is reverted to after the paragraph τὸ μὲν νῦν μέγιστον . . . ἐτετίμητο, which is rather of the nature of a note. But as the writer bethought him of mentioning the circumstances which led the Delphians to resort to a collection, the issue of the sentence is retarded, and the final clause goes on, coupled with what immediately precedes it by the particle δὲ, quite irrespective of the beginning of the sentence.

^a στυπητήρης. BECKMANN (History of Inventions, i. p. 288) says that this substance, which the ancients would use in dyeing wool and perhaps also in dressing leather, is not alum, but vitriol; the former substance being very rarely found in a native state, while the native crystals of vitriol abound in the Lipari islands and Melos, which PLINY (xxxv. 10) notes as the place from which it was chiefly procured.

⁵⁵⁰ ἀνδρὸς τῶν ἀστῶν δοκίμου. Both this expression and the name of the female decisively show that it was the daughter of one of the Hellenic families, and not of an aboriginal one, that Amasis married. See the note on iv. 165.

⁵⁵¹ Λαδίκη. The manuscript S always calls this female Λαδίκη.

⁵⁵² τὸ ἔτι καὶ ἐς ἐμὲ ἦν σόον. It is only reasonable to suppose that the traditions of the Aphrodisium at Cyrene were the source of this narrative; and there is a strong presumption that the writer was there himself. In § 96, he speaks of the Cyrenian lotus as if he had seen it growing. With regard to Ladice, the traditional character of the story is clearly shown by the circumstance that the authorities neither knew why Amasis had married her, nor who her relations were,—the statue in the temple, and the tradition attaching to it, being all the data they had to go upon. See notes 52, 88, 224, and 329 on Book I.

⁵⁵³ θώρηκα λίνεον ἀξιοθέητον. See a description of this article, or rather of a similar one at Samos, below, iii. 47. It is rather singular that Herodotus should not here allude to the circumstance of Amasis having sent this latter present to the Lacedæmonians, and to its having been intercepted by the Samians (which was the Lacedæmonian account of the matter). Is it conceivable that he is here following the account of a Samian merchant, who omitted noticing an offering to which a story discreditable to his countrymen attached?

³³⁴ εἶλε δὲ Κύπρον. It was impossible that Cyprus could have been reduced without a fleet, and Egypt did not possess one of her own. The conquest, therefore, must have been made with an auxiliary force. From whence was this procured? There is no positive statement, and therefore we are left to conjecture. It seems to me scarcely doubtful that it was Hellenic, perhaps Samian, under the influence of Polycrates during the time of the alliance between Amasis and that dynast (see iii. 39). The power of Samos is evinced by the fact of the Samians possessing a Heræum at Naucratis (§ 178, above). The close connexion of Samos with Cyrene (from whence Amasis married a wife) is also noticed by Herodotus (iv. 152). Afterwards, Amasis may have thought the Ionians and Dorians of the Hellenium offered equal or greater advantages to him, and this may have led to a jealousy on the part of Polycrates issuing in a determination to ally himself with the Persian invader (see iii. 44). The bucaniering character of Polycrates would have made him useful to Amasis in extending his conquests, but when Cyprus was reduced, a league with the Dorian towns on the Asiatic main would become even more important. Hence, perhaps, the propitiation of the Lindian Athene, and the real cause of the renunciation of the alliance with Polycrates. If it be true, as Herodotus relates (§ 161, above), that even Apries was able to engage the Tyrians at sea, it must be concluded that some Hellenic auxiliary naval force was at the command of the Egyptian king even at that time. Possibly this too may have been Samian, but before the revolution which terminated in the tyranny of Polycrates. See the note on iii. 19.

EXCURSUS ON II. 149.

THE researches of modern travellers in the neighbourhood of the Lake Moëris, prove beyond all doubt that the lake itself is the work of nature, although advantage was taken of its situation to construct works of a gigantic size for the purpose of artificial irrigation. Strabo appears never for a moment to have supposed it an excavation. He rather inclines to the belief that it, as well as the neighbourhood of the temple of Ammon, at one time was reached by the sea, and he points attention particularly to the beaches existing by the side of it, resembling those on the shore of the latter¹.

In his time there was an entrance from the Nile just above Memphis into a canal which ran parallel to the river on its western bank. This channel—which, at least in a portion of its extent, exists at the present day under the name of the Bahr el Youssouf (Joseph's River)—skirted the brow upon which the pyramids are placed, and constituted the western boundary of an island formed by the Nile and two branches of the canal. This island was either the whole or a large portion of the *Heracleotic nome*². From the main channel of the Bahr el Youssouf, in about latitude $29^{\circ} 13'$, another branch turns off to the north-west through a break in the Libyan hills, near a place called Awarat el Macta, and enters, after a course of about eight geographical miles, a mountain basin with an area of something like 400 square miles, of which about 150 towards the north-west extremity is occupied by a lake, called from its shape Birket el Keroun (Horned Sea), thirty-five or thirty-six miles long, and in the average four broad. This piece of water is the natural lake Moëris; its water is slightly brackish from the rains which wash the saline particles of the neighbouring soil into it, but not salt, for it contains fish of fresh-water species. The mountain basin is the Faioum, the Arsinoïtan nome of which Strabo speaks as the most wonderful portion of Egypt, both as a sight, and for its fertility and its artificial arrangements¹. He remarks (a point which is especially to be observed) that with the exception of some gardens in the neighbourhood of Alexandria, it was the only site in Egypt where the olive flourished. This circumstance alone is a sufficient evidence that the irrigation must have been conducted on a different principle from that of merely allowing the waters of the river to overflow and cover the whole soil for a considerable period, after the ordinary practice of Egypt; for such a course would undoubtedly have prevented the growth of any thing but seed crops. And the existing state of the country seems to show that the arrangements which were made rested upon the principle of storing the water of the Nile at the time of the inundation in large canals at different levels within the mountain basin, the Birket el Keroun serving as a receptacle for the surplus of the whole.

In the portion of the basin which is not occupied by the Birket el Keroun two distinct levels are traceable at the present day. The upper of these, comprising a space of 140 square miles, is only six feet higher than the bottom of the Bahr el Youssouf, and about twenty-four feet lower than its surface when full (taking the level at the point where the canal enters the Faioum, which is not perceptibly different from its level at Medineh, a place six miles further in the direction of the lake), and it is covered with a sedimentary deposit of Nile mud from 18 to 22 feet thick. But at some short distance from Medineh the ground slopes gently to north and south, and more rapidly to the west, the surface of the lake itself being about sixty feet below the bottom of the canal, and from 130 to 170 feet below the surface of the Nile. Very near Medineh is supposed to have been the site of Arsinoë or Crocodilopolis.

If these levels are correctly given, it is quite clear, that in the system of irrigation pursued, the prime feeder must have been the diverging branch of the Bahr el Youssouf above described, reckoned from the point where it turns to the north-west to Medineh, a distance in the whole of about fourteen miles, six of which lie within the expanse of the mountain basin. This branch is at present estimated to convey one twenty-eighth portion of the water which passes in the bed of the Nile. Its mean depth is 30 feet and its breadth 160. Just as it enters the basin, it probably discharged a portion of its water into another canal on a lower level, also still traceable. This second canal, which goes by the name of Bahr bela ma (Waterless River), it being now mainly dry, starts in a northerly direction, and conducts, by a circuitous route of several miles, to the north-east extremity of the Birket el Keroun. Throughout its course there are said still to exist traces of ancient dams and sluices; and as its breadth is nearly 300 feet, and its depth 21, it must have been capable of holding a very large quantity of water.

Another nullah, similar to the Bahr bela ma, and varying from 600 to 1200 feet in breadth, is traceable in a north-westerly direction from a point ten miles to the south-west of Awarat el Macta, and joining the Birket el Keroun by a small channel, at a point where the sides are rocky, after a course of fourteen or fifteen miles. It goes by the name of Bahr el Wadi (the River of the Plain). Unfortunately, its precise level is not given; but it is obvious from the description, that it is lower than the Bahr el Youssouf, and higher than the Birket el Keroun. That it belonged to the arrangements for irrigation appears from the fact, that WILKINSON discovered its bottom to be cut in the limestone rock at a place where the breadth was 673 feet⁴.

⁴ This is given on the authority of the Chevalier BUNSEN. The levels and positions

Various other traces of channels are described as existing in this singular region; but the above-mentioned are sufficient to explain the principle which prevailed in the irrigation.

It being perfectly clear that the water could never have been returned from the Birket el Keroun, or indeed from any portion of the works back into the Nile, the real problem is to explain how what really took place can have been so regarded as to give rise to the descriptions of Herodotus and Strabo.

Now Strabo appears to have regarded the Bahr bela ma and Bahr el Wadi as two branches of one and the same canal, by the former of which the water was conveyed to the Birket el Keroun at the time of the inundation, while to the other it was supplied from that lake while the waters were falling (ἐν τῇ ἀποβάσει). In this definition of the time his main error lies. The Bahr el Wadi, if originally a reservoir for irrigating the lowest portion of the plain (as its name seems to suggest), would not improbably be filled from the lake when this had risen beyond a few feet. As soon as the rising of the waters had ceased the sluices would be shut, and the water remain stored in a broad but not deep canal, having no doubt many small branches, —as was the case also with the Bahr bela ma, and the main stem of the διώρυξ running up to Medineh. The only remaining difficulty in Strabo's description is the connexion which he implies between the Bahr el Wadi and the διώρυξ⁵. But this is a very slight one. We must conceive him standing at Arsinoë (Medineh), by the side of the pool, where he gives the graphic description of his seeing the sacred crocodile fed⁶, which was probably the head of the διώρυξ. His host would point out to him the Bahr bela ma stretching away to the N.E. and tell him that it entered the lake some fifteen or sixteen miles off by a sluice. Similarly towards the n.w. he would see the Bahr el Wadi (which he would be told was supplied from the lake by similar sluices) apparently running towards the δῶρυξ on which he had himself been towed to Arsinoë, and from which he might have seen the Bahr bela ma diverge as he came. The distance from which he would have a view of the object would be not less than eight or nine miles, and the difference of level not more than ninety feet at the very utmost. This of course would be entirely imperceptible by the eye at such a distance.

The account given by Herodotus is much more strikingly at variance with the natural phenomena; but much of the difficulty here will disappear if we suppose him to have visited the district very soon after the inundation was at its height, and while the waters were let out over a large portion of the basin; Strabo, on the other hand, having certainly been at Arsinoë at the season when these were confined to the canals. The fluid was retained on the different levels by dams, the existence of some of which is even now traceable. Seen from any point between Arsinoë and the Labyrinth, the whole would appear like one enormous expanse of water, the difference of the levels not showing itself. And if we suppose Herodotus to have had the view of the district thus covered from the top of the Labyrinth, his description is intelligible enough. The indisputable evidence of its natural origin which the outline of the lake presented to Strabo would be entirely masked; its enormous seeming magnitude, apparently coextensive with the basin of the Faioum, would render the dimensions assigned to it not primâ facie absurd; and, 100 stadia off, the colossi at Crocodilopolis would appear to stand out from the middle of the water. To these circumstances must be added the impression that the Faioum irrigation was the same simple process with which he was familiar in the neighbourhood of the Nile, and the fact that at the point where he was no part of the works was visible, but the main δῶρυξ with the Nile water flowing through it. And, finally, we may reasonably conceive that the dragoman, accustomed to the spectacle before the eyes of his companion, would not even think of the necessity of explaining to him the peculiar circumstances which gave rise to the ocular deception. In his mind the whole system of water-meadows would be connected together, and described as the work of Mœris, even supposing him undesirous of producing an exaggerated impression on the traveller ;—a supposition, however, which is at variance with the ordinary practice of ciceroni either in ancient or modern times.

If the above considerations have any truth in them, both Herodotus and Strabo must in this matter be entirely acquitted of the charge of inaccuracy in those points which came under their personal knowledge. Both the one and the other give a true account of the phenomena presented to them ; and both give a false explanation (philosophically speaking) of those phenomena. In the case of Herodotus the ocular deception was much the greater, and probably the informant whose explanation was adopted the more ignorant ; for the rank of Strabo's companions procured them the attentions of the chief authorities of Arsinoë, whereas the other would probably have no guide but a common laquais de place. If indeed we are determined to look upon him as some of the moderns insist on doing ; to regard him not as a simple traveller with the clear Hellenic eye for sensuous impressions, and the fresh Hellenic imagination for embodying them, but as a physical philosopher and historical critic of the nineteenth century, testing all that he heard and saw by independent observations and reference to known laws of nature, we must undoubtedly be content to regard his description of the lake Mœris as one of the most gigantic exaggerations to be found in the whole compass of literature.

⁶ φάμενοι μιν . . . γενέσθαι, “asserting that it was of this daughter of Apries after all that he was the son.” The claim of the conquered race to have some connexion with the conqueror is a trait of human nature which shows itself every where. MALCOLM (quoted by Kenrick) says that in the Persian traditions Alexander the Great is represented as the son of a Persian princess by Philip.

not however all the Persian accounts which made Cambyses son of Cassandane. CTESIAS makes him son of Amytis,—and that this is not another name of Cassandane appears from the circumstance that he makes Amytis survive Cyrus, and only die shortly before the death of Cambyses. See note on § 61.

⁹ τὸν δὲ διαμνημονεύοντα. It is curious, and illustrative of the way in which the ethical features of tradition remain constant, while the historic details shift and vary, that in all these accounts the revengeful and violent character of Cambyses is preserved. So it seems to have been in every other version of the story. CTESIAS's account agreed with Herodotus's. DINON (in his Persica) and LYNCEAS of Naucratis (in his Aegyptiaca) agreed with the Egyptian account in making Cambyses son of Nitetis by Cyrus, but still they represent his expedition to Egypt as undertaken in a spirit of revenge: ἐκδικούντα τῇ μητρὶ (Athenaeus xiii. p. 24). Similarly, Ctesias related that Cambyses succeeded in conquering Egypt through treachery; but it is that of Combaphes, an eunuch who was in high office with the Egyptian sovereign, and who, on condition of being made by Cambyses satrap of the province, betrayed to him τὰς τε γεφύρας καὶ τᾶλλα τῶν Αἰγυπτίων πρήγματα (cp. Photium, p. 37). The very nature of the difficulties varies with the country of the narratives. At the Persian court (where Ctesias picked up his story) the most familiar obstacle that could be presented to the course of an invader would be such as occurred often in the great road between Susa and Sardis,—streams crossed by bridges defended by strong fortifications,—and the form taken by treachery would be the unnecessary abandonment of these. See note on ii. 30.

¹⁰ ὥρμημένφ. According to ΣΤΡΑΒΩ (xvi. c. 2, p. 368) the base of the operations of the Persian army in this invasion was Ἀκε (Acre) which under the name Ptolemais was in his time “a great city.”

¹² ἡ ἐστὶ Σύρων. Dobree would omit the word ἡ, Bekker change it into γῆ. But the whole passage is (I conceive) in confusion. See note 16, below.

¹³ Καδύτιος. It seems clear that the city spoken of here is, in Herodotus's view, the same as that mentioned in ii. 159; and it has been concluded that the latter must be Jerusalem. But Jerusalem lies entirely out of the road along the coast, which, or rather the coast itself, appears here to be described; and a more plausible opinion is that by Kadytis Herodotus understands the city Kedesh Naphihali, near which the great commercial and military road from the south turned eastward, through Damascus, to the Euphrates. Against this it may be urged, that undoubtedly Necho did capture Jerusalem, or at least enforced its submission and dethroned the king. (2 Chron. xxxvi. 3.) But on the other hand it must be remembered that the war of Necho was not confined to a single campaign. His defeat on the banks of the Euphrates took place more than three years after the submission of Jerusalem (JEREMIAH xli. 2), and it was seven or eight years after that before the relative power of the Assyrian and Egyptian monarchs had so far changed that the former was enabled to recapture that city and carry off the vassal of the latter. There can be no doubt that in the course of the war many actions were fought and many cities captured,—Damascus probably among the rest, for the great road ran through that city, and from thence to Tadmor (Palmyra), and so to Thapsacus (Heb. Thipsach = trajectus), so called because there was a ferry over the Euphrates there (STRABO, xvi. p. 349; 1 Kings iv. 24; ix. 18; 2 Chron. viii. 4). But it is an error to look either in the Jewish annalist or the Greek historian for a complete account of the proceedings which took place, and no less a one to assume that the parts which they select for mention must be identical. Great stress has been laid upon the fact that Kadytis is the Greek form of Kedutha (the Syrian equivalent of the Hebrew Kedusha, 'the holy'). But this argument leaves out of sight the circumstance that almost every city would have this name given to it by the worshippers of the deity to which it was dedicated, as the multitude of places called Hierapolis sufficiently proves. The same may be said of the numerous Kadesh-es. Compare Josh. xv. 23; 1 Chron. vi. 72 and 76.

Another view is that, although Kadytis may be a Kadesh, the description of its greatness has been transferred from Jerusalem. But if any such confusion has taken place, I should be disposed to conjecture that it is one of Jerusalem with Joppa, its port, from which the city was said to be visible (STRABO xvi. c. 2, p. 370). A very good reason may be given for the ignorance of the Hellenic navigators on this subject. Joppa was a nest of pirates, with which Carmel and the forests which covered the shore in the neighbourhood likewise swarmed. Accordingly the navigator going south would, on coming abreast of that mountain, be careful to preserve a good offing, and not come near enough to Joppa to make out distinctly what it was. He would probably run as direct as he could from Acre to Gaza, a port from whence there was a caravan route by Petra to Elana at the head of the east branch of the Arabian gulf. (STRABO, l. c.) Hugging the shore however a very little too much would bring him instead to Ascalon or Azotus, of both which places Herodotus has stories.

It is quite in accordance with the known habits of the Phœnicians that they should have endeavoured to hinder the commercial intercourse of the Hellenic merchants with these parts, and this might effectually be done by co-operating with the Joppa pirates. In this case the Hellenic navigator would naturally resort to the Philistine ports which lay nearer to Egypt, and to which the influence of that friendly power would extend. For some other cases in which the hostility growing out of commercial rivalry appears to have affected the sources of the author's information, see note on iv. 38.

¹⁵ παρ' ἣν δὴ τὸ Κάσιον ὄρος τείνει ἐς θάλασσαν. See the note 23 on ii. 6.

¹⁶ ἐς θάλασσαν. I have little doubt that the whole of this passage is in confusion, and cannot be satisfactorily emended without the aid of other MSS. Perhaps Herodotus may have written ἀπὸ γὰρ Φοινίκης μέχρι οὖρων τῶν Καδύτιος πόλιος γῆ ἐστὶ Σύρων ἀπὸ δὲ Καδύτιος, ἐούσης πόλιος (ὡς ἐμοὶ δοκεῖ) Σαρδίων οὐ πολλὰ ἐλάσσονος, ἀπὸ ταύτης τὰ ἐμπόρια τὰ ἐπὶ θαλάσσης μέχρι Ἰηνύσου πόλιός ἐστι Σύρων τῶν Παλαιστίνων καλεομένων ἀπὸ δὲ Ἰηνύσου, πόλιος Συρίων, μέχρι Σερβωνίδος λίμνης παρ' ἣν δὴ τὸ Κάσιον ὄρος τείνει ἐς θάλασσαν, τοῦ Ἀραβίου. The distinction of Syro-Phoenicians and Syro-Philistines is well known, and Herodotus seems to regard the domain of Kadytis as marking the separation of the line of coast inhabited by the Phoenicians from that inhabited by the Philistines, only it must be remembered he is speaking as a navigator might speak, not as a geographer. Such a one sailing along the coast southwards, after taking in his cargo at Poseideum (see note on § 97), would in turn come off Sidon and Tyre and their dependencies, backed by the ranges of Libanus. After rounding the headland of Mount Carmel he would run along a similar coast in which the Philistine towns lay. At the boundary between this cultivated coast and the desert was Ienysus (Khan Iönes, placed by RENNELL, p. 260, a few hours' journey to the south-west of Gaza). From thence nothing but sand would meet the eye as far as his next land-mark, the truncated hummock of gravel on which stood the temple of Zeus Casius. From Gaza to Casium the coast is λυτρά πᾶσα καὶ ἀμμάθης. (STRABO, xvi. c. 2, p. 371.)

¹⁷ ἐν τῇ δὴ λόγος τὸν Τυφῶ κεκρύφθαι. It seems not unlikely that the story of Typhon being overwhelmed in the Serbonian marsh arose from a confusion between that and the Dead Sea, which appears to have been the case with the authorities followed by STRABO (xvi. c. 2, p. 377). They make it 1000 stadæ in circumference. But the Serbonian marsh of Herodotus was a narrow salt lake about 200 stadæ long and 50 acres at the most, running parallel to the seashore, from which it was separated only by a narrow strip of sand; and through this at one time there was a mouth (STRABO xvi. p. 371). It is now entirely filled up.

¹⁸ ἐὼν τοῦτο οὐκ ὀλίγον χωρίον ἀλλ' ὅσον τε ἐπὶ τρεῖς ἡμέρας ὁδόν. From Khan Iönes to Mount Casius is about sixty geographical miles direct (RENNELL, p. 260), but the Serbonian marsh extends considerably further east, so that, taking a day's journey direct at seventeen miles, the statement is tolerably accurate. But between Mount Casius and the ancient Pelusium, the nearest point at which drinkable water could be obtained, the distance is thirty-nine or forty miles through the desert. It would seem from this that the estimate is one made by a navigator from his run at sea, using the common reduction for land distances, which he was in the habit of doing (see notes on ii. 6). Water had really to be provided by a land traveller for a march of five or six days at least.

of STRABO, almost all the wine imported into Alexandria, then the port of Egypt, came from Laodicea in Syria, where it was shipped (xvi. c. 2, p. 358). It must be remembered that at that time Tyre had been destroyed. Previously to that event, wine grown in the very same place would probably have been shipped in Tyrian bottoms and called Phœnician. See note on § 91, below.

²⁰ τὸν δήμαρχον, "the aga." See note 543 on ii. 177.

²¹ ἐς ταῦτα δὴ τὰ ἄνδρα τῆς Συρίας. This expression applies in the mind of the narrator to the desert which lay between Ienysus and Mount Casius. But if only this route was supplied with water in this manner, it is extraordinary that Memphis, so high up on the Nile, should be the place where the wine-jars were collected. There was, however, in early times, a caravan traffic from Petra to the coast of the Mediterranean, the line of which lay through the desert in great part, and probably the water-jars would be used for this also, although no route except the one by the coast would here have any interest for Herodotus. See note on § 111.

²⁸ ὁ πιθανώτερος τῶν λόγων. RENNELL (Geogr. p. 257) does not consider this account the more plausible of the two "It appears morally impossible to have supplied a Persian army, and its followers and beasts of burden, with water by means of skins, during the whole march. Arabia could scarcely have supplied skins enough." He asserts that the Arabs know well where to obtain water in the desert, but they have in many cases stopt up the wells, to further their predatory schemes. He supposes that really the army of Cambyses made a détour, being guided by the Arabs to springs and wells more inland, where too a supply had possibly been accumulated in tanks at the end of each day's march. As for the river Corys, it is in vain to seek for it in Arabia. RITTER (Vorhalle, p. 82) conceives it to be etymologically equivalent to κύρος or κόρος, words which mean in the language of the nomads "sacred to the sun." The skins were perhaps used for lining the wooden sides of wells sunk in the sand, or channels from a spring to a tank.

²⁰ ἐστρατοπεδεύετο Ψαμμήνιτος. At Pelusium was the nearest point at which water was abundant, and it therefore constituted the key of Egypt. By the continual shifting of the bed of the river westward, this tract has become desert, and the nearest point at which water can be obtained is now Salahiah (107 geographical miles from Khan Iōnes). This place was occupied in force by the French when in Egypt, just as Pelusium was by Psammetichus and by the priest of Hephæstus (ii. 141).

²¹ τέσσερα καὶ. These words do not exist in the manuscripts S and V.

²² ἐν τῇσι ταφῇσι. See ii. 169.

²⁴ Ἕλληνες τε καὶ Κᾶρες. These were apparently a force gradually gathered around the descendants of the piratical adventurers mentioned above (ii. 152) forming a species of prætorian guard. They themselves were doubtless from various parts of Greece, and hence the expression πάντες οἱ ἐπίκουροι below (i.e. the leaders, or principal officers, of the several bands of condottieri). The expression στρατὸς ἀλλόθροος applied to the invaders would seem rather due to the Egyptian narrator of the story.

²⁴ ἐς ὄψιν τοῦ πατρὸς. This feature of ferocity must not make us suppose that the proceeding of the allies had not a meaning in it independent of their indignation at Phanes. Their act was doubtless a formal religious ceremony in honour of the deity whom they jointly acknowledged. This it can hardly be questioned would be a warlike deity, analogous to the Ζεὺς Στρατίος of Labranda (v. 119), to the national deity of the Caunians (see note 578 on i. 172), or to the "brazen man," ὁ γυνήχαλος, Talus, the primeval guardian of Crete, of whose ritual a relic remained in the ancient practice of the Curetes, who offered human victims, especially children, to Cronus. (ISTEA, ap. Porphy. De Abetinentiâ, ii. 56; EUSEBIUS, Præp. Evang. iv. 16.) See too the note on iv. 70. The story of Sesostris related in ii. 169, looks very like the perversion of a scene in the Moloch ritual. And it will be observed that the locality assigned to it is this very one,—

²⁵ ἀγινέοντες κατὰ ἕνα. These words are to be taken together, and ἕκαστον made to follow ἔσφαζον, "bringing them up separately they cut each child's throat over the vase."

²⁷ οὕτω δὴ, "then and not before." See note 22 on i. 5. The proceeding of the allies, or more probably of their officers, is well illustrated by that of the seven confederate chiefs against Thebes, which itself was a preliminary to engaging. ÆSCHYLUS, Theb. 42:—

It must be remembered that without a common deity there could be no common ὄρκος, and the only common deity of mercenaries gathered from countries with different local religions would be a martial one.

Ethical anecdote of Psammenitus,

64. 71. 165). But it must have been somewhere in the western region of the Delta, for it appears from THUCYDIDES (i. 104) that Marea, very near the subsequent Alexandria, was the base of Inarus's operations, and that the retreating Persians took refuge in Memphis, two-thirds of which Inarus, with the aid of an Athenian squadron, succeeded in capturing. Papremis therefore would lie between Marea and Memphis. From the order in which Herodotus speaks of the two collections of skulls, it would seem as if he entered Egypt near Pelusium and left it near Papremis, and this accords with some other notices. See note 63 on ii. 18.

⁴⁰ ὑπὸ Ἰνάρῳ τοῦ Λίβυος. Herodotus mentions this circumstance again in vii. 7. The success of Inarus took place in, or very soon after, the year 460 a.c. The Persians recovered the whole of Egypt except the marshes in the year 455. This region still held out under Amyrtaeus. (THUCYDIDES i. 110.) It is clear from this passage that the visit of Herodotus to Egypt was later than the year 460,—but how much later does not appear. See note 49, below, and also note 91 on ii. 30.

⁴¹ παρέστησαν, "yielded." The ellipse is of ἐαυτοῖς. See v. 65: παρέστησαν ἐπ' οἷσι ἐβούλοντο οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι. vi. 140: ἐπολιορκούντο ἐς δὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ παρέστησαν. iii. 155: θάσσον οἱ πολέμοι παραστήσονται, in which last passage is no ellipse.

⁴² φόρον ἐτάξαντο, "agreed to the imposition of a tribute." See the note on § 89.

⁴⁴ μεμφθεῖς. See note 267 on i. 77.

⁴⁹ Πανσίρι. Unless this passage is a later addition, we must suppose Herodotus's visit to Egypt to have been subsequent to the complete recovery of that country by the Persians, and consequently after (perhaps long after) B.C. 449. (See CLINTON, F. H. on year 455 B.C.) On the other hand compare note 91 on ii. 30.

⁵⁰ νῦν δὲ, "but as the case was." So below, § 25, νῦν δὲ λόγον οὐδένα ποιέμενος ἦτε αἰεὶ ἐς τὸ πρόσω, "but as it was he took no account of the matter and kept on advancing farther."

Cambyses projects expeditions against Carthage, Ammon, and Ethiopia.

³³ θεῷ οὐ δίκαιον εἶναι λέγοντες νέμειν νεκρὸν ἀνθρώπου. Some MSS have λέγουσι for λέγοντες, in order, no doubt, to make the construction run more clearly. But I conceive the clause to have dropt out of its proper place after πῦρ. If it be replaced, the sentence will be perfectly regular with a proper punctuation: Πέρσαι γὰρ θεὸν νομίζουσι εἶναι πῦρ, θεῷ οὐ δίκαιον εἶναι λέγοντες νέμειν νεκρὸν ἀνθρώπου· τὸ ὦν κατακαλεῖν γε τοὺς νεκροὺς οὐδαμῶς ἐν

³⁴ ἐντὸς. S and V have ἐκτός.

the Ethiopians.

^α τὴν γῆν αὐτὴν ἀναδιδόναι. The emplacement of these Ethiopians is an extremely hopeless matter; but it is plain that the fertility of the country, or the richness of the products which were reputed to come from thence, and did really come from that direction, caused them to be described as inhabitants of a sort of pays de Cocagne, just as was the case with the Tartessians. The long life attributed to them is probably a part of the same notion.
See STRABO, cited in the note 540 on i. 163, and the description of the Hyperboreans
by PINDAR (Pyth. x. 57):

Kenrick well remarks on the common tendency of men, groaning under the burdens of the social state, to draw such pictures as these, and refer them to times before the origin of history, and to countries beyond the limits of geographical knowledge.

^α Cyprus, according to Herodotus (ii. ult.), had been reduced to the condition of a tributary by Amasis; and according to the authorities followed by DIONORIUS (i. 68), was an ally of Phœnicia in the war with Apries (mentioned by Herodotus ii. 161). These circumstances would be favourable to Cambyzes in his designs against Egypt, as the attack would be made on a common enemy.

⁵⁷ μέγιστοι καὶ κάλλιστοι. HUMÉ (ap. Walpole, Turkey, p. 392) says that the Ethiopian women brought to Egypt for sale, though black, are extremely beautiful. Their features are regular and their eyes full of expression. A great number of them were purchased by the French during their stay in Egypt, and they fetched from 60 to 100 dollars, while Arab women might be purchased for as little as ten.

τε εἶναι. The foundation of this notion perhaps was the circumstance of the chieftains belonging to a different race from their subjects. ARISTOTLE (Polit. vii. p. 1332. l. 24) quotes Scylax as relating that the “Indian” chiefs differed unmistakably from those whom they governed.

⁶¹ ἀνέφερον. The MSS vary between this reading, ἀναφέρων, and ἀνέφυρον.

⁶² ἐς ἑξέκοντα καὶ ἑκατὸν. The same duration of life is ascribed to Argantho-nius, the king of the Tartessians (i. 163). See note 56, above.

⁶⁴ μήτε ξύλον. It seems not impossible that the belief in the extreme rarity of this water may partly arise from the circumstance that the wood of the cocco-tree, which would be the commonest of all in many regions of Africa, is of a greater specific gravity than water, and consequently would sink in it. So also would ebony and lignum vitae, and some other woods.

⁶⁶ [τῷ νέκυϊ.] These words appear to me to be a gloss from a misunderstanding of the meaning of the passage, which I should render, "and yet has every feature distinct like the man himself," i. e. when he was alive.

⁶⁷ οἱ μάλιστα. One MS (R) adds the words αὐτῷ τῷ νέκυϊ, which Wesseling adopts, and strikes out the same two lines back. I should rather conjecture that after τῷ νέκυϊ in that place had become incorporated with the text, a subsequent transcriber shifted them to this position. On the transcript being collated by a different person, the change would be observed, and a marginal note would be added to show where they ought to have been. Then would come the transcriber of R, or its archetype, and put them in both places.

⁶⁸ ὀργήν. The manuscripts S and V have ἀρχήν, which is perhaps the true reading.

⁶⁹ αὐτοῦ ταύτη. The same expression occurs i. 214; iv. 135. But it seems doubtful whether it does not here arise from an aggregation of two alternative readings. Here only S has αὐτοῦ ταύτη, while M, V have αὐτῷ, and P, K, F αὐτοῦ without ταύτη.

⁷² τὴν ἔχουσι μὲν Σάμιοι. There is no means of saying when this settlement took place, but it will probably have been coincident with the extension of Samian enterprise to Egypt. For evidence of a commercial connexion between Samos, Elis, Cyrene, and Egypt, see notes 296 b on ii. 86 and 554 on ii. 182.

⁷³ ἑπτὰ ἡμερῶν ὁδὸν ἀπὸ Θηβῶν. It is nearly in the same latitude with Thebes, and lies in the caravan track from that city to the Oasis of Ammon. Its modern name is El Wah (the habitation), and it really consists of two oases, El Kargeh and El Dakel. It may be observed from the varying account of the distances that it is unlikely this story belongs to the same cycle as the one in iv. 181.

⁷⁴ τὸν Ἕλληες Ἐπαφον καλέουσι. The meaning of this is that the Egyptian Apis is, as regards his ritual, identical with the Hellenic Epaphus. Above (ii. 163) the author expresses the same thing in other words, on which passage see the note 467. See also the note 32 on i. 7.

⁷⁵ τοὺς ἐπιτρόπους. See note 105, below.
⁷⁶ [ὁ Ἐπαφος.] These words appear to be a gloss. The manuscripts S and V omit the word οὗτος, and thus show this more distinctly. See § 27.

⁷⁸ ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ. It does not seem likely, judging from this expression, that in the time of Herodotus the generific beam was regarded as proceeding from any especial luminary. But in the time of PLUTARCH it was said to come from the Moon, and a strange myth appears to have been connected with the notion; viz. that Osiris was both the son and the husband of Isis. (De Isid. et Os. p. 368.) Another legend, in reference to the same notion, attached to Isis an androgynous character. These two myths are undoubtedly of late growth and obviously coined for the purpose of connecting together diverse rituals. There was in Egypt a festival (kept on the new-moon in the month Phamenoth), of which the name interpreted was "the entrance of Osiris into the Moon." (PLUTARCH, l. c.) This seems not unlikely to have had regard to that phenomenon which our old ballad calls “the new Moon with the auld Moon in her arm,” the dark portion of the planet being taken for the Sun, which had been seen to set. Again, the influence of the Moon on the growth of various productions was a firm belief in Egypt. (Plutarch, De Is. et Os. passim.) Nothing therefore could be more easy than to derive the emanation by which the mother of Apis was supposed to be impregnated from thence.

Ὡς δὲ ἤγαγον τὸν Ἄπιν οἱ ἱρέες, ὁ Καμβύσης οἷα ἔων ὑπομαργότερος σπασάμενος τὸ ἐγχειρίδιον, θέλων τύψαι τὴν γαστέρα τοῦ Ἄπιος παλεῖ τὸν μηρόν· γελάσας δὲ, εἶπε πρὸς τοὺς ἱρέας· “ὦ κακαὶ κεφαλᾶι, τοιοῦτοι θεοὶ γίνονται, ἔναιμοί τε καὶ σαρκώδεις καὶ ἐπαίνοντες σιδηρίων⁸²; ἄξιός μὲν Αἰγυπτίῳ οὕτός γε ὁ θεός· ἀτάρ τοι ὑμεῖς γε οὐ χαίροντες γέλῳτα ἐμὲ θήσεσθε.” ταῦτα εἰπας, ἐντετεῖλατο τοῖσι ταῦτα πρήσσουσι, τοὺς μὲν ἱρέας ἀπομαστυγῶσαι, Αἰγυπτίων δὲ τῶν ἄλλων τὸν ἄν λάβῃσι ὀρτάζοντα κτείνειν. ὀρτὴ μὲν δὴ διελέλυτο Αἰγυπτίοισι· οἱ δὲ ἱρέες ἐδικαιεύντο· ὁ δὲ Ἄπις πεπληγμένος τὸν μηρόν, ἔφθινε ἐν τῷ ἱρῷ κατακείμενος. καὶ τὸν μὲν, τελευτήσαντα ἐκ τοῦ τρώματος ἔθαψαν οἱ ἱρέες λάβρη Καμβύσεω· Καμβύσης δὲ, ὡς λέγουσι Αἰγύπτιοι, αὐτίκα διὰ τοῦτο τὸ ἀδίκημα ἐμάνη, ἔων οὐδὲ πρότερον φρενήρης· καὶ πρῶτα μὲν τῶν κακῶν ἐξεργάσατο τὸν ἀδελφεὸν Σμέρδιν⁸³· ἔοντα πατρός καὶ μητρὸς τῆς αὐτῆς, τὸν ἀπέπεμψε ἐς Πέρσας⁸⁴· φθόνῳ ἐξ Αἰγύπτου, ὅτι τὸ τόξον μούνος Περσέων ὄσον

⁸⁰ ἐπὶ τοῦ νώτου, “over his back,” not “on the top of his back,” which would be denoted by the dative case.

⁸¹ ἐπὶ δὲ τῇ γλώσσῃ κάνθαρον. The scarabæus was probably regarded as a sacred symbol from the same cause as the shrewmouse. (See note 422 on ii. 141.) It appeared to be produced from the earth. As in the case of the other animal, the ingenuity of later times suggested a variety of mystical reasons.

⁸² ἐπαίνοντες σιδηρίων. See note on i. 71.

⁸³ τὸν ἀδελφεὸν Σμέρδιν. This name, in its milder form Merdis (=Μάρδης=Μάρδης), is identical etymologically with the Bartius (=Βάρδης=Βάρδης) of the Behistun Inscriptions, who is there represented as having had the same father and mother as Cambyzes (Kabujiya), as having excited troubles in the state, and as having been slain by Cambyzes. But the inscription expressly goes on to say that it was after this that Cambyzes went to Egypt. For the difference in the chronology of the Egyptian accounts see note 107, below.

⁸⁴ ἐς Πέρσας. The seat of the troubles excited by the brother of Cambyzes is by Herodotus supposed to be Persia. This country does not however appear to have been the seat of the imperial government before the reign of Darius. That was Agbatana in the time of Cyrus (i. 153), and of Cambyzes (iii. 64). Smerdis therefore was sent to Persia as to a province, perhaps in the position of a viceroy. And this is in harmony with a notice in Ctesias, who represents the younger brother (though he gives him the name Tanyoxarces) as being left by his father with independent authority over certain provinces, although the title βασιλεὺς was confined to Cambyses.

⁵⁵ ἐς Πέρσας. These words are omitted in S and V.

⁵⁶ προσαγαγόντα. Bekker conjectures προαγαγόντα, which would render the construction more regular; but there is no occasion to alter the reading of the MSS. Translate: "And he went up to Susa and slew Smerdis, some say while going out to hunt, but others, that he took him to the Erythraean sea and drowned him in it." The participle ἐξαγαγόντα has for its subject Smerdis, and is used as a neuter verb, while προσαγαγόντα has for its subject Prexaspes, and is an active verb.

⁵⁷ πρῶτον μὲν δὴ λέγουσι Καμβύσῃ τῶν κακῶν ἄρξαι τοῦτο. The article before κακῶν is to be remarked. The miseries of Cambyses,—acts wrought in a madness supposed to be inspired by the gods, an idea which the Greeks expressed by the word κακοδαμονία,—were matters of notoriety; all the difference was in the details, which the Egyptians represented in one way and the Persians in another. The sentence is to be translated, "The first beginning now of his woes to Cambyses, they say, was this." Cleomenes, the Spartan king, was a parallel instance of notorious insanity, accounted for very differently by different people (see vi. 75). That the pure Persian traditions represented by the Behistun Inscriptions put the death of Smerdis on quite other grounds is plain from what is cited in the note 84, above.

⁵⁸ μὴς τῶν ἀδελφεῶν. Possibly this was Atossa, his sister by the father's side, if not the mother's also. See note on § 68, below.

⁵⁹ τοὺς βασιλεῖς δικαστὰς. See above, § 14.

⁶⁰ κωλύων. All the MSS have κελεύων, and a few lines below κελεύει, and Gaisford follows them. But the gist of the story is lost by this reading. Cambyses wished to violate the common law (οὐκ ἐωθότα ποιέειν), and asked his advisers whether there was a positive statute against the crime he meditated. They were able to answer in the negative; and they further salved the king's conscience by suggesting to him another positive statute which gave him absolute authority formally, although of course no such matter was contemplated by it. A similar dishonesty was exhibited by Anaxarchus,—a pagan precursor of Hobbes and Filmer,—who endeavoured to comfort the conscience-stricken Alexander after the death of Clitus, by telling him that Δίκη and Θέμις were represented as the assessors

"καὶ οἱ τὰς ἀγγελίας ἐφόρεε οὗτος. This function is not to be confused with that of the ἐσαγγελεῖς, who was an eunuch (see below, § 77), and regarded as holding a servile office; but it rather is that of a commissioner armed with a firman for special important services,—as for instance those performed by Prexaspes in the matter of Smerdis (above, § 30.)

"περὶ ἐμέ. The manuscripts S and V have the form ἐμεῦ. But in i. 126 they give the open form, and likewise in vi. 86.

"τελέσαι. This word is omitted by one

MS, and several others have the alternative καλέσαι. It seems almost certain that the text as it stands must be corrupt; but it seems rash to correct it by the expulsion of this word, for such an emendation offers no explanation of the way in which the corruption arose. I should be inclined rather to suppose that Herodotus wrote κοῖός τις δοκεῖ ἀνὴρ πρὸς τὸν πατέρα τελέσαι; "what kind of man they thought he turned out in comparison with his father;" and that εἶναι, from being a marginal gloss in explanation of the unusual phrase τελέσαι, crept into the text. The ellipse is of βίον or some such word, and the sense is easily deducible from such expressions as εἰς Ἑλλάδας τελεῖν (ii. 51); εἰς Βοιωτὸς τελεῖν (vi. 108).

⁹⁸ εἰ . . . τύχοιμι. The manuscripts S and V have ἦν . . . τύχω.

⁹⁹ οὐ μαίνομαι τε. I have adopted this reading from the single manuscript S. The words οὐ μαίνομαι are to be regarded as a single verb nearly equivalent to ὀργίζω, and the particles τε—τε couple together the clauses ἔγωγε οὐ μαίνομαι and Πέρσαι παραφρονέουσι. Translate: “Prexaspes, that I for my part am no madman and that the Persians are drivellers, here you have proof; and now tell me,” &c., &c.

¹⁰¹ αὐτὸν τὸν θεὸν οὕτω ἂν καλῶς βαλέειν. This expression is an allusion to the mode in which Ormuzd was represented by the Persians, as an archer, by a figure which appears in the Behistun Inscriptions, and which is identical with one found on many of the Nineveh marbles. This belongs to a mythological cycle essentially different from the one described in i. 131. See the note 450 on i. 132. It is curiously illustrative of the manner in which the ancients identified strange gods with their own analogous deities, that SENECA, describing this incident, quotes the answer of Prexaspes thus: “Negavit Apollinem potuisse certius dimittere.” (De ira, iii. 14.)

¹⁰² Περσέων. The words ὁμοῖα (or ὁμοίως or ὁμοίους) τοῖσι πρότοις come after Περσέων in all the MSS, and so they are printed by Gaisford. The explanations of none of the commentators are to me satisfactory if ὁμοῖα be taken, which can certainly not be a correction from either of the other readings; but the slight transposition renders the sentence easy. “These atrocities he then committed, and at another time what matched the first;—twelve Persians, convicted of no sufficient offence, did he bury alive head downwards.”

¹⁰³ ἐπὶ κεφαλὴν κατῶρυξε. There are unfortunately no means of ascertaining the spirit in which Cambyzes committed this outrage. Some may be disposed to combine the circumstance with what is related of Amestris (vii. 114), and to regard it as a confirmation of the assertion that ‘burial alive was a Persian practice.’ But if Cambyzes acted here in the spirit of Amestris, one would hardly expect the words ἐπὶ κεφαλὴν, the action expressed by which seems to indicate contempt. Moreover Cambyzes is throughout represented as a sort of Mezentius, a despiser of the gods as well as a cruel tyrant. This was only a natural view in Egypt, for the early Persians were, like the Mussulmans, thorough iconoclasts and intolerant of all religions but their own. It seems not impossible that the punishment spoken of in the text may have been a summary one inflicted by the passionate king upon certain individuals whom he had detected in the worship of the buried Osiris, so prevalent in Egypt;—he sent them, as it were, to search for the object of their devotion, as the Thracians used to send a messenger to Zalmois (iv. 94). ARISTOPHANES, in a somewhat similar manner, brings before the Athenian public in a ridiculous attitude those philosophers whom he chooses to describe as prying into the bowels of the earth.

ΣΤΡΕΨΙΑΔΗΣ. τί γὰρ οἶδε δρῶσιν οἱ σφόδρ’ ἐγκεκυφότες ;

ΜΑΘΗΤΗΣ. οἷτοι δ’ ἐραβοδιῶσιν ὑπὸ τὸν Τάρταρον. (Νυδ. 191.)

¹⁰⁴ ἄνδρας σεωντοῦ πολήτας. This phrase bespeaks the Hellenic origin of this moral essay of Croesus’s. Such an idea as it rests upon is entirely alien to Asiatic modes of thought. See the notes 113 and 126 on i. 32. and i. 37.

¹⁰⁵ ἐπετρόπευσας. This word properly implies a deputed government. Camby- ses seems to treat Croesus as if he had been even in his best days merely the satrap of some foreign sovereign. But it can hardly be supposed that this expression is dramatically used, as if arising out of the overweening insolence of the monarch. Darius uses it, with equal impropriety (below, § 82), where no such explanation is possible. It would rather seem that both here and in the other passage the narrative is one which has come to Herodotus through a Hellenic channel. And as the only oriental governors known personally to the Greeks were *viceroy*s, possibly the term ἐπιτροπεύειν applied to such became in common parlance equivalent to ἄρχειν. See the use of the word ἐπιτρόπους in § 27, above.

¹⁰⁶ οὐ καταπροΐξεσθαι. This phrase appears to have been a colloquial one at Athens. It is used several times by ARISTOPHANES, and always in an oath. Thus Theophrast. 586: οὐ τοι μὰ τῷ θεῷ σὺ καταπροΐξει λόγουσα τανύ. The origin of the expression is to be sought in the use of προῖκα as an euphemism for ἀξήμιος. Translate: "not however that those who saved him should do their work for nothing." See v. 105, ἐδ' εἰδότες ὅς οὐτοί γε οὐ καταπροΐζονται ἀποσπώντες, "well knowing that these at any rate would not fail to get something by having revolted." Of course the euphemistic expression becomes in such cases a bitter irony.

¹⁰⁷ μένων ἐν Μέρφι. These words show that in the Egyptian accounts all the atrocities of Cambyses were represented as consequent upon his violation of Apis, which itself followed his return from the unsuccessful expedition to Ethiopia. It seems scarcely possible to doubt that they rest upon the local traditions of Memphis, and especially of the Hephæsteum there, the priests of which were fearfully oppressed by him and all their superstitions insulted. If so, it is not surprising that the account should confine itself to the atrocities and the punishment which followed them, and should pass over all the particulars of Cambyses's movements not connected with these. Accordingly, on the next notice of Cambyses, he appears to be at Agbatana in Syria (§ 62), where he dies about twenty days after his arrival, and after receiving the first intelligence of the revolt of the Pseudo-Smerdis.

¹⁰⁸ σκεπτόμενος τοὺς νεκρούς. A similar outrage is recorded on the part of Darius (or, according to Ctesias, of Xerxes) at Babylon. See i. 187, and the note 631 there.

¹⁰⁹ ἐς δὲ δὴ καὶ τοῦ Ἡφαιστου τὸ ἰρὸν ἦλθε. See the note 6 on i. 1.

¹¹¹ Παταϊκοῖσι. This name is applied to those Phœnician idols which, when transplanted to Imbros, Lemnos, and Samothrace, went by the name of Cabiri, and which are probably identical with the earliest form of the Dioscuri; perhaps also with the Etruscan Lares and the Latin Penates. In those countries in which the connexion with Phœnicia remained most undisturbed, they appear in the historical times most distinctly connected with the arts of metallurgy and the worship of Hephæstus; but it seems doubtful whether this does not arise from the circumstance that in those places these arts had acquired a decided predominance. (See note 130 on ii. 44). If it were certain to what family of languages the word Παταῖκος belonged, so that a guess might be formed as to its signification, much light might be thrown upon the subject. I should be inclined to believe that the name was not that given by the Phœnicians themselves to the idols, but by those persons who had commercial intercourse with them; or that if the word is Phœnician, it is an epithet of the tutelary deity Melec or Baal, not an actual name. If it be the term applied to the Phœnician deities by the Hellenes who came into contact with them, it probably has the same etymology with the Paia, which entered into the Scythian name of the Amazons. (See iv. 110.) In this case the term Παταῖκοι would be equivalent to λατῆρσαι (slayers of the host), an actual name of the Dioscuri (ΔΙΟΥΣΚΟΥΡΟΙ, ap. Hesychium v. λαπ.) and a most appropriate title for gods who went forth to war with the armies of their worshippers. It will be observed that Herodotus speaks of these figures as appearing on the prows of the Phœnician triremes, not of their merchant ships.

¹¹² οἱ τοὺς γονέας κατεσθίουσι. See note on § 99 below, καλέονται δὲ Παταῖοι.

¹¹³ ὁρθῶς μοι δοκεῖ Πίνδαρος ποιῆσαι. This passage is quoted by ΠΛΑΤΟΝ (Gorgias, p. 484), where by the use the speaker makes of it and its context, ἄγει βίαιός τὸ δικαίωτάτων ὑπερτάτῃ χειρὶ, it would seem that the poet used the word as equivalent to τὸ νομίζομενον,—positive law in direct opposition to natural law.

¹¹⁴ Καμβύσεω ἐπ' Αἴγυπτον στρατευομένον. The thread of the narrative relative to Cambyses is resumed in § 61. In what intervenes there is nothing to fix the chronology of the events the author describes except the account relative to the auxiliaries having been despatched by Expedition of the Lacedaemonians against Polycrates of Samos, who after becoming tyrant made an alliance with Amasis.

Among other great successes he conquers the Lesbians, and makes the prisoners dig a ditch round the fortifications of Samos. Advice of Amasis to him, Polycrates to the aid of Cambyses (§ 44). The account of the fate of Polycrates is united with the narrative of the Persian monarchy by the disaster of Oroetes, below, §§ 121—128.

¹¹⁵ ὃς ἔσχε Σάμον ἐπαναστάς. According to some accounts, with a force of only 15 hoplites to back him. (See below, § 120.)

¹¹⁶ πεντηκοντέρους τε ἑκατὸν. See notes on § 44 and § 45.

¹¹⁸ Ἀμασις Πολυκράτει ὧδε λέγει. This simple style of address recurs in the despatch of Oroetes, below, § 122: Ὀροίτης Πολυκράτει ὧδε λέγει. viii. 140: Μαρδόνιος τῶδε λέγει. Its genuine oriental character is shown by the parallel form used by Rabshakeh (2 Kings xviii. 19 and 29). But the historical authority of the letter here is quite another matter. In point of sentiment it runs exactly parallel to the speech of Solon, i. 32.

¹¹⁹ τὸ θεῖον ἐπισταμένῳ ὥς ἔστι φθονερόν. The notion of the envy of the deity appears in several passages of Herodotus, but is perhaps most fully developed in the mouth of Artabanus (vii. 10 and 46). It is apparently an idea of Asiatic origin, suggested by the despotic forms of government which universally prevailed in that part of the world. A large portion of the propitiatory sacrifices of the ancients rested upon this feeling. (See note 676 on i. 199.) In the time of Herodotus it had become grafted on to an idea nearly akin to it, but of Achaean origin,—that of the divine νέμεσις, or wrath of the gods called forth by the commission of a crime. This was conceived as exerting itself mainly by the agency of the criminal himself. His mind became deluded, and he entered upon a perverse course of action which sooner or later ended in his ruin. ÆSCAPULUS expresses the links in the chain of necessity by the words he puts into the mouth of the Shade of Darius (Pers. 821):

ἔτης, ὅθεν πάγκλαυτον ἐξαμὶθ θέρως.

Of human criminality there were two great divisions;—acts injurious to the deity either of a positive character, as arrogance, or of a negative, as the neglect of the public worship,—and acts injurious to men if of the same state. The sense of wrong arising from these in the injured party was regarded as acquiring a distinct personal existence, and becoming a νέμεσις or ἐρινὸς, an avenging deity,—an ἀδραστία or μοῖρα as being absolutely inevitable,—a ποιῶν as being stirred to action by an injury previously inflicted,—an ἔτη as operating through the infatuation of the criminal.

¹²⁰ εὐτυχέειν. Several MSS have εὐτυχέων, which looks like an arbitrary correction to produce a correspondence with the clause ἐναλλάξ πρήσσων. But even then the sentence will not run on all-fours without some change. I apprehend that the words ἐναλλάξ πρήσσων have slipped out of their proper place; and by putting them before καὶ οὕτω διαφέρειν τὸν αἰῶνα (which they follow in Gaisford and all the MSS), a regular construction will result. Translate: “And I may say I wish—both for myself and my connexions —to speed here and to fail there in my doings, with chequered fortune; and (I hold) that so one's life is better than that one should have luck in every thing.”

There is no ellipsis before ἢ εὐτυχέειν, but διαφέρειν, which is equivalent to βελτίονα εἶναι, is employed in the regimen of these words. The infinitive διαφέρειν again depends on the sense νομίζω, which is implied in the word βούλομαι.

¹²¹ ἀκέο. See note 314 on i. 90.

¹²² τοῦ Τηλεκλέος. S and V have Τιμεκλέος and Τημακλέος severally. PAUSANIAS (viii. 14. 8) must have found the reading Τηλεκλέος, for it is from the combination of this passage with i. 51 (where see the note 160), that he asserts the identity of “Theodorus the Samian,” the alleged inventor of bronze-casting, with the artist here spoken of. A further assumption on the part of Pausanias is, that Theodorus here spoken of was the “engraver” of the signet. But the words of Herodotus are compatible with the view that he was the “setter” of the emerald stone in a gold ring,—an operation more analogous to metallurgy than the engraving of a design would be. Nevertheless, it should be remembered that the ring (whether regarded as curious from its setting or for its engraving) is not spoken of as actually existing any where. It is a mere feature in a story, the object of which is to illustrate the inevitable character of Destiny; and therefore its compatibility with what is known of the history of the Arts must be of secondary importance. See note 104 on i. 30.

¹²³ πεντηκόντερον. See note 131, below.
¹²⁴ καὶ σε ἐπὶ δεῖπνον καλέομεν. This invitation from a prince to a man who lived by the work of his hands is at first sight remarkable. It is probably not to be accounted for on the same principle as a similar proceeding occurring in the east would be, where the arbitrary favour of the sovereign is the source of all conventional rank, and no sense of incongruity is produced by its falling upon a fisherman or a barber. Neither is it a piece of ultra-democratic equalization, such as might be practised a century later at Athens. The true explanation seems to be that Polycrates, although a crusher of the power of the aristocratic families, was regarded as the champion of the commonalty. Hence the compliments between him and the fisherman, who was as proud of his prince and the ἀρχή, as a Frenchman of Napoleon in the first year of the empire; and for a τύραννος under such circumstances nothing could be a more popular act than to invite the donor of the fish to partake of it. He of course went home, μέγα ποιεῦμενος ταῦτα, calling it ‘the proudest moment of his life.’

¹²⁵ ἐς Αἴγυπτον ἐπέθηκε, “he sent it to Egypt.” The literal meaning would be, “he put on it the address ‘To Egypt,’” and this is probably the origin of the idiom. Compare v. 95, ἐπιτίθει ἐς Μυτιλήνην, where perhaps the poem referred to was in the form of a lyrical despatch, of which Melanippus was regarded as the bearer.

μενος δὲ ὁ Ἀμασις τὸ βιβλίον τὸ παρὰ τοῦ Πολυκράτεος ἤκου, ἔμαθε ὅτι ἐκκομίσαι τε ἀδύνατον εἶη ἀνθρώπῳ ἀνθρωπον ἐκ τοῦ μέλλοντος γίνεσθαι πρήγματος, καὶ ὅτι οὐκ εὖ τελευτήσῃ μελλεὶ Πολυκράτης εὐτυχεῖν τὰ πάντα, ὃς καὶ τὰ ἀποβάλλει εὐρίσκει. Amasis, on hearing of the portent, renounces the alliance of Polycrates. πέμψας δὲ οἱ κήρυκα ἐς Σάμον διάλυεσθαι ἔφη τὴν ξενίην. [τοῦ δὴ εἵνεκα ταῦτα ἐποίησεν¹²⁶. ἵνα μὴ, συντυχίης δεινῆς τε καὶ μεγάλῃς Πολυκράτεια καταλαβούσης, αὐτὸς ἀληγήσειε τὴν ψυχὴν ὡς περὶ ξείνου ἀνδρός¹²⁷.]

¹²⁶ τοῦ δὴ εἵνεκα ταῦτα ἐποίησεν; Gaisford and the MSS have τοῦ δὴ εἵνεκα ταῦτα ἐποίησεν.

¹²⁷ [τοῦ δὴ εἵνεκα . . . ξείνου ἀνδρός.] I have enclosed these words between brackets, because they appear to me to be an interpolated note, not from the hand of the author, but from that of a grammarian of the time of the Roman empire, when Herodotus (as is clear from the treatise of Dionysius of Halicarnassus) was much read in the schools. The sentiment is one appropriate to Cicero, but not to Amasis, or to any one near his time. The prevailing motive with him would have been to avoid by all means sharing the ruin of a man on whom Destiny had set its mark; and this risk would, according to the feeling of the age, be run by every one connected with him in any solemn relation whatever. There was no formal ξενία without participation in a common sacrifice to a common deity; if, therefore, this deity was bent on the destruction of one of the contracting parties, the renunciation of the contract by the other became an act of self-preservation.

¹²⁸ Κυδωνίην τὴν ἐν Κρήτῃ. See note on § 59.

¹²⁹ Πολυκράτης δὲ πέμψας. So Gaisford reads with most of the MSS. But

S, V, a, and c have πέμψας δὲ κήρυκα λῶδρῃ Σαμίῳ Πολυκράτης. Bekker proposes to change δὲ into γάρ. These words are so continually substituted for one another in MSS, that wherever such a change seems required it may be made without scruple. But in this instance there seems a lacuna in both classes of MSS.

¹³⁰ τούτων. This word seems to indicate that Polycrates notoriously sent more than one ambassador. Perhaps the mention of them occurred in the lacuna above-mentioned.

¹³¹ ἀπέπεμπε τεσσαεράκοντα τριήρεσι. It is remarkable that this force should be represented as sent off in triremes, while, when Polycrates himself embarked to go to Oroetes, it was not in a trireme, but in a penteconter (§ 124). If it be objected that a smaller vessel was selected for the sake of convenience in this particular expedition and in that described § 41, it may be asked in reply, how in the enumeration of Polycrates's resources (§ 39) comes his fleet to consist not of triremes, but of penteconters? It is not easy to conceive a more satisfactory explanation than that the incident of the expedition of the Samians to Egypt belongs to a different cycle of traditions from the general for-

Various accounts are given of their fortunes; but at any rate they invaded Samos, and afterwards sought aid at Lacedaemon.

Ἐπεὶ τε δὲ οἱ ἐξελασθέντες Σαμίων ὑπὸ Πολυκράτεος ἀπίκοντο ἐς τὴν Σπάρτην, καταστάντες ἐπὶ τοὺς ἄρχοντας ἔλεγον πολλὰ, ὅσα κάρτα δεόμενοι· οἱ δὲ σφί τῇ πρώτῃ καταστάσει ὑπεκρίναντο, τὰ μὲν πρῶτα λεχθέντα ἐπιλεληθῆναι τὰ δὲ ὕστερα οὐ συνιέναι. μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα, δεύτερα καταστάντες ἄλλο μὲν εἶπον οὐδὲν, θύλαtunes of Polycrates. See also note 136, below.

¹³² [ὅπρ Πολυκράτεος.] These words are omitted in four MSS.

¹³³ σφίσι. Gaisford reads σφί. Matthise lays it down that in Herodotus this distinction exists between σφίσι and σφί, that the former is equivalent to sibi, the latter to illis (or iis). According to Matthise, the manuscript S reads σφίσι here.

¹³⁴ καταπλέουσι δὲ ἐς τὴν Σάμον Πολυκράτης . . . κατέστη. The transition from the oblique to the direct form is not to be passed over without observation. Whether the detachment arrived in Egypt or not was a matter of uncertainty; some gave one account of the matter and some another, but all agreed that there was a debarkation on the island Samos and a battle, which was followed by a retreat of Polycrates's enemies to Lacedaemon.

κον δὲ φέροντες ἔφασαν τὸν θύλακον ἀλφίτων δέεσθαι· οἱ δὲ σφι ὑπεκρίναντο τῷ θύλακι περιεργάσθαι¹³⁷. βοηθέειν δ' ὦν ἔδοξε αὐτοῖσι. Καὶ ἔπειτα παρασκευασάμενοι ἐστρατεύοντο Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἐπὶ Σάμωι ὥς μὲν Σάμιοι λέγουσι εὐεργεσίας ἐκτινόντες, ὅτι σφι πρότεροι αὐτοὶ ἡνυσὶ ἐβοήθησαν ἐπὶ Μεσσηνίους¹³⁸. ὥς δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι λέγουσι, οὐκ οὕτω τιμωρῆσαι δεομένοισι Σαμίοισι ἐστρατεύοντο, ὥς τίσασθαι βουλόμενοι τοῦ κρητήρος τῆς ἀρπαγῆς τὸν ἦγον Κροίσω, καὶ τοῦ θώρηκος τὸν αὐτοῖσι Ἀμασις ὁ Αἰγύπτου βασιλεὺς ἔπεμψε δῶρον¹³⁹. καὶ γὰρ θώρηκα ἐλήϊσαντο τῷ προτέρῳ ἔτει ἢ τὸν κρητήρα¹⁴⁰ οἱ Σάμιοι, ὄντα μὲν λίνεον καὶ ζῶων ἐνφυσμένων συχνῶν, κεκοσμημένον δὲ χρυσῷ καὶ εἰρίοισι ἀπὸ ξύλου. τῶν δὲ εἵνεκα θωυμάσαι ἄξιον ἀρπεδόνη ἐκάστη τοῦ θώρηκος ποιεῖν· ἐοῦσα γὰρ λεπτή, ἔχει ἀρπεδόνας ἐν ἑαυτῇ τρηκοσίας καὶ ἐξήκοντα πάσας φανερὰς. τοιοῦτος ἕτερός ἐστι καὶ τὸν ἐν Λίνδῳ ἀνέθηκε τῇ Ἀθηναίῃ Ἀμασις.

¹³⁷ τῷ θύλακι περιεργάσθαι. The force of this reply will be better seen by putting the observation of the Samians into the direct construction. They having been censured for their long speech on the first audience, determined on the second to outdo the Spartans in brevity, and accordingly, as a trial of skill, held up an empty wallet and said: ὁ θύλακος ἀλφίτων δέεται, on which the others remarked that they had done more than was necessary in using the words ὁ θύλακος, i. e. that the gesture would have served for a nominative case.

¹³⁸ ἐβοήθησαν ἐπὶ Μεσσηνίους. This is, I believe, the only passage in the whole of Herodotus's work (with the exception of ix. 35, where the reading is doubtful) in which he makes any allusion to the wars of the Spartans and Messenians. (See note 219 on i. 66.) It was no doubt a very sore subject at Lacedæmon; from which locality a large portion of the history of Herodotus appears to be directly or indirectly derived. It was above all things disagreeable to them to be thought to owe their success to the aid of their neighbours. See the way in which they treated the Athenian contingent (THUCYDIDES i. 102). The Athenians on the other hand were delighted to exaggerate the obligations under which they had laid Sparta in this matter. ARISTOPHANES coolly speaks of Cimon having saved the very existence of the state. (Lysistrata, 1137—1144):

εἴτ', ὦ Λάκωνες, πρὸς γὰρ ὑμᾶς τρέφομαι, οὐκ ἴσθ' ὅτ' ἐλθὼν δεῦρο Περικλείδης ποτὲ ὁ Λάκων Ἀθηναίων ἱκέτης καθέξοτο ἐπὶ τοῖσι βωμοῖς ἄρχος ἐν φοινικίδι, στρατιᾶν προσαιτῶν; ἢ δὲ Μεσσήνη τότε ὑμῖν ἐπέκειτο χεῖρ θεοῦ σείων ἅμα· ἐλθὼν δὲ σὺν ὀπλίταισι τετρακισχύλοις Κίμων δλην ἔσωσε τὴν Λακεδαίμονα.

CLINTON, after his usual manner, endeavours to reconcile contradictory statements by the hypothesis of more than one expedition (Fæsti Hellenici, a. 461). It should not be overlooked that the Spartan account of the expedition to Samos avoids even by implication allowing the service of the Samians, by denying that the expedition was undertaken for the purpose of aiding the exiles at all. The part taken by Lacedæmon in the expulsion of the Pisistratids was an equally unpalatable topic at Athens. See note 213 on i. 63, and that on v. 65, παρίστησαν . . . ἐκχωρήσαι ἐκ τῆς Ἀττικῆς.

¹³⁹ τὸν αὐτοῖσι Ἀμασις . . . ἔπεμψε δῶρον. This would imply an alliance with the Egyptian king; and it is strange that Herodotus, where he is enumerating the Hellenic connexions of Amasis (ii. 178—182), does not give the least hint of such a thing.

¹⁴⁰ ἢ τὸν κρητήρα. See the description of this bowl above, i. 70. Of the thoras PLINY speaks as if each thread was a composite twist of 365 smaller ones (N. H. xix. 1). It was celebrated in song as being proof against the blow of a weapon. (ÆLIAN, H. A. ix. 17.)

48 Συνηπελάβοντο δὲ τοῦ στρατεύματος τοῦ ἐπὶ Σάμον, ὥστε

The Corinthians readily assist in the expedition, from an old quarrel with the Samians, who rescued some children sent by Perianther to the Sardinian slave-market; which rescue is still commemorated by a festival at Samos.

¹⁴¹ καὶ Κορινθιοὶ προθύμως. It seems likely that at this time Anaxandrides was king of Sparta, and that the party of which the Herodotean Sosicles (v. 92) is the representative was in the ascendant at Corinth. This party would favour the aristocratic Dorian as opposed to the Achæan blood. See note on v. 75, Κορινθιοὶ πρῶτοι σφὶ αὐτοῖσι δόντες λόγον.

¹⁴² κατὰ δὴ. Two MSS have κατὰ δὲ, and Gaisford follows them. But the sentence appears to be a note by a later hand, and to result from a conjecture founded upon the expression γενεῇ πρότερον τοῦ στρατεύματος τούτου. Hence the origin of the word γεγονός, which if Gaisford's reading be followed, becomes not merely superfluous after γενόμενον, but also inelegant from the causeless change of tense.

¹⁴³ Ἀρτέμιδος. The Artemis of Samos appears to have been a goddess identical in character with the one in the Linnæum at Sparta, at whose altar boys were scoured. The temple was called Ταυροπόλιον. If the existing MSS of STRABO are to be trusted, it was not in the island Samos itself, but in the little islet Icaria, 80 stades distant (xiv. p. 172). But STRAPHANUS BYZANTINUS (sub v. Ταυροπόλιον) appeals to Strabo, and speaks of it as in the island itself. From the circumstance that the Here in the great temple bore also the name of Parthenia (which indeed was said to be her earliest; see SPANHEIM on Callimachus, Hymn. Del. 48), it seems not unlikely that an early Artemis-ritual was taken up into the worship at the Heræum, and that Herodotus is here speaking of some chapel in that building.

¹⁴⁴ ἐς τοῦτο δὲ τότε ἐγίνετο. Most of the MSS have οἱ after δὲ, which gives no sense, but appears to be a relic of some various reading, it being impossible to conceive how such a corruption could arise out of the present text.

¹⁴⁵ νῦν δὲ αἰεὶ . . . οἱ Κορίνθιοι. The text as it stands is obviously corrupt, but it is not easy to correct it with any thing like certainty. Schaefer and Schweighauser consider that ἀλλήλοισι is a gloss of ἑωυτοῖσι, and simply discard it. But even then the sentence does not run well. I am inclined to think the text an union of two different readings:

νῦν δ' αἰεὶ, ἐπεὶ τε ἔκτισαν τὴν νῆσον {εἰς ἀλλήλοισι διάφοροι· τούτων ὅν εἵκεν} ἀ-μνησικάκεον κ.τ.λ.

¹⁴⁶ τὴν ἑωυτοῦ γυναῖκα Μέλισσαν. DIOGENES LAERTIUS (i. 94) gives Lysida as the real name of Perierander's wife, but says that he himself called her Melissa. It may be doubted whether the story of his wife being called by that name did not arise from a misunderstanding of an equivocal phrase (συνεῖναι). See note on γ. 92. Diogenes does not give his authority for the above fact, but immediately afterwards he quotes Heraclides Ponticus for the extent of the sovereignty of Lysida's father Procles.
¹⁴⁷ Ἐπιδαύρου τύραννος. The tomb of Melissa at Epidaurus is mentioned by PAUSANIAS (ii. 28. 4). A Procles, too, was the leader of the colonists of Samos which came from Epidaurus.

¹⁵² ὅσῃν δὴ εἶπας, “having specified the amount, whatever it was.” See note 525

^a αὐτοῖσι. Schweighæuser attempts to defend this reading by showing that αὐτὸς is not uncommonly used for εαυτός, and εαυτός sometimes in the sense of ἐμαυτός. But such reasoning is very unsatisfactory; and it is more likely that the word is a corruption for οἰκίῳσι, ἐν οἴκοις meaning “in the family.”

¹⁵⁴ [καὶ ἐξώγησε.] These words appear to me to have crept into the text from the margin, where ἐξώγησε was probably placed, not as a gloss, but as an alternative reading of the second εἰλε.

¹⁵⁵ ἀνακρίσιος. The manuscripts S and V have ἀποκρίσιος, which is adopted by Bekker. No doubt it is the better reading, if the meaning of the text be that the son did not deign even to answer the messenger.

But ἀνακρίσιος would give a very good sense, viz., ‘that the son did not think it worth while to put any question to him,’ i. e. as to the circumstances of the case, in order that he might judge how far it would be necessary for him to have any dealings with his father.

¹⁵⁸ ἐν Πιτάνῃ συνεγεγόμεν. Pitane was a small deme of Laconia on the banks of the Eurotas. It is quite plain that the details of the assault upon Samos are due to the Archias spoken of as belonging to it. Perhaps it may also be thought that the chronology of the transaction rests upon the same authority. The anecdote of the Samian failure in Laconicism can hardly come from any other source than a Lacedæmonian one, and its date is fixed by the recollection of a man whose grandfather was killed in the expedition which followed the embassy. But there are one or two circumstances in the story which are very instructive with reference to the composition of Herodotus's work. The description of the site of the action is given in the terms which would be employed by a person quite familiar with the spot. A question arises, does this accuracy come from Archias or from his auditor? It can scarcely be doubted that it comes from the latter. Archias (the distinguished soldier) would not have his wife with him on service, and his son Samius seems to have been a posthumous child. In the way of oral tradition therefore it is not likely that the topography of Samos would have been transmitted to the second Archias. But Herodotus himself probably resided long in Samos and was familiar with the place; hence he could supply a topographical skeleton to the Laconian's narrative. On the other hand, the younger Archias is obviously the sole authority for the distinction of a public funeral having been bestowed on his grandfather. Herodotus most unmistakeably intimates that in Samos he never heard of such a thing, by putting forward, as he does, the two facts which the other accounted for in a way so creditable to his family,—those of his father having been named Samius and he himself paying particular attention to inhabitants of that island.

¹⁵⁹ Λακεδαιμόνιοι Δωριεὺς. This phrase is a very extraordinary one, and it is not impossible that Λακεδαιμόνιοι has crept in from being a marginal annotation to limit Δωριεὺς. But possibly the expression is used to denote the Lacedæmonians since they became Dorized, as contradistinguished from the old Achæo-Minyæan Lacedæmonians. Thus PAUSANIAS says that the Achéans at a subsequent time, proud of their achievements against the Trojans, Λακεδαιμονίους Δωριεὺς ἀπηξίουσιν σφισιν ἡγήσασθαι (vii. 6. 3). As Menelaus was at the siege of Troy with his troops, this fact by itself would prevent Λακεδαιμόνιοι from standing alone in the text without some qualification. And perhaps there is another reason for putting in the expression Δωριεὺς. See note on v. 41.

¹⁶⁰ ὁμοῖα τοῖσι πλουσιωτάτοις. Compare § 8, above: ὁμοῖα τοῖσι μάλιστα.

¹⁶¹ φράσασθαι. This is the reading of all the MSS but three, which have φράσασθαι. Perhaps the true reading is φράξασθαι. "Then indeed a man of intelligence is wanted, to get them fenced in against wooden regiment and scarlet herald." The meaning of the oracle of course was that their wealth would expose them to the descents of pirates upon them, when there was such evidence of it afforded by the facing their public edifices with Parian marble.

They purchase the island Hy-dria off the coast of Pelopon-nesus of the Hermio-niana, and put the Trazenians in possession of it. Then they form a settlement in Crete, but in the sixth year are made slaves by the Ægine-tæ out of an ancient feud.

Παρὰ δὲ Ἑρμιονέων νῆσον ἀντὶ χρημάτων παρέλαβον, Ἐδρέην τὴν ἐπὶ Πελοποννήσῳ, καὶ αὐτὴν Τροϊζηνίοισι παρακατέθεντο· αὐτοὶ δὲ Κυδωνίην τὴν ἐν Κρήτῃ ἔκτισαν¹⁶², οὐκ ἐπὶ τούτῳ πλέοντες, ἀλλὰ Ζακυνθίους ἐξελοῦντες ἐκ τῆς νήσου ἔμειναν δ' ἐν ταύτῃ καὶ εὐδαιμόνησαν ἐπ' ἔτεα πέντε [ὥστε τὰ ἱρὰ τὰ ἐν Κυδωνίῃ ἑόντα νῦν οὐτοὶ εἰσὶ οἱ ποιήσαντες καὶ τὸν τῆς Δικτύνης νηόν¹⁶³.] ἔκτεθ' δὲ ἔτει Αἰγινῆται¹⁶⁴ αὐτοὺς ναυμαχίῃ νικήσαντες ἠνδραποδίσαντο μετὰ Κρητῶν καὶ τῶν νηῶν καπρίους ἐχουσέων τὰς πρῶρας ἠκρωτηρίασαν, καὶ ἀνέθεσαν ἐς τὸ ἱρὸν τῆς Ἀθηναίης ἐν Αἰγίνῃ. ταῦτα δὲ ἐποίησαν ἔγκοτον ἔχοντες Σαμίοισι Αἰγινῆται· πρότεροι γὰρ Σάμιοι ἐπ' Ἀμφικράτεος βασιλεύοντος ἐν Σάμῳ στρατευσάμενοι ἐπ' Αἰγίαν, μεγάλα κακὰ ἐποίησαν Αἰγινῆτας καὶ ἔπαθον ὑπ' ἐκείνων. ἡ μὲν αἰτὴ αὕτη.

¹⁶² αὐτοὶ δὲ Κυδωνίην τὴν ἐν Κρήτῃ ἔκτισαν. This can hardly be the foundation of a city where none existed before; for the origin of Cydonia is referred by various traditions to a much earlier time, and indeed it was by some regarded as the most ancient of all the Cretan cities ("ut Græci dicere solent, urbium matrem Cydoniam," FLOPUS, iii. 7). It would seem most likely that the settlement formed by these Samians was in the immediate neighbourhood of the harbour of Khania, a most favourable situation for a nest of pirates, the mouth of the port being very narrow, and capable of being closed by a chain. SCYLAX calls Cydonia λιμὴν κλειστός, and another geographer describes it as having βράχη at the entrance of the harbour. These are recognized in some sunken rocks running half a mile from the western point. (FASHLEY, Travels in Crete, i. p. 14.) The ancient city would probably be on the mountain Tityrus, the site of the Dictynæan temple καὶ εὖρος ὁκτώ ἐκάτερον πόδες· διὰ παντὸς δὲ αὐτοῦ ἄλλο ὄρυγμα εἰκοσῖπηχυ βάθος ὁράνκεται, τρίπουν δὲ τὸ εὖρος· δι' οὗ τὸ ὕδωρ ὀχετεύομενον διὰ σωλῆνων παραγίνεται ἐς τὴν πόλιν, ἀγόμενον ἀπὸ μεγάλης πηγῆς· ἀρχιτέκτων δὲ τοῦ ὀρύγματος τούτου ἐγένετο Μεγαρεὺς Εὐπαλῖνος Ναυστρόφου. τοῦτο μὲν δὴ ἐν τῶν τριῶν ἐστί. δεύτερον δὲ, περὶ λιμένα χώμα ἐν θαλάσσῃ βάθος κατὰ εἰκοσι ὀργυιῶν μήκος δὲ τοῦ χώματος μέζον δύο σταδίῳ. τρίτον δὲ σφί ἐξέργασται νηὸς μέγιστος πάντων νηῶν τῶν ἡμεῖς ἴδμεν τοῦ ἀρχιτέκτων πρῶτος ἐγένετο Ῥόικος Φίλεω ἐπιχώριος. τούτων εἵνεκεν μᾶλλον τι περὶ Σαμίων ἐμήκυνα.

(STRABO, x. p. 377). This is, according to Pococke, about 5 miles ss.w. of the modern Khania, and some ruins still exist there. Strabo makes it 30 stades from the sea. Khania is situated in lat. 35° 28', long. 24° 1'.

¹⁶⁴ Αἰγινῆται. STRABO (viii. c. 6. p. 207) mentions the Æginetæ as having sent colonists to Cydonia. Perhaps this was after the destruction of the Samian pirates described in the text.

¹⁶⁵ χρονίζοντι περὶ Αἴγυπτον καὶ παραφρονήσαντι. This would be, according to the Egyptian accounts, after the return from Ethiopia. See note 107, above.

¹⁶⁶ αὐτῶν. Gaisford, with the majority of the MSS, has αὐτόν. But the reading in the text is sanctioned by one MS, and is not likely to have grown out of the other by an arbitrary alteration. The αὐτοὶ Πέρσαι appear rather as an aristocracy contradistinguished from οἱ πολλοί.

¹⁶⁷ εἰδείσαν, "made sure," as ἐπίστασθαι is used elsewhere. See note 421 on i. 122.

¹⁶⁸ ἦν τε δὴ ὁμοῖος . . καὶ δὴ καί. See note 6 on i. 1. The sentence is to be translated: "Now, not only was he like this Smerdis in person, but he even had the same name Smerdis." The Behistan inscription gives Gomates as his real name.

¹⁶⁹ Πατιζέλης. DIONYSIUS of Miletus,

(who wrote contemporaneously with Hecataeus,) related that the name of this individual was Panzuthe. Perhaps Herodotus wrote Πατιζέλης. The ν was probably silent in the Persian equivalent form, as in Vidafrana, the equivalent of Intaphernes. See note 201, below.

¹⁷⁰ εἰσε ἄγων ἐς τὸν βασιλεῖον θρόνον. This picturesque feature in the narrative, expressing the intention that there should be ocular evidence of Smerdis being alive, existed also in the story related by Ctesias (ap. Photium, p. 37) says that the Magian Sphendadates, who had been scourged by Tanyoxarces (see note 84, above), fled to Cambyses, and accused his brother of meditating revolt. This charge was confirmed by Tanyoxarces

τοῦτο, κήρυκας τῇ τε ἄλλῃ διέπεμπε καὶ δὴ καὶ ἐς Αἴγυπτον, προερέοντα τῷ στρατῷ, ὡς Σμέρδιος τοῦ Κύρου ἀκουστέα εἶη τοῦ λοιποῦ, ἀλλ' οὐ Καμβύσεω. being casually prevented from obeying the summons of Cambyzes to come to him. Amytis, the mother of the two brothers, suspecting the real state of the case, endeavoured to remove suspicions from the mind of Cambyzes; but although professing to be convinced by her, she determined to kill his brother, who, at last, on the third summons, had come, and had been received in a friendly manner. In order to avoid the reproaches of his mother, Cambyzes devised, at the suggestion of the Magian, an extraordinary scheme. He gave public orders that Sphenadates should be slain for having defamed the king's brother; but really put the brother to death, and afterwards dressed the Magian in his robes and treated him as if he were Tanyoxarces. Artasyras, Bagapates, and Izabates were the only parties privy to this transaction. Labyzus (the chief of Tanyoxarces' eunuchs) was sent for by Cambyzes, and shown the Magian sitting in state dressed out; and on being asked if he thought it was Tanyoxarces, answered 'Of course it was.' The pretender was sent to Bactria, and performed all the functions of government as Tanyoxarces until—five years afterwards—the circumstances of the case were related to Amytis by an eunuch whom the Magian had beaten, on which she demanded of her son that he should be given up to her. He refused to do so; upon which she cursed him and poisoned herself. All sorts of evil omens now beset him; his mother appears to him at night threatening him with vengeance for his cruelty; and, finally, after arriving at Babylon, he wounds his thigh with his dagger while "whittling" a stick for amusement, and dies on the eleventh day, after reigning 18 years.

¹⁷² ἔθαψά μιν χερσὶ τῆσι ἐμῶν τοῦ. These words seem compatible only with the former of the two accounts of Smerdis's death mentioned in § 30, above.

¹⁷³ Ἀστυάγεια τὸν Μῆδον ἐπαναστήσεσθαι. The mention of Astyages, under such circumstances, is remarkable. According to the main account followed by Herodotus, no violence appears to have been offered to him. (See i. 130.) But there was also a very different narrative, preserved by Ctesias (ap. Photium, p. 36). According to this, Petesaces, an eunuch, is sent by Cyrus to fetch Astyages from the Barcanians to see his daughter Amytis, and by the advice of Ebaras leaves him in the desert to perish by hunger. His corpse remains uninjured and guarded by lions, until it is found and magnificently buried. It would almost seem that some such tradition of a death, similar in its mysteriousness to that of Smerdis, is referred to by Praxaspes. There is an especial propriety in the expectation of the resurrection of Astyages, as he was the last sovereign of the Medians; and it is quite clear that the revolt headed by the Magians was, or at least went together with, a counter-revolution attempted by that nation against Persian supremacy. See note on § 65, below.

¹⁷⁴ ἐξ ὅτου βασιλεὺς Καμβύσης ἤλασε ἐς Αἴγυπτον, οὗ κω ὅπωπα. Here again there is a glimmering of the Persian tradition (see note 83, above), according to which Bartius was slain by Cambyses antecedently to the Egyptian expedition.

¹⁷⁶ τοῦ κουλεοῦ τοῦ ξίφους ὁ μύκης ἀποπίπτει. Kenrick well remarks that the Persian dirk was worn on the right thigh, as appears from the sculptures. (See also
vii. 61.) Hence, if the μύκης (the knob by which the scabbard was capped at the lower end) dropped off, the point of the weapon would be left bare, and a dangerous wound might readily be inflicted on the wearer in the action of leaping on to his horse.

¹⁷⁷ καιρῇ, sc. πληγῇ, “a mortal wound.” Thus ÆSCHYLUS makes Cassandra pray:

καίρας πληγῆς τυχεῖν, ὡς ἀσφάδαστος, αἰμάτων εὐδησίμων ἀπορρύντων, ὄμμα συμβάλω τόδε.
(Agam. 1293.)

See note 84 on § 30, above.

¹⁸⁰ ὡς τότε ἐπειρέσμενος ἐπίθeto τῆς of this story may be compared with the death of the Duke of Suffolk in Shak-spear's 2nd Part of Henry VI., Act iv.

Scene 1:

SUFFOLK. Look on my George: I am a gentleman:

Rate me at what thou wilt, thou shalt be paid.

WHITMORE. And so am I: my name is Walter Whitmore.

How now? why start'st thou? what, doth death affright?

SUFFOLK. Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is death.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me that by water I should die.

¹⁸¹ ὡς εἰκοσι. The manuscripts S and V omit ὡς. The account preserved by CTESIAS made him die on the eleventh day after his wound. See note 170,
above.

¹⁸² ἐξ οἴκου. Persia, although not the seat of the imperial government in the time of Cambyses, was the native country of the dynasty of Cyrus; and hence this expression is quite appropriate. Above, § 30, the phrase ἐκ Περσέων is used.

and death, after having reigned seven years and five months.

¹⁸³ ὑμῖν. For this use of the dative of the pronoun see note 318 on ii. 113. The interests of the pure Persian blood were affected by the succession passing to a Magian. Translate: "and you have the Magians masters of the royal palace."

¹⁸⁴ μὴ περιῖδειν τὴν ἡγεμονίην αὐτῖς ἐς Μῆδους περιελθούσας. For an explanation of this phrase see note on § 126, below.

¹⁸⁵ ἐς τὸν βασιλέα εἶδον ἀνακλαύσαντα. ÆSCHYLUS presents on the stage a similar scene of the Persian nobles sympathizing with the grief of their monarch by wailing, tearing the hair, and the specially oriental practice of "rending the clothes:" πέπλον δ' ἔρεκε κοιλίαν ἀκμῇ χερσὶν (Pers. 1060).

ἀπήνεκε¹⁸⁶ Καμβύσεια τὸν Κύρου, βασιλεύσαντα μὲν τὰ πάντα ἑπτὰ ἔτεα καὶ μῆνας πέντε¹⁸⁷, ἀπαιδα δὲ τὸ παράπαν ἔοντα ἔρσηνος καὶ θήλεος γόνου. Περσέων δὲ τοῖσι παρσεῦσι ἀπιστίῃ πολλή ὑπεκέχυτο, τοὺς Μάγους ἔχειν τὰ πρήγματα· ἀλλ' ἡπιστάετο ἐπὶ διαβολῇ εἰπεῖν Καμβύσεια τὰ εἶπε περὶ τοῦ Σμέρδιος θανάτου, ἵνα οἱ ἐκπολεμωθῇ πᾶν τὸ Περσικόν· οὗτοι μὲν νυν ἡπιστάετο¹⁸⁸ Σμέρδιω τὸν Κύρου βασιλέα ἀνестεῶντα· δεινῶς γὰρ καὶ ὁ Πηρξάσσης ξἶαρνος ἦν μή μιν¹⁸⁹ ἀποκτεῖναι Σμέρδιω· οὐ γὰρ ἦν οἱ ἀσφαλές, Καμβύσειω τετελευτηκότος, φάναι τὸν Κύρου υἱὸν ἀπολωλεκέναι αὐτοχειρή.

The Magian usurpation lasts for seven months.

Ὁ μὲν δὴ Μάγος τελευτήσαντος Καμβύσειω ἀδεῶς ἐβασίλευσε, ἐπιβατεύων τοῦ ὁμωνύμου Σμέρδιος¹⁹⁰ τοῦ Κύρου, μῆνας ἑπτὰ τοὺς ἐπιλοίπους Καμβύσει ἑς τὰ ὀκτὼ ἔτεα [τῆς πληρώσεως]. ἐν τοῖσι ἀπεδέξατο ἑς τοὺς ὑπηκόους πάντας εὐεργεσίας μεγάλας, ὥστε ἀποθανόντος αὐτοῦ πόθον ἔχειν πάντας τοὺς ἐν τῇ Ἀσίῃ πάρεξ αὐτῶν Περσέων· διαπέμφας γὰρ ὁ Μάγος ἐς πᾶν ἔθνος τῶν ἡρχε, προεῖπε ἀτελεῖσθαι εἶναι στρατηγὸς καὶ φόρου ἐπ' ἔτεα τρία. προεῖπε μὲν δὴ ταῦτα αὐτῶν ἐνιστάμενος ἐς τὴν ἀρχήν.

In the eighth month Otanes discovers the pretender by a stratagem.

Ὁ γδοφ' δὲ μηνὶ ἐγένετο κατάδηλος τρόπῳ τοιῷδε· Ὁτάνης¹⁹¹ ἦν Φαρνάσπεω μὲν παῖς, γένει δὲ καὶ χρήμασι ὁμοῖος τῷ πρώτῳ Περσέων¹⁹². οὗτος ὁ Ὁτάνης πρῶτος ὑπόπτευσεν τὸν Μάγον, ὥς οὐκ εἶναι ὁ Κύρου Σμέρδιος ἀλλ' ὅσπερ ἦν, τῇδε συμβαλλόμενος, ὅτι τε οὐκ ἐξεφοίτα ἐκ τῆς ἀκροπόλεως, καὶ ὅτι οὐκ ἐκάλεε ἐς ὄψιν ἐωυτῷ

¹⁸⁶ ἀπήνεκε, "carried off." In the Behistun inscription Cambyses is made to die of grief upon the Magians obtaining the chief power. And it would seem that STRABO follows a similar tradition (xv. c. 3, fn.), where he says διαδεχόμενος δὲ τοῦτον [Κύρου] Καμβύσης υἱὸς ὑπὸ τῶν μάγων κατελύθη, a statement far more in harmony with the Behistun record than with the story of Herodotus. See note 218 on § 79, below.

¹⁸⁷ ἑπτὰ ἔτεα καὶ μῆνας πέντε. The traditions followed by Ctesias gave a much longer duration to his reign. See note 170, above.

¹⁸⁸ ἡπιστάετο, "they made sure." See note 167, above.

¹⁸⁹ μή μιν. Gaisford has μή μὲν with some of the MSS. But the reading in the text is that of S and V.

¹⁹⁰ ἐπιβατεύων τοῦ ὁμωνύμου Σμέρδιος. Herodotus uses the more correct expression ἐπιβατεύων τοῦ Σμέρδιος ὀνόματος, above, § 63.

¹⁹² ὁμοῖος τῷ πρώτῳ Περσέων. The superior rank of Otanes is clear from the prerogatives reserved for him below, § 84. According to Herodotus's authorities, being the son of Pharnaspes, he would be brother of Cassandane, Cyrus's favourite wife (ii. 1), and consequently uncle of Cambyses and Smerdis, and perhaps of Atoessa. (See the notes 196 and 240, below.)

οὐδένα τῶν λογιμῶν Περσέων ὑποπτεύσας δέ μιν, ἐποίηε τάδε· ἔσχε αὐτοῦ ὁ Καμβύσης θυγατέρα, τῇ οὐνομα ἦν Φαίδιμη¹⁹³. τὴν αὐτὴν δὴ ταύτην εἶχε τότε ὁ Μάγος, καὶ ταύτη τε συνοικέει¹⁹⁴ καὶ τῇσι ἄλλησι πάσῃσι τῇσι τοῦ Καμβύσεω γυναιξί· πέμπων δὴ ὦν ὁ Ὀτάνης παρὰ ταύτην τὴν θυγατέρα ἐπυνθάνετο παρ' ὅτεφ ἀνθρώπων κοιμῶτο, εἴτε μετὰ Σμέρδιος τοῦ Κύρου, εἴτε μετὰ ἄλλου τευ ἢ δέ οἱ ἀντέπεμπε φαμένη οὐ γινώσκειν· οὔτε γὰρ τὸν Κύρου Σμέρδιν ἰδέσθαι οὐδαμὰ, οὔτε ὅστις εἴη ὁ συνοικέων αὐτῇ εἰδέναι· ἔπεμπε δεύτερα ὁ Ὀτάνης λέγων· “εἰ μὴ αὐτῇ Σμέρδιν τὸν Κύρου γινώσκεις, σὺ δὲ παρὰ Ἀτόσσης πύθου ὅτεφ τοῦτφ”¹⁹⁵ συνοικέει αὐτῇ τε ἐκεῖνη καὶ σύ· πάντως γὰρ δὴ κου τὸν γε ἐνωτῆς ἀδελφεὸν¹⁹⁶ γινώσκει” ἀντιπέμπει πρὸς ταῦτα ἡ θυγάτηρ· “οὔτε Ἀτόσση δύναμαι ἐς λόγους ἐλθεῖν, οὔτε ἄλλην οὐδεμίαν ἰδέσθαι τῶν συγκατημένων γυναικῶν· ἐπεὶ τε γὰρ τάχιστα οὗτος ὄνθρωπος, ὅστις κοτέ ἐστι, παρέλαβε τὴν βασιλῆην, διέσπειρε ἡμέας ἄλλην ἄλλη τάξας.” Ἀκούοντι δὲ ταῦτα τῷ Ὀτάνῃ μᾶλλον κατεφαίνετο τὸ πρῆγμα· τρίτην δὲ ἀγγελίην ἐσπέμπει παρ' αὐτὴν λέγουσαν ταῦτα· “ὦ θύγατερ, δεῖ σε γεγονυῖαν εὖ κίνδυνον ἀναλαβέσθαι τὸν ἂν ὁ πατὴρ ὑποδύειν κελεύῃ· εἰ γὰρ δὴ μὴ ἐστὶ ὁ Κύρου Σμέρδης, ἀλλὰ τὸν καταδοκέω ἐγὼ, οὔτοι μιν σοὶ τε συγκοιμώμενον καὶ τὸ Περσέων κράτος ἔχοντα δεῖ χαίροντα ἀπαλλάσσειν, ἀλλὰ δοῦναι δίκην· νῦν ὦν ποιήσου τάδε· ἐπεὰν σοι συνενῶθῃ καὶ μάθῃς αὐτὸν κατυπνωμένον, ἄφασσον αὐτοῦ τὰ ὄντα· καὶ ἦν μὲν φαίνεται ἔχων ὄντα, νόμιζε σεωντὴν Σμέρδι τῷ Κύρου συνοικέειν· ἦν δὲ μὴ ἔχων, σὺ δὲ τῷ μάγῳ Σμέρδι.” ἀντιπέμπει πρὸς ταῦτα ἡ Φαίδιμη φαμένη κινδυνεύσειν¹⁹⁷ μεγάλως, ἦν ποιῇ ταῦτα· ἦν γὰρ δὴ μὴ τυγχάνῃ τὰ ὄντα ἔχων, ἐπιλαμπτος δὲ ἀφάσσουσα

¹⁹⁴ καὶ ταύτην τε συνοικέει. By this course of proceeding he did what was equivalent to proclaiming Cambyses as dead. Compare the counsel of Ahithophel to Absalom (2 Sam. xvi. 20). After such a step no reconciliation was possible. Thus Atossa was the sultana successively of Cambyses, the Magian, and Darius. (See below, § 88.)

¹⁹⁵ τοῦτφ is omitted in S and V.

¹⁹⁶ τὸν γε ἐνωτῆς ἀδελφεόν. If Smerdis had not been Atossa's brother by the same mother as well as father, the familiarity would not by any means have been so certain. If however they were whole brother and sister, they would also be nephew and niece of Otanes (see note 192, above), and hence there would be peculiar propriety in his referring his daughter to her cousin.

¹⁹⁷ κινδυνεύσειν. S and V have κινδυνεύειν.

ἔσται, εὖ εἰδέναι ὡς αἰστώσει μιν ὅμως μέντοι ποιήσιν ταῦτα. ἡ μὲν δὴ ὑπεδέξατο ταῦτα τῷ πατρὶ κατεργάσεσθαι. (τοῦ δὲ Μάγου τούτου τοῦ Σμέρδιος Κῦρος ὁ Καμβύσεω ἄρχων τὰ ὦτα ἀπέτεμε ἐπ' αὐτῇ δὴ τινι οὐ σμικρῇ.) ἡ ὦν δὴ Φαυδίμη αὕτη, ἡ τοῦ Ὀτάνεω θυγάτηρ, πάντα ἐπιτελέουσα τὰ ὑπεδέξατο τῷ πατρὶ, ἐπεὶ τε αὐτῆς μέρος ἐγίνετο τῆς ἀπίξιος παρὰ τὸν Μάγον, (ἐν περιτροπῇ γὰρ δὴ αἱ γυναῖκες φοιτεύουσι¹⁹⁸ τοῖσι Πέρσησι,) ἐλθοῦσα παρ' αὐτὸν ἤνδε ἰπνωμένον δὲ καρτερῶς τοῦ Μάγου, ἤφασσε τὰ ὦτα· μαθοῦσα δὲ οὐ χαλεπῶς ἀλλ' εὐπετέως οὐκ ἔχοντα τὸν ἄνδρα ὦτα, ὡς ἡμέρη τάχιστα ἐγεγόνεε, πέμψασα ἐσήμνηε τῷ πατρὶ τὰ γενόμενα.

Seven of the nobles conspire against him.

Ὁ δὲ Ὀτάνης παραλαβὼν Ἀσπαθίην¹⁹⁹ καὶ Γωβρήν²⁰⁰, Περσέων τε πρώτους ἔοντας καὶ ἐωντῷ ἐπιτηδεωτάτους ἐς πίστιν, ἀπηγγέσατο πᾶν τὸ πρήγμα· οἱ δὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ ἄρα ὑπόπτευν οὕτω τοῦτο ἔχειν, ἀνευείκαντος δὲ τοῦ Ὀτάνεω τοὺς λόγους ἐδέξαντο καὶ ἔδοξέ σφι ἕκαστον ἄνδρα Περσέων προσεταιρίσασθαι, τοῦτον τῷ πιστεύει μάλιστα. Ὀτάνης μὲν νυν εἰσάγεται Ἰνταφέρνεα²⁰¹, Γωβρήης δὲ Μεγάβυζον²⁰², Ἀσπαθίης δὲ Ὑδάρνεα²⁰³. γεγονότων δὲ τούτων ἕξ, παραγίνεται ἐς τὰ Σούσα Δαρεῖος ὁ Ὑστάσπεος ἐκ Περσέων ἥκων²⁰⁴. τούτων γὰρ δὴ ἦν οἱ ὁ πατήρ ὑπαρχος· ἐπεὶ ὦν

¹⁹⁸ ἐν περιτροπῇ γὰρ δὴ αἱ γυναῖκες φοιτεύουσι. See the Book of Esther iii. 11—14.

²⁰⁰ Γωβρήν. This name in its Persian form (Gaubarawa) appears on the Behistun inscription. He is there made son of Mardonius (Marduniya).

²⁰¹ Ἰνταφέρνεα. S and V have Ἰνταφέρνεα. In the Behistun inscription he is called Vidafarna, and made son of Vayaspāra (Veispares).

²⁰³ Ὑδάρνεα. In the Behistun inscription he is called Vidarna, and made son of Bagabigna (Megabignes).

²⁰⁴ ἐκ Περσέων ἥκων. These words are very difficult to explain, as the locality from whence Darius came, and of which his father is represented as satrap, is obviously here regarded as something different from the district of which Susa (where Herodotus makes the murder of the Magian take place) was the centre. Yet elsewhere (see above, § 30) that district is expressed in exactly the same terms, and they are undoubtedly used to signify the region in which was the stammesclasse of the family of Cyrus (see note 182, above). And the same place is certainly meant in i. 210, where it is said of Hystaspes, that he ἦν ἐς Πέρσας, φυλάξαν Κύρῳ τὸν παῖδα Δαρεῖον. The solution of the difficulty is perhaps to be found in the supposition that Herodotus has inadvertently changed the locality of the death of the usurper. The Behistun inscription represents him to have been slain in the fort Siktakhotes, in the province of Nisaea in Media. To kill him there Darius might well have come ἐκ Περσέων.

³⁰⁵ ἐγὼ ταῦτα ἐδόκεον μὲν αὐτὸς μῶνος ἐπίστασθαι. There is nothing in the story as given by Herodotus to explain how Darius should come to entertain this belief, neither is there in the account of the transaction as recorded by Ctesias. Even the statement of the Behistun inscription affords no help unless we suppose that Darius was closely concerned with the death of Bartius before the invasion of Egypt by Cambyzes; and that the termination of the troubles which the inscription speaks of as effected by his death was a benefit purchased at the price of his assassination. See note 212, below.

²¹² καὶ διότι μόνος ἡπίστατο τὸν Σμέρδιος τοῦ Κύρου θάνατον. From Herodotus's story it does not appear how the Magian usurpers should be aware that Prexaspes was the only person cognizant of the real state of the case; although according to the account of the transaction by Ctesias they might very well be so. (See note 170, above.) The very mysterious character of the proceeding appears from the circumstance that Darius too fancied he himself was the only party aware of the death of Smerdis (see note 205, above), although Prexaspes had killed him (§§ 30. 66) and buried him (§ 62) with his own hands. (See Excursus.)

every day for a month. STRABO speaks of a similar practice among the mountaineers of Lusitania: ποιοῦσι ἐκατόμβας ἐκάστου γένους Ἑλληνικῶς· ὡς καὶ Πίνδαρος φησι· πάντα θύειν ἐκατόν (iii. p. 248). The practice alluded to in the text probably arose among the Persians while they were in a barbarous condition, and unfamiliar with a metallic currency; but perhaps was continued in the case of royal largesses after the necessity for it had ceased; just as the high officials at an English coronation are rewarded with the furniture used. Thus Darius gave Mandrocles, the builder of the bridge over the Bosphorus, "ten of every thing:" ἰδωρήσατο πᾶσι δέκα (iv. 88). The royal gifts would probably be such things as had been, during the nomad state of the Persians, necessities of life: robes, armour, horses, asses, drinking cups, and domestic slaves.

¹¹⁷ θείῃ πομπῇ χρωμένους. A proverbial expression to describe that which is done without the least let or hindrance.

Πρῆξάσπεος γενόμενα ἐν βουλῇ ἔχοντες· ἐπεὶ ὦν εἶδον τοὺς ^{gian brothers,} εὐνούχους θεθορυβημένους τε καὶ βοῶντας, ἀνά τε ἔδραμον πάλιν ἀμφότεροι καὶ, ὡς ἔμαθον τὸ ποιούμενον, πρὸς ἀλκὴν ἐτράποντο· ὁ μὲν δὴ αὐτῶν φθάνει τὰ τόξα κατελόμενος, ὁ δὲ πρὸς τὴν αἰχμὴν ἐτράπετο· ἐνθαῦτα δὲ συνέμισγον ἀλλήλοισι· τῷ μὲν δὴ τὰ τόξα ἀναλαβόντι αὐτῶν, ἐόντων τε ἀγχοῦ τῶν πολεμίων καὶ προσκειμένων, ἦν χρηστὰ οὐδέν· ὁ δ' ἕτερος τῇ αἰχμῇ ἡμύνετο, καὶ τοῦτο μὲν Ἀσπαθίην παίει ἐς τὸν μηρὸν, τοῦτο δὲ Ἰνταφέρνεα ἐς τὸν ὀφθαλμόν καὶ ἐστερήθη μὲν τοῦ ὀφθαλμοῦ ἐκ τοῦ τρώματος ὁ Ἰνταφέρνης, οὐ μέντοι ἀπέθανε γε. τῶν μὲν δὴ Μάγων οὔτερος τραυματίζει τούτους· ὁ δὲ ἕτερος, ἐπεὶ τέ οἱ τὰ τόξα οὐδὲν χρηστὰ ἐγένετο, ἦν γὰρ δὴ θάλαμος ἐσέχων ἐς τὸν ἀνδρεῶνα, ἐς τοῦτον καταφεύγει, θέλων αὐτοῦ προσθεῖναι τὰς θύρας· καὶ οἱ συνεσπίπτουσι τῶν ἑπτὰ δύο, Δαρεῖός τε καὶ Γωβρύης· συμπλακέντος δὲ Γωβρύεω τῷ Μάγῳ, ὁ Δαρεῖος ἐπεστεῶς ἠπύρει, οἷα ἐν σκότει προμηθεύμενος μὴ πληῖξῃ τὸν Γωβρίην· ὁρῶν δέ μιν ἀργὸν ἐπεστεῶτα ὁ Γωβρύης, εἶρετο ὃ τι οὐ χράται τῇ χειρὶ; ὁ δὲ εἶπε· “προμηθεύμενος σέο, μὴ πληῖξω” Γωβρύης δὲ ἀμείβετο· “ὦθι ^{who are at last slain.} καὶ δι' ἀμφοτέρων τὸ ξίφος” Δαρεῖος δὲ πειθόμενος, ὥς τε τὸ ἐγχειρίδιον καὶ ἔτυχέ κως τοῦ Μάγου.

Ἀποκτείναντες δὲ τοὺς Μάγους καὶ ἀποταμόντες αὐτῶν τὰς 79 κεφαλὰς, τοὺς μὲν τραυματίας ἐωυτῶν αὐτοῦ λείπουσι, καὶ ἀδυνασίης εἵνεκεν καὶ φυλακῆς τῆς ἀκροπόλιος· οἱ δὲ πέντε αὐτῶν ἔχοντες τῶν Μάγων τὰς κεφαλὰς, ἔθειον ἔξω βοῇ τε καὶ πατάγῳ χρεώμενοι· καὶ Πέρσας τοὺς ἄλλους ἐπεκαλέοντο, ἐξηγεόμενοι τε τὸ πρῆγμα καὶ δεικνύοντες τὰς κεφαλὰς· καὶ ἅμα ἔκτεινον πάντα τινὰ τῶν Μάγων τὸν ἐν ποσὶ γινόμενον. οἱ δὲ Πέρσαι, μαθόντες τό τε γεγονός ἐκ τῶν ἑπτὰ καὶ τῶν Μάγων τὴν ἀπάτην, ἐδικαλεῦν καὶ αὐτοὶ ἕτερα τοιαῦτα ποιεῖν σπασάμενοι δὲ τὰ ἐγχειρίδια, ἔκτεινον ὅκου τινὰ Μάγον εὗρισκον· εἰ δὲ μὴ νῦν ἐπελθοῦσα ἔσχε, ἔλιπον ἂν οὐδένα Μάγον. ταύτην τὴν ἡμέρην θεραπεύουσι Πέρσαι ^{which is commemorated by a festival.} ²¹⁸ κοινῇ μάλιστα τῶν ἡμερέων καὶ ἐν αὐτῇ ὀρτὴν μεγάλην

²¹⁸ ταύτην τὴν ἡμέρην θεραπεύουσι Πέρσαι. It is likely that the account which Herodotus gives of the Magian usurpation springs primarily from the popular story which the travelling merchants who had been present at the Per-gian festival would receive of its origin,—in which, naturally, the political character of the movement would vanish in comparison of the personal adventures of its principal agents. But in the inscription of Behistun the other side of the matter shows itself.

Story of the political discussion between the conspirators.

Otanes advocates a common-wealth;

Ἐπεὶ τε δὲ κατέστη ὁ θόρυβος καὶ ἐκτὸς πέντε ἡμερέων ἐγένετο, ἐβουλευόντο οἱ ἐπαναστάντες τοῖσι Μάγοισι περὶ τῶν πρηγμάτων πάντων καὶ ἐλέχθησαν λόγοι ἄπιστοι μὲν ἐνίοισι Ἑλλήνων, ἐλέχθησαν δ' ὧν ²²⁰. Ὀτάνης μὲν ἐκέλευε ἐς μέσον Πέρσῃσι καταθεῖναι τὰ πρήγματα, λέγων τάδε " ἐμοὶ δοκεῖ, ἓνα μὲν ἡμέων μούναρχον μηκέτι γενέσθαι· οὔτε γὰρ ἡδὺ οὔτε ἀγαθόν· εἴδετε μὲν γὰρ τὴν Καμβύσειω ὕβριν ἐπ' ὅσον ἐπεξήλθε, μετεσχίκατε δὲ καὶ τῆς τοῦ Μάγου ὕβριος. κῶς δ' ἂν εἴη χρήμα κατηρητημένον μουναρχίῃ, τῇ ἔξεστι ἀνευθύνῃ ποίεω τὰ βούλεται; καὶ γὰρ ἂν τὸν ἄριστον ἀνδρῶν πάντων, σπάντα ἐς ταύτην τὴν ἀρχὴν, ἐκτὸς τῶν ἐωθότων νοσημάτων στήσῃε· ἐγγίνεται μὲν γὰρ οἱ ὕβρις ὑπὸ τῶν παρεόντων ἀγαθῶν, φθόνος δὲ ἀρχήθεν ἐμφύεται ἀνθρώπῳ· δύο δ' ἔχων ταῦτα, ἔχει πᾶσαν κακότητα· τὰ μὲν γὰρ ὕβρι κεκορημένος ἔρδει πολλὰ καὶ ἀτάσθαλα, τὰ δὲ φθόνῳ. καίτοι ἄνδρα γε τύραννον ἀφθονον ἔδει εἶναι, ἔχοντά γε πάντα τὰ ἀγαθὰ· τὸ δ' ὑπεναντίον τούτου ἐς τοὺς πολίτας πέφυκε· φθονεῖ γὰρ τοῖσι ἀρίστοισι περιεοῦσί τε καὶ ζῶουσι, χαίρει δὲ τοῖσι κακίοις τῶν ἀστῶν, διαβολὰς δὲ ἄριστος ἐνδέκεσθαι. ἀναρμοστότατος δὲ πάντων ἦν τε γὰρ αὐτὸν μετρίως θωυμάζῃς, ἄχθεται ὅτι οὐ κάρτα θεραπεύεται· ἦν τε θεραπευὴ τις κάρτα, ἄχθεται ἅτε θωπή. τὰ δὲ δὴ

In it Gomates the Magian is represented as rising and heading a rebellion in which the whole state joined, and Cambyzes as dying of grief at the intelligence. The rebellion was of a religious character. "The state became heretical, the lie abounding both in Media and Persia and in the other provinces." After the death of Gomates, Darius becomes king, prohibits the Magian worship, and "restores the sacred chants and ritual of Ormuzd, entrusting it to the families which Gomates had dispossessed, and establishing the kingdom as in the days of old." Glimpses of this historical fact show themselves here and there in other portions of Herodotus's work, as has been repeatedly remarked. See note 439 on i. 130; note 204, above; note 238, below; and the Excursus at the end of this book on § 74.

Called, that is, by a Persian name, of which Μαγοφόνια is the Greek equivalent. See note 490 on ii. 158.

²²⁰ ἐλέχθησαν δ' ὧν, "nevertheless, spoken they were." So iv. 5, ἐμοὶ μὲν οὐ πιστὰ λέγοντες, λέγουσι δ' ὧν, and 82, ἔλεξε, οὔτε εἰ ψευδόμενος οὔτε εἰ ἀληθέα λέγων ἔχω σαφηνέως εἶπαι, ἔλεξε δ' ὧν. Herodotus elsewhere (vi. 43) introduces the fact of Mardonius having established democracies in the Asiatic towns to remove the scepticism of those Greeks who disbelieved the story of Otanes recommending a popular government to the Persians. It is however scarcely to be conceived that he desired to impress on his auditors the belief that the speeches as he gives them were delivered. See the passage of PLATO cited in note 113 on i. 32.

²³¹ ονομα πάντων κάλλιστον ἔχει ἸΣΟΝΟΜΙΗΝ. The effect of a name, which is always powerful over men's minds, was especially strong with the Greeks from the time at which dialectical pursuits began to prevail. Instances continually occur in the literature of this period of false reasoning, arising simply from the confusion between logical notions and the objects in rerum natura from which those logical notions were abstracted. Hence certain political writers alluded to by ARISTOTLE (Politie. iv. p. 1294, a) maintained εἶναι τὸν ἀδυνάτουν τὴν μὴ εὐνομεῖσθαι τὴν ἀριστοκρατουμένην πόλιν, ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ ἀριστοκρατεῖσθαι τὴν μὴ εὐνομεμένην. EURIPIDES expands the sentiment expressed by Otares in a way which shows the attraction that the superficial analogies derived from words possessed for his countrymen. (Phæn. 535):

κείνο κάλλιον, τέκνον,

²²⁸ πάντα τὸν βουλούμενον τῶν ἐπτὰ. In later times it was a point of heraldic honour with the sovereigns of Cappadocia to trace their descent from this aristocracy of seven, no less than from Achæmenes. They were said to be descended from an Atossa, the sister of Cambyses, father of Cyrus. She had (it was said) married Pharnaces, king of Cappadocia. The issue of this marriage was Gallus. He had a son Smerdis, and Smerdis a son Artamnes. Artamnes was the father of Anephas, a man distinguished for personal prowess, who was one of the seven conspirators, and, as a reward for his efforts, received Cappadocia free from tribute as a fief. (DIODORUS ap. Photium. Bibl. p. 382.) JOSEPHUS (Bell. Jud. xxiv. 2) makes Glaphyra, daughter of Archelaus, speak of her descent from Darius, the son of Hystaspes,—possibly from a confusion of Atossa the sultana with her great aunt. For a similar pedigree of Mithradates see APPIAN and POLYBIUS (cited in note 419 on i. 121).

²²⁹ ἄλλοθεν ἢ ἐκ τῶν συνεπαναστάντων. In the same way the Bacchiadæ at Corinth ἐβίβον καὶ ἡγοντο ἐξ ἀλλήλων (v. 92).

²³⁰ ἅμα τῷ ἡλίῳ ἀνιόντι. The time of sun-rise would of course be a sacred one with Fire-worshippers, and consequently fitted for the observance of an omen.

²³¹ ἐν τούτῳ ἐστι, “depends upon this.” Compare vi. 109: ἐν σοὶ πῦρ, Καλλιμαχέ, ἐστὶ ἡ καταδουλῶσαι Ἀθήνας ἢ ἐλευθέραις ποιήσαντα μνημόσυνα ληϊσθαι.

which succeeds, and is followed by an omen from the heavens.

Another version of the artifice.

Οἱ μὲν δὴ φασὶ τὸν Οἰβάρεα ταῦτα μηχανήσασθαι, οἱ δὲ τοιάδε, (καὶ γὰρ ἐπ' ἀμφοτέρω λέγεται ὑπὸ Περσέων²³⁷.) ὡς τῆς ἵππου ταύτης τῶν ἄρθρων ἐπιψάυσας τῇ χειρὶ, ἔχοι αὐτὴν κρύψας ἐν τῇσι ἀναξυρίσιν· ὡς δὲ ἅμα τῷ ἡλίῳ ἀνιόντι ἀπίεσθαι μέλλειν τοὺς ἵππους, τὸν Οἰβάρεα τοῦτον ἐξείραντα τὴν χεῖρα, πρὸς τοῦ Δαρείου ἵππου τοὺς μυκτῆρας προσενείκει· τὸν δὲ αἰσθόμενον φριμάσασθαι τε καὶ χρεμέτισαι.

²³³ [ἀγχοῦ τῇ ἵππῳ]. These words appear to me to be a gloss explanatory of the words ἐγχρίμπτων τῇ θηλέῃ, and I have therefore included them within brackets.

²³⁵ ἐξ αἰθρίης, "out of a clear sky." This circumstance caused the incident to be regarded as supernatural. HORACE was induced to give up his physical theory of the cause of thunder by the same phenomenon. "Diespiter," contrary to the usual course of things, "per purum tonantes Egit equos volucrumque currum." (Od. i. 34. 7.) PLINY mentions a magistrate of Pompeii having been killed by lightning on a clear day as one of the portents which accompanied Catiline's conspiracy. (Hist. Nat. ii. c. 51.)

²³⁶ ἐτελέωσε, "perfected." The same word is used in the same sense in Hædr. ii. 10.

²³⁷ [τὸν Δαρεῖον ὡς βασιλέα]. Some of the MSS have μιν τὸν Δαρ. Others omit the words ὡς βασιλέα. Gaisford includes between brackets the last two words only.

²²⁰ γάμους τοὺς πρώτους ἐγάμει Πέρσῃσι. "The first marriages which he made were with Persians," in pursuance, apparently, of the arrangement mentioned above (§ 84). The great influence of Otanes is shown by his near relationship to all the sultanas. He would be (if Atossa and Artystone were daughters of Cassandane) uncle of both, great-uncle of Parmys, and father of Phædime. See the note 192, above. The opposition of Orotes (see below, notes on § 127) becomes very natural if we regard the accession of Darius as brought about mainly by the influence of powerful individuals of the Achæmenid house.

²²¹ τύπον λίθινον ἔστησε. The monument in question was doubtless cut in a rock; but the phrase ἔστησε conveys the notion of a Greek who had in his head the conception of a sculptured group "set up." The true state of the case shews itself in the word ἐνὴν, which presently follows.

²²² ἐπέγραψε. There can be little doubt that the story of Darius and his groom, by whatever channel it came to Herodotus, originally flowed from a popular interpretation of the meaning of the monument described in the text. There is as little doubt that this interpretation is an erroneous one; but it is not easy to point out the source of the error. An extremely ingenious theory has been put forward by Dr. Donaldson, that it arose from a misinterpretation of the arrow-headed inscription on the monument; the words rendered ἱπποκῆμος really being an epithet of Ormuzd, and implying merely "the horse-man." The Behistun inscriptions begin invariably by ascribing the prosperity of Darius to the favour of Ormuzd, who is represented in them by a figure now rendered familiar by the title-page of Mr. Layard's Nineveh. The horse too was sacred to the sun, and might possibly be used as a symbol of Ormuzd. But I am not aware of any evidence that the god was ever represented as a horseman. Indeed the account of a monument must be extremely accurate to allow of carrying such a theory as that of Dr. Donaldson into details; and such is hardly to be expected except from an eye-witness, which Herodotus cannot here be supposed to have been. Compare his account of another rock monument now known, and the note upon it (299, on ii. 106). See also the last note.

²⁴⁴ καὶ πρὸς τοῖσι ἔθνεσι . . . ἔθνεα νέμων. This sentence is an extremely difficult one to construct; and it appears not to have received the author's last touch. It seems clear that he wished to describe the system which he briefly notices in i. 134: proēbaire gar dh to ethnos archon te kai epitrateuon. The plan adopted was apparently a kind of sub-infeudation, the countries in the immediate neighbourhood of the seat of government being regarded in a manner as chief vassals of the empire, and in their turn exercising a sovereignty over their neighbours. Thus, while in the royal schedule all the several nations paying tribute would appear, they would not all pay direct into the treasury; but those nearest to the seat of government would be responsible for the payments of their more distant neighbours. It would seem as if the series of participial clauses in the text were in fact memoranda for the author himself, standing as the materials from which was to be produced a member which should balance the phrase etaxato phorous oi prosienai kata ethnea.

²⁴⁶ τῶν ἐν τῇ Ἀσίῃ. This clause is no doubt added to distinguish the people in question from those of the same name in Thessaly (vii. 132. 176). The Magnesians here meant are those of Magnesia on the Mæander, a powerful aristocracy in early times. (ARISTOTLE, Polit. iv. p. 1289, line 40.) The country was especially favourable for the breeding of horses and the operations of cavalry; and perhaps this was one reason that made it the headquarters for one of the Persian corps of observation (iii. 122). It seems likely that the city was unfortified, for there is no mention of a siege by Mazæres or Hapagagus (i. 161. 162), and judging from the passage of Aristotle, the life of the people must have been very similar to that of the Thessalians, or the modern Hungarians. Magnesia on the Hermus (or Sipylus) probably did not exist in the time of Herodotus.

²⁴⁷ καὶ Λυκίων, καὶ Μιλλέων. See notes on i. 173.

²⁴⁸ εἰς γὰρ ἦν οἱ τεταγμένοι φόρος οὗτος. It is rather remarkable that no notice should be here taken of the Asiatic Dorian cities. If the list be compared with that of the subjects of Croesus (i. 28), it will be seen that this nome includes all the Lydian dependencies on the coast south of the Hermus, with the addition of Lycia (which appears to have remained independent of Croesus; see note 91 on i. 27), and with the exception of those Dorians. Yet some of these cities,—for instance Lindus and Cnidus,—were undoubtedly of considerable commercial importance and closely connected with Egypt. (See ii. 178 and 182.) One is inclined to suspect that they must have rendered some especial service to procure their own exemption from the condition of their neighbours on each side. They certainly made no resistance to Hapagagus (i. 174), and this seems to have been quite with the approbation of the Delphic oracle. We do not find them, like the Ionians and Æolians, either contemptuously mentioned as δούλους πατρῶν of Cambyses (ii. 1), or acting as Persian auxiliaries (i. 171).

²⁴⁹ Λασονίων, καὶ Καβαλίων, καὶ Ὑγεννέων. Several of the MSS have Ἀλυσονίων for Λασονίων, and S and V have Ἀδρενέων for Ὑγεννέων. See note on vii. 77.

²⁵⁰ Θρηίκων τῶν ἐν τῇ Ἀσίῃ. These are the Bithynians. See note on vii. 75, Βιθυνῶν.

²⁵¹ Συρίων. Two of the MSS have Ἀσσυρίων. But in all probability the nation intended is a portion of the Cappadocian, whom the Greeks called Syrians (i. 72; v. 49). That this list comes from a Hellenic source is plain from the circumstance that the Ionian cities are put in the first satrapy. See the entirely different arrangement in the Behistun Inscription cited in note on § 84, below.

²⁵² ἵπποι τε λευκοί. STRABO incidentally mentions (xi. c. 13, p. 454), by way of showing the riches of the Median soil, that whereas Cappadocia, in addition to the money tribute, furnished the Persian king with 1500 horses, 2000 mules, and 50,000 sheep, Media provided nearly the double of these. In the text the only ²⁵³ τάλαντα ἀργυρίου πεντακόσια. See v. 49.

²⁵⁴ Ποσειδίου πόλιος. This town was a little to the north of that part of Syria where Laodicea was subsequently built by Seleucus. (STRABO xvi. c. 2, p. 368.) The neighbouring region was singularly fertile in wine (see the note 19 on § 6, above), and before the building of Laodicea this perhaps might be shipped in Hellenic bottoms at Poseideum, the name of which implies that there was a port there. The same site is said at the present time to be much frequented by ships from the excellent quality of its water. It is however inaccurately described as on the frontier between the Cilicians and Syrians, being three-quarters of a degree south of the pass. But a navigator in the time of Herodotus sailing from Egypt would, on coming off the promontory Poseideum, possibly lay his course for Cilicia, crossing the mouth of the gulf of Issus to the promontory Megarsus. In this case Poseideum (the town) would be the last place in Syria of which he would be cognizant, the whole coast of the gulf of Issus being left out of consideration, and the expression ἐπ' οὐροισι would in such a case be less inappropriate. Possibly too the fact of Mallus, a city just by the promontory Megarsus, having also been, according to the legend (STRABO, xiv. p. 231), founded by Amphilochous, may have contributed to the notion that Poseideum was on the actual frontier. From either of the two places the navigator would stretch away to the other; and on the hypothesis of the geography of this region being constructed from accounts of different navigators, it is not impossible that the two frontier towns, both of them said to be founded by Amphilochous, were confused with one another, and placed as one town Poseideum on the actual frontier. It will be seen from the note on iv. 38, that the Hellenic navigators had a very vague knowledge of the gulf of Issus, probably owing to the jealousy of the Phoenicians.

²⁵⁵ ἀρξάμενον. Larcher compares the construction with the well known one of δέον, ἐξόν, &c. But here the word is apparently in the masculine gender, and the full construction would be ὡς ἀρξάμενον ἀπὸ ταύτης μέχρι Αἰγύπτου λέγει. The whole sentence exhibits an unparalleled slovenliness of style.

²⁵⁶ πλὴν μόρης τῆς Ἀραβίων. If the narrator is supposed to be carrying his auditors down the coast, which seems to be the case, we must suppose him to include in Arabia a portion of the sea-board. What portion this is does not seem clear. See note 16 on § 5, above.

³⁵⁸ Σατταγύδαι δέ, καὶ Γανδάριοι, καὶ Δαδίκαι τε καὶ Ἀπαρύται. Of these four nations the last are unknown. The first appear in the Behistun Inscription. (See note 278, below.) The other two are united in the army of Xerxes, and armed as light troops in the same manner as the Bactrians, Sogdians, and Chorasians (vii. 66).

³⁵⁹ χίλιά οἱ προσήϊε τάλαντα ἀργυρίου.
 If this statement be compared with that given of the resources of the Babylonian satrapy in i. 192, the difference between the payment made to Tritantæchmes the viceroy and the tribute which he sent home to his sovereign is enormous. Taking the artabe at 102 sextarii, and the sextarius at $\frac{1}{1600}$ of an imperial pint (see note 648 on i. 192, and Smith's Dictionary of Antiquities, v. Sextarius), we have for the contents of the artabe 101·0922 imperial pints. The whole tax which came into the hands of Tritantæchmes was $360 \times 101·0922$ (=36393·192) pints of silver, or, reckoning the pint at 10 lbs.
 weight, 363932 lbs. avoirdupois. Now the weight of a Babylonian talent was either 115·2 or 118·286 lbs. avoirdupois.
 (See note 245, above.) Accordingly the annual profit remaining to him after he had paid the tribute of 1000 talents would be $363932 - 115·200$ (=248732) or 363932 $- 118286$ (=245646) lbs. avoirdupois of silver, a sum very far greater than the satraps seem likely ever to have accumulated.
 (See the note on v. 36, ἐπιστάσθαι γὰρ τὴν δύναμιν . . . ἀσθενέα.) The numbers throughout the description of the cadastral system of Darius are obviously wrong somewhere or other; and this appears to me likely to be one place. It seems not impossible that the true reading here is τρισχίλια instead of χίλια. A tribute of this amount would still have allowed Tri-tantæchmes a net profit yearly of about 80 or 160 talents of silver, according as the greater or the less weight be taken for the talent. A couple of years' accumulation of the smaller of these two sums would amount to a fund as large as that which Oroetes pretended to Polycrates he had in his possession (iii. 123). If we suppose the reading τρισχίλια to be the true one, and reckon the tribute from the fourth nome at 360 talents (i.e. taking no account of the 140 which were employed in paying the troops on the spot), we shall get 9600 for the whole amount of the money brought into the treasury exclusive of the gold-dust. This is not so far off the amount named by Herodotus as to make the whole account unintelligible,— which it is as the text stands. Again it seems probable that the money tribute paid by a nome would (unless there were some special reason to the contrary) vary pretty much as the purveyances required from it. Now the produce supplied by the Babylonian nome was one third of that which came from the whole of Asia

 (i. 192); and if the deduction of the tribute from the sixth nome be made from the 9540 or 9880 talents, at which Herodotus lays the whole, there results 8860 or 9200 for the Asiatic tribute, of which 3000 is not very far removed from one-third. Nevertheless, considering the entire difference between the list of countries in the text and that in the Behistun Inscription (see note 278 on § 94), and the vague description of all the nomes here after the first six, it seems impossible to expect so to ascertain the condition of the text as to reconcile Herodotus completely with himself.

³⁶⁰ Παρικανίων. The Paricanii are men-

τίων, πεντήκοντά τε καὶ τετρακόσια τάλαντα νομὸς δέκατος οὔτος. tioned in the catalogue of Xerxes's army, to which they contributed both cavalry and infantry, which were armed alike (vii. 88). They have been considered the same as the Parisceni of i. 101. But see the note on that passage.

²⁶¹ Πανσίκαι. These people are perhaps the same with the Πανσίκαι of STRABO and the Pasica of PLINY (H. N. vi. 19). But it seems hopeless to assign any definite locality to them. The Pantimathi are quite unknown.

²⁶² Βακτριανῶν. The manuscripts S and V have δὲ Βάκτρων, and also Αἰγλῶν for Αἰγλῶν. The form Βάκτριοι is the one used elsewhere by Herodotus; but this is no reason for supposing it to have been used here. ERATOSTHENES used the form Βακτριανολ, and assigned the Oxus as the boundary between them and the Sogdiani, and the Jaxartes as that between the latter and the Sacae. But even in his time it is plain that the positions of the different nomad tribes were most arbitrarily assigned. There was nothing really to distinguish them, their modes of life, as Strabo remarks (xi. c. 8, p. 433), being in all respects nearly alike, their character rude and savage, and unfavourable to commercial intercourse or to the restraints of a settled life. Of the Ægii nothing is known, unless they may perhaps be the same as the Αἰγῆλοι, whom STEPHANUS BYZANT. describes as ἔθνος Μηδικόν.

²⁶³ Πακτυκῆς. S and V have Πακτυ-

²⁶⁴ Σαγαρτίων. See note 433 on i. 125.

²⁶⁵ Σαραγγέων. See note on § 117, below.

²⁶⁶ Θαμαναίων. These people are mentioned below (§ 117).

²⁶⁸ τοὺς ἀνασπάστους καλεομένους. See iv. 204.

²⁶⁹ Κάσπιοι. It is not at all easy to determine the site either of the Sacae here mentioned or of the Caspii who are associated with them in the fifteenth satrapy. It is however not impossible that the latter name is a merely local one. The mountain range which the Greeks called Caucasus was by the natives called Caspium (ERATOSTHENES op. Strabon, xi. c. 2, p. 407), and possibly Κάσπιοι may in fact mean "highlanders." Strabo suggests that probably the natives called the mountain range Caspium from the Caspians, although no people of that name existed in his time (p. 416). A more correct view may be that the sea was distinguished by its name from its proximity to the mountains, in which it would differ from the other great lakes of central Asia. See note on vii. 67, σισάρνας ἐνδεδικότες.

²⁷¹ Ἀρειοί. This is the reading of all the MSS, but in vii. 62. 66 all have the form Ἄριοι.

²⁷² Παρικάνιοι . . οὗτος. This sentence is omitted in F. See above, § 92, where the Paricanii are placed in the tenth nome.

²⁷³ Σάσπειροι. The Saspies and Alarodii in the army of Xerxes were under the same command, and their armament was the same as that of the Colchi (vii. 79). From the nature of this they appear to be mountaineers, of no great importance as an arm of force; and the magnitude of the tribute imposed upon them is not such as to indicate great resources. But the case seems different with the Saspies mentioned in i. 104, and iv. 37. 40. See the notes on these passages. The difference may be explained on the hypothesis that the sources drawn upon by Herodotus are not the same in the two cases. The Matieni are in the army of Xerxes (vii. 72) associated with the Paphlagonians (who here are put in the third nome) under the command of Dotus.

²⁷⁵ Μοσσυνοίκοι. Gaisford adopts the form Μοσσυνοίκοις, with the minority of authorities. The word μόσσαι in the dialect of Thrace meant δοιράττοι πύργοι. (Schol. ad Apollon. Rhod. ii. 379.) Probably the Μοσυνεοὶ were the dwellers in the wooden cottages of the Caucasian alps. See note on vii. 78. The Μοεοὶ are perhaps the Mesech of EZEKIEL (xxvii. 13; xxxviii. 2; xxxix. 1.)

²⁰⁰ τρισκαίδεκάσταςιον λογιζόμενον. This proportion between the values of gold and silver must have been a nearer approach to equality than existed in the time when a present of sufficient gold for the mask of a statue was regarded as a national boon (i. 69), and when the quantity which a man could carry about his person was enough to found a family of predominating political importance (vi. 125). No doubt a great revolution was effected in the exchangeable value by the enormous amount found in the Persian camp after the defeat at Platæa. (See ix. 80.) But the disproportion was still further diminished in the next generation. In the time of Plato gold at Athens was to silver in value as 12 : 1, probably the influx from Asia continually increasing as the intercourse with European Hellas increased. The gold mines in Thrace too probably became more productive, and the silver mines at Laurium (the great source of the silver coinage) less so; to such an extent that Xenophon estimates the ratio as only 10 : 1. This proportion still existed in the time of Menander, and also in that of the Achaean league, although no fresh sources of silver seem to have been opened, and the gold sent into circulation by Philip of Macedon, and yet more by Alexander, must have been immense. Perhaps the additional supply was compensated by the facility for hoarding which the less bulky material afforded, and by the readiness with which it could be converted into ornaments. Strings of ancient gold coins are to this day worn in the hair and sewed on to the dress of the women in both European and Asiatic Greece. The value of gold seems never to have much increased until the discovery of the silver mines of Peru. LINGARD (History of England, ii. 209) says that in the reign of Stephen and Henry II. gold was to silver as 9 : 1. In the reign of John it was 10 : 1, the difference perhaps arising from the exportation through the crusaders. But a continual supply of it seems during the middle ages to have flowed into Europe from Central Asia, where Marco Polo's Travels show that it abounded out of all proportion to silver, being exchanged for it in some places in the proportion of no more than 6 : 1. A very admirable memoir on the subject of the gold and silver money of Greece, by the Earl of Aberdeen, is to be found in Walpole's Turkey, vol. i. pp. 425—446.

²⁰¹ τὸ δ' ἔτι τούτων ἔλασσον ἀπείεις, οὐ λέγω. It is not easy to say exactly what the author meant by this sentence. Possibly it refers to certain gifts in kind which came periodically to the court of the sovereign,—just as in old leases the tenant is often bound to furnish so many pikes in Lent, or brawns at Christmas, in addition to his money rent. Thus PERSIUS speaks of the “piper et pernae, Marsi monumenta clientis” (iii. 75), although it can hardly be thought that the Roman ‘patroni’ would have been well satisfied with only such remuneration for their services. The revenue is in fact the net produce of the land-tax to the sovereign, considered as the absolute owner of the soil. (See notes on ii. 109. 177.) The smallness of the amount as compared with the extent of the empire has caused some surprise. But it must be remembered that this payment would be over and above all purveyances requisite for the public service. See i. 192.

³²³ ἐπεὰν δὲ δεθῇ χρημάτων, κατακόπτει. Darius seems to have been the first to establish a national mint. See note on iv. 166.

³²⁴ ἀπύρου χρυσοῦ, "pure gold," that which has not required the agency of fire to separate it from any baser metal. See note 154 on i. 50.

³²⁵ ἐτάξαντο ἐς τὴν δωρεὴν. The article before δωρεὴν here is perhaps to be accounted for on the principle suggested in note 315 on i. 90. The Colchians agreed to give "the gift," the present symbolizing the acknowledgment of feudal superiority, and thereby constituting a claim to protection. The use of the middle voice implies a consent on the part of the inferior party to the terms concluded with him. (See notes 42 and 243, above.) The payment of tribute would have put them in the position of subjects, the rendering a gift only enabled them to preserve that of allies.

³²⁶ Κανκάσιος. This is the reading of all the MSS except S and V, which have Κανκάσιοι, although two lines below, according to Gaisford, they agree with the rest. Above, in i. 203, 204, S has Κανκάσιος for Καύκασος invariably.

³²⁶ ἑκατὸν παρθένους. These would no doubt be destined for the harem of the Persian monarch, and probably procured from Circassia. See note on vi. 9, ἀνασπαστούς ἐς Βάκτρα.

³⁸⁸ καλέονται δὲ Παδαῖοι. It is likely that these tribes are the same as the one mentioned above, § 38, and § 97; and if so, the name Padai may, like Artai and Arii, be a title. RENNELL (Geogr. of Herodotus, p. 310) conceives them to be the inhabitants of the banks of the Ganges, the name of which is (he says) Padda in Sanscrit. But if a Sanscrit root is to be sought for the word, it seems more likely to be that of patis (dominus). The cannibalism of the people in question, which has caused them to be taken for Scythians by some, seems more likely to have arisen out of religious feelings connected with the doctrine of metempsychosis than out of mere savagery. See the horror they expressed at the idea of burning their parents' bodies (§ 38). STRABO, in an episode interposed in the description of Bactriana, bringing together several hearsay stories περὶ τῶν τελείως βαρβάρων, speaks of a tribe to which he gives the name of Caspians, without attempting to fix their site. (See note 269, above.) They exposed all those who passed the age of seventy in the desert, after having starved them to death, and watched the corpse from a distance. If it was dragged from the couch on which it lay by birds they greatly rejoiced; if by beasts they were less satisfied; but if it remained untouched by either they thought it a great misfortune (xi. p. 445). It seems quite clear that this conduct must have proceeded from a theory of transmigration of the soul into animals more or less elevated in the scale of creation. The case which was dreaded was the transmigration into the body of a reptile.

³⁸⁹ ἐπιχρεώμεναι. DONALDSON (New Cratylus, p. 223) considers that this is an instance of the preposition ἐν having, in composition, a sense of reciprocity; ἐπιχρησθαι, according to his view, meaning "to have an habitual interchange of kindnesses with any one."

²⁹¹ πρὸ γὰρ τοῦ. The manuscripts S and V have πρὸ γὰρ τούτου, which is adopted by Bekker.

²⁹² ὅσον κέγχρος τὸ μέγαθος. Neither this nor the description ἐν κάλυκι αὐτόματον ἐκ τῆς γῆς γινόμενον is applicable to "rice," which has been supposed to be the grain alluded to here and § 97, above. But the author is describing a people far beyond any point to which his own knowledge extended; and it is possible that two distinct articles of food have been confounded.

²⁹³ ἑκαστέρω τῶν Περσέων οἰκεῖν. If a determinate site is to be assigned to these Indians it should perhaps be Scinde, and the western bank of the lower Indus. RENNELL sums up his analysis of the Herodotean account of India thus: "We may conclude that Darius in fact possessed no more of India than what lay contiguous to the Indus and its branches; and also that the limit of our author's knowledge eastward was the sandy desert of Jesselmere (called Registan, the country of sand), and that the rest was described from vague report." (Geogr. of Herod. p. 309.)

²⁹⁴ Κασπατέρφ τε πόλι καὶ τῇ Πακτυκῇ χώρῃ. These two places are coupled together in iv. 44, below, and there it seems nearly certain that Caubul must be meant. On the other hand the Pactyces in the 13th nome cannot be farther east than Georgia. In the army of Xerxes the Pactyces come after the Caspians and Zarangians, and their garb would induce the belief that their country was a cold one (vii. 67). Perhaps the mountaineers of the range between Caubul and Balk were called by this name. That range itself is apparently changed both in position and direction by Herodotus (see note 681 on i. 202), and perhaps the true solution of the difficulty is to suppose that the Pactyces of § 93 and the Pactyes of vii. 67 refer to the valleys on the north side, while the Pactyces in which Caspatyrus lies, and through which one of the tributaries to the Indus flows, is the south side of the same.

²⁹⁵ γίνονται μύρμηκες. This story of Herodotus's has generally been considered a mere fiction; but it seems not unlikely that the animal which he means is the scaly ant-eater (Manis Pentedactyla of Linnæus, or Pengolin of Buffon). This creature is somewhat larger and longer than a fox, and (I am informed on the authority of Mr. Owen) burrows in the hot sandy plains of northern India. Bewick calls it a native of the Indian isles, and says that it lives in woods and marshy places. But it undoubtedly subsists exclusively on ants, and therefore would chiefly be found in the neighbourhood of their nests, which are of enormous size in some parts of India; and as it burrows and conceals itself with great rapidity, it might be easily considered to inhabit these. Although really a mammal, it is in outward appearance more like a lizard or annulose creature. It is covered with large thick scales, and is of a dingy fox-brown colour. On the approach of danger it rolls itself up like a hedgehog, thus securing all the weaker parts of its body, and erecting its scales, it defies the attack even of the tiger. This animal seems to have been quite unknown to the ancients; and STRABO apparently considered that the myrmex was the jackall. This, if any, seems to be the animal he had in his eye (xvi. c. p. 396), where, speaking of the country between the mouth of the Red Sea and the Southern Horn, he says πληθύνει δὲ ἐλέφαντιν ἡ χώρα, καὶ λέουσι τοῖς κα-λουμένοις μύρμηξιν· ἀπεστραμμένα δ' ἔχουσι τὰ αἰδοῖα καὶ χρυσοειδεῖς τὴν χρῶαν, ψιλότεροι δὲ τῶν κατὰ τὴν Ἀραβίαν. That the name myrmex should be given to any animal of the dog or cat kind probably arose from an hypothesis that the creatures described in the text must be of this description, unless the word 'myrmex' is a native one.

²⁹⁶ εἰσὶ δὲ καὶ τὸ εἶδος ὁμοιώτατοι οὗτοι. This is the Aldine reading, and it appears to me to be the true one, but to have slipped out of its right place, which I conceive to have been immediately after the words ἀλωπέκων δὲ μέζονα. Gaisford omits the word οὗτοι. The MSS vary between εἰσὶ δὲ καὶ τὸ εἶδος ὁμοιώτατοι· and εἰσὶ δὲ εἶδος ὁμοιώτατοι αὐτοί. DIO CHRYSOSTOM (Or. xxxv. p. 436) seems to have found the clause in a different place; for he says, having no doubt this passage in his mind, of these myrmeces, οὗτοι δὲ εἰσὶ ἀλωπέκων μέζονες, τὰλλα δὲ ὅμοιοι τοῖς παρ' ἡμῶν. By transposing the clause so as to follow ἀλωπέκων δὲ μέζονα, a sense will be made to result equivalent to that of Dio. Translate: "Well then, in this desert, and in the sand of it there breed ANTS which in size are less indeed than dogs, but larger than foxes. And in point of shape too these last are extremely like: for there are specimens of them to be seen in the possession of the king of the Persians, that have been caught and sent from thence."

 would be natural for a spectator who was no comparative anatomist to suppose a configuration such as is here described, the real fact being that the camel belongs to the class of retromingents, and voids its urine between its hind legs. From the passage of STRABO (cited above in note 295), it would almost seem as if its writer found this clause in his copy of Herodotus applied to the myrmeces.
 ÆLIAN, however, read it where it now stands, with the sole difference of ἀρπε for αἰδοῖα. (Histor. Animal. x. 3.)

The appearance of "four knees" in the hind legs of the camel, arises from the circumstance, that the joint which anatomically answers to the human knee, and which in the ox or horse is concealed, or nearly so, under the skin of the belly, projects a good way below, the belly being pinched in, and the thigh-bone longer in proportion than that of other quadrupeds.
 In fact, the animal kneels upon this joint when he crouches to receive his burden.

²⁹⁹ μεσουσα δὲ ἡ ἡμέρῃ . . . τοὺς Ἰνδοὺς.
 During the heats of the mid-day, the practice in Asiatic Greece, as well as in India, would be to remain under the shade of a dwelling. (See vi. 12.) Hence the sensible heat would not much differ, although a thermometer would have refuted the assertion in the text.

³⁰⁰ ἀποκλιναμένης. This is the reading adopted by Gaisford from the manuscripts F and P. The others have ἀπο- κλινομένης, which might stand. But in that case the phrase would imply "immediately after mid-day," not simply "after mid-day is past." The phrase ἀποκλινομένη μεσαμβρία is illustrated below. See note 318 on § 114.

³⁰¹ ἐς δ' ἐπὶ δυσμῆσι ἔων καὶ τὸ κάρτα part due to the popular idea of the earth being a plane surface, over which the sun passed, rising in the east and setting in the west, and in each case operating most powerfully upon the people supposed to be nearest to him. In accordance with this notion, it was reported that when the sun set in the Western Ocean, a hissing sound arose like that from red-hot iron lem.

It follows, as a natural consequence from this view, that the mid-day heat should be regarded as pretty nearly the same for the whole earth, and that the morning should be deemed the hottest part of the day for the inhabitants of the extreme east.

At the same time, a mere false theory would scarcely have generated this belief unless apparently supported by some actual phenomena. Perhaps in this particular case the real foundation of the error is the enormous sensible variation of temperature between the night and the day in a country much above the level of the sea, and in a southern latitude. Sir JOHN CHARDIN (quoted by Rosenmüller, Das alte u. neue Morgenland, i. § 108) says, that in Lower Asia, in the middle of winter, as soon as the sun is 15° above the horizon, there are no remains of cold, while in the middle of summer the nights are as cold as at Paris in the month of March. In Judæa, "the taking away the cloak" was one of the most galling of the military requisitions to which the peasantry were constantly subjected, the garment being (as the humane law of pledges described it, Exod. xxii. 27. Deut. xxiv. 13) the very "skin" of the poor man after sunset. Compare Job xxiv. 7. The same isotherm (70°) passes through Jerusalem and Cauzul; but the great elevation of the latter place above the sea, and its distance from it, together with the proximity of the snow mountains would cause the oscillation of temperature, both annual and daily, to be very much greater in Afghanistan. At Peshawur the annual oscillation is so great, that while frost lasts till the month of March, the thermometer stands at 128° in the shade in the month of July. (Penny Cyclopædia, i. p. 168.)

³⁰² ὡς δὴ λέγεται ὑπὸ Περσέων. See note 338 on i. 95.

³⁰³ καὶ παραλύεσθαι ἐπελκομένους οὐκ ὁμοῦ ἀμφοτέρους, "as they go in the leading rein come to knock up, first one and then the other." For the use of ἐπελκομένους compare v. 12, ἐτέλκουσα ἐκ τοῦ βραχίονος τὸν ἵππον, and iv. 203, ἐπελκομένους, where see the note. The notion seems to have been to sacrifice first one male camel to the pursuing ants, and then the other, if the necessity should occur. The led animals would be incited to follow the female in the same way as she would be to get home to her foal. For the device of the foal, compare the ballad of the Lochmaben Harper in Scott's Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, vol. i. p. 138. Precisely the same stratagem is said by MARCO POLO to be adopted by the Tartars when making a foray into the country to the north of them, which he imagines to be so obscure and dark that the instinct of the animals alone enables the invaders to find their way back (p. 350).

³⁰⁵ κατέπερ ἡ Ἑλλὰς ἔλαχε. This illustration is not a very apt one, and does not agree very well with what the author says elsewhere, where he gives the palm of climate to Ionia (i. 142). It is not impossible that these two passages belong to different recensions. See the note 482 on i. 142.

³⁰⁶ ὥσπερ ὀλίγον πρότερον εἴρηκα. See § 98.

³⁰⁷ Νισαίων. Some of the MSS. have Νησαίων, which is the form that appears in STRABO (xi. c. 7, p. 427). The region is that which is drained by the river Ochus, which fell into the Caspian. But though the term originally was applied to horses from this district, it seems to have come to be used for animals (perhaps of the same blood) bred elsewhere. See note 297 on ii. 105. STRABO (xi. c. 14, p. 462) speaks of the admirable quality of the Armenian pastures as not being inferior to the Median, adding, ὅστερ οἱ Νησαῖοι ἵπποι καὶ ἐνταῦθα γίνονται, ὅσπερ οἱ Περσῶν βασιλεῖς ἐχρῶντο. RAWLINSON (Geogr. Journal, ix. p. 101) says, "there is every reason to conclude that the Nisean horse came originally from Nesa in Khorasan, and that it is to be identified with some of the Turkoman breeds of the Atak, which are still distinguished throughout Persia for their superior excellence." See note on vii. 40.

³⁰⁸ φέρει καρπὸν εἴρια. This is obviously the cotton. At the same time the graphic description need not, in so simple a case, lead to the conclusion that Herodotus saw the trees himself. See note 219 b on ii. 86.

³⁰⁹ ἐν ταύτῃ λιβανωτός ἐστὶ μούνη χωρέων πασέων φυόμενος. Modern travellers assert that a very inferior kind of frankincense grows in Arabia, and that only in some districts; and that in ancient times, the report of its being produced in Arabia must have arisen from the circumstance of the Arabians being its carriers from India. This is not a bad explanation of Herodotus's statement. (See note on iv. 109.) That the Arabians were the carriers of gold and incense, appears from ISAIAH (lx. 6), and that they were conceived to bring it from the eastern side of the Arabian peninsula, from ii. 8, above. ERATOSTHENES (ap. Strab. xvi. cap. 4, p. 387) points to the same fact. "Following the bend of the coast (ἐγκολπιζον)," after getting out of the Red Sea, he says, "you run along the myrrh-producing country (i. e. Χατταμωτίτις, Hadrarnauti), which carries you south and east, for the space of 5000 stadia, to that where the cinnamon grows; beyond which no one up to this time has ever passed." The cinnamon confessedly comes, and always came, from Ceylon; so that there can be no doubt of the existence of a traffic with India, and apparently by Aden and Bombay, in the earliest times. COLEBROOKE (Asiatic Researches, ix. 381) states that the tree producing frankincense grows in India, between Sone and Nagpoor.

³¹⁴ τὰ ἡμεῖς ἀπὸ Φοινίκων μαθόντες κιννάμωμον καλέομεν. If the cinnamon came into the hands of the Greeks through the Phoenicians,—which the derivation of the name from them seems to prove,—it will probably have come in one of two ways. If it came by sea round into the Arabian gulf, it would be landed at λευκὴ κόμμη, and thence go by land to Petra, the capital of the Nabataei (Nebatois of SS.), an entrepôt of great importance (εἰς ἣν Μεινωτοὶ τε καὶ Γερβαῖοι καὶ πάντες οἱ πησιόχωροι τὰ τῶν ἀρωμάτων φορτία κομίσουσιν). ARTEMIDORUS ap. Strabon. xvi. c. 4, p. 399). From Petra a caravan road led to Rhinocolura, and another to Gaza, from either of which places the spices would find their way in Phoenician bottoms to Tyre. Or, if they were carried by the Gerrhaei in rafts up to Babylon (as is asserted by ARISTOBULUS ap. Strabon. xvi. c. 3, p. 382), and thence, by means of the artificial water communication, brought as far as Thapsacus on the Euphrates, they would come through Tadmor (Palmyra), and Damascus, by land to Tyre. In either case it would be from Phoenicians that the cinnamon came into the hands of the Greeks. The site of the Gerrhaei is placed by ERATOSTHENES on the east coast of Arabia (ἐν βαθεῖ κόλῳ). Their capital was twenty miles from the coast. He stated that they were the great land carriers of the Arabian spices, in which case they would bring them by the former of the two routes just mentioned. A proof of their connexion with the Phoenicians is furnished by the fact, that just south of Gerrha were two islands which went by the names of Aradus and Tyre (two cities of the Phoenician Tripolis), and that the inhabitants of these professed to be colonies from Phoenicia, and certainly had the same religious ritual. (STRABO, xvi. c. 3, p. 382.) The tradition related in i. 1, above, brings the Phoenicians of the Mediterranean from the Persian gulf, thus reversing the relations of the two kindred races, as is so common in Hellenic historical myths. The Gerrhaeans were Chaldean exiles from Babylon.

³¹⁵ τὰ μέλα διαταμόντας. The method of obtaining the cinnamon here described, seems to be another form of the well-known story in the Arabian Nights, of the way in which diamonds were procured from an inaccessible valley. MARCO POLO gives that story, and refers it to the mines of Golconda (p. 302), and the editor of the English translation remarks, that this agency of huge birds appears to have been a matter of general belief in Asia.

³¹⁶ γλοιὸς ἀπὸ τῆς ὕλης. The ladanum is a gum which is produced from several kinds of cistus, exuding as a juice upon the leaves and branches of the shrub. (See Penny Cyclopædia, vol. xiii. p. 629.) THEVENOT describes a plant called Ladum as growing in the island of Naxos. The goats feed on it, and the gum sticks to their beards, which are cut off for the purpose of securing it. It is strange that Herodotus should transplant this practice to Arabia, though the name (ladum) is Arabic.

³¹⁷ ἐπέλκειν. Some of the MSS. have ἀπέλκειν. But this is undoubtedly the true reading. See ἐπελκόμενος, used of the camels held in a leading rein, above, § 105.

³¹⁸ ἀποκλινομένης. This reading is preserved by S, V, α, and appears to me the true one. The other MSS have ἀποκλινομένης. See above, note 300, on § 104. The phrase μεσαμβρία ἀποκλινομένη is itself a remarkable one; for although the word ἀποκλίνεσθαι may be reasonably applied to the μεσημβρινὸς ἥλιος, it cannot properly be so to the μεσημβρία, which is in fact the time (ᾠρη) defined by the highest position of the sun in the heavens. But the time being marked by a motion of the sun in space, the relations of that space are expressed in terms of the time which they mark. The expression εἰ δὲ ἡ σάσις ἡλλακτο τῶν ὥρων (ii. 26) rests upon the same mode of thought. The author speaks of "the position of the seasons," meaning by it "the position of the sun which affects the seasons." See note 12, on ii. 3.

² οὔτε γὰρ ἔγωγε ἐνδέχομαι Ἑριδανὸν τινα καλέεσθαι πρὸς βαρβάρων ποταμὸν, . . . ὥπ' ὅτε τοῦ ἡλεκτρον φοιτᾶν λόγος ἐστὶ. This is a curious instance of a true tradition rejected on grounds which appeared quite satisfactory, but which modern knowledge enables us easily to dispose of. The amber, which is a mineral substance found in beds of lignite, comes chiefly from the southern shores of the Baltic, between Koenigsberg and Memel. In the time of PLINY it used to be brought by the inhabitants of the coast (who called it "glæsum," i. e. glass, TACITUS, Germ. 46) into Pannonia to Carnuntum on the Danube — (a place to be looked for between Vienna and Pressburg). From thence the Veneti conveyed it to the coasts of the Adriatic (N. H. xxxvii. 3); and as nothing is more unchangeable than land routes, while the conditions of civilization remain the same, it seems certain that in the time of which Herodotus is speaking, the substance was brought to the same market; though, doubtless, some may have found its way down the Danube to Istropolis, and thence to the Hellespont.

As for the name Eridanus, its root probably means water, and appears in the words Ro-danus, Don-au, Dan-u-be, Tan-ais, Don, Dan-zig, and possibly also in the word Dan-aus (HESIOD, Fragment lix. ed. Paris, Ἄργος ἄνυδρον ἐν Δαναῶς πόλιν ἐνυδρον, or as STRABO, i. p. 36, gives the line Ἄργος ἄνυδρον ἐν Δαναῶν θέσαν Ἄργος ἐνυδρον) and the river Jordan.

The Greeks generally considered that the substance came from certain Ἠλεκτρίδες νῆσοι in the head of the Adriatic gulf. The story ran, that in one of these there was a statue of tin, and in another, one of amber, made by Dædalus when flying from Minos. In these islands too there was a hot fountain, into which Phaëton was said to have fallen, surrounded by poplar-trees, from whose leaves the amber was said to drop in the form of a gum. (ARISTOTLE, Mirab. Auscult. p. 836.) Under these circumstances it is easy to see how the site of the northern Eridanus should have come to be transferred in popular belief to the Italian river.

That Herodotus should not have been able to find any eye-witness of the northern sea is easily comprehensible. The commercial proceedings of the Greeks began after the goods had been brought down to the ports to which they had access. Between the factory on the Adriatic and the emporium on the Danube, the trade would be in the hands of the Veneti, and between the emporium and the North Sea in those of the Germans.

³²¹ ἐξ ἐσχάτης δ' ὧν ὃ τε κασσίτερος ἡμῖν φοιτᾷ. It is possible that some of the British tin from Cornwall or the Scilly isles came overland the same way as the amber; but it seems more likely that the tin of which Herodotus speaks was the stream tin brought down in the sand of the Guadiana and Guadalquivir (see PLINY, N. H. xxxiv. 16), which two streams confused with each other probably are the "Tartessus" of STRABO. See note 538, on i. 163, and STEPHANUS BYZ. v. Τάρτησος.

³²² λέγεται δὲ . . . Ἀριμασποὺς. The authority for this story is the Arimaspea of ARISTEAS of Proconnesus.

See note on iv. 13. The gold no doubt came by the caravans to Russia from central Asia. See note 280.

³²³ Πάρθων, καὶ Σαραγγέων. Parthia and Zarangia come next to each other in the list of subject countries given by the Behistun Inscription. See note 278, on § 94, above. But the Saranges and Thamansei are by Herodotus put in the fourteenth nome, and the Parthenians and Chorasmiens in the sixteenth. It is perhaps useless to attempt to search for any site representing the valley described in the text. Some have considered the whole story a mere fiction. But no doubt the levying a tax on the supply of water was a practice which prevailed formerly, as it does now, in countries where, as in Persia, artificial irrigation is a necessity. Possibly the origin of the story is to be looked for in the physical character of the Vale of Cashmere with its lakes, combined with the name of the Punjab, and the habits of Persia. However, it must have been framed in a locality north of the Hindoo Koosh. See note 324.

³²⁷ ἀρρωδήσας. Intaphernes was the nominee of Otanes in the second election of conspirators (iii. 70), and therefore probably more closely connected with him than either Hydarnes or Megabyzus were. It is quite clear that Otanes was the most influential of all the Persian chiefs, (see note 192, above,) and, with the exception of Darius, all the conspirators were, directly or indirectly, nominated by him.

³²⁸ ἐκ πάντων τῶν ἀδελφῶν. Among others, Dr. DONALDSON (Transactions of the Philological Society, i. p. 161) has put forward the idea that Herodotus has in this singular tale embodied the sentiments put in the mouth of Antigone in the play of Sophocles. She asserts, that she had done for her brother what she would not have done for a husband or for children, and defends her conduct by the argument:

πῶς μὲν ἂν μοι, παθονόντος, ἄλλας ἦν, καὶ παῖς ἐπ' ἄλλου φανείης, εἰ τοῦδ' ἤμπερον·

μητρὸς δ' ἐν Ἀἰδῶν καὶ πατρὸς κεκευθότων οὐκ ἔστ' ἀδελφὸς ὅστις ἂν βλάσται ποτέ.

(vv. 909—912.)

The great verbal similarity between the expressions of the poet and the historian is patent; and a probable intercourse between Herodotus and Sophocles just about the time at which the Antigone was acted (440 B.C.) is satisfactorily made out. But the argument comes in so strangely in the play,—introduced by the question, τίνας νόμον δὴ ταῦτα πρὸς χάριν λέγω—that it is difficult not to conceive it taken from some popular imported story, rather than the home growth of Sophocles's imagination. If, therefore, there be any truth in the story of PLUTARCH (De Malign. Herod. c. 26), and if Herodotus really recited a portion of his history at Athens before the Antigone was composed, it is perhaps more likely to suppose that Sophocles adapted from him than the converse.

³²⁹ ἄλλοτριώτερος. Gaisford, with the MSS., has ἄλλοτρίωτατος.

³³⁰ κατὰ δὲ κου μάλιστα τὴν Καμβύσειω νοῦσον ἐγένετο τάδε. It is plain from this expression that the story Herodotus is about to tell was not found by him in connexion with the thread of the Persian history. He found no chronology in it except such as was furnished by names of the persons involved. See note 114, on § 39.

³³¹ Ὀροίτης, ἀνὴρ Πέρσης. When this Orætes was appointed by Cyrus, does not appear from any part of Herodotus's history. After the conquest of Sardis, Cyrus appointed Tadaius, a Persian, the military governor (i. 153). Probably after the revolt of Pactyas, Mazares, who appears to have held the supreme military command (i. 156, 161), superseded him, and was regarded as the viceroy. He was succeeded by Harpagus (i. 162), who completed the conquest of the country. So Herodotus leaves the matter in the first book, where he probably is following Helleno-Lydan authorities. Here a Sassian story begins, in which Orætes and Mitrabates (Persians)—Mazares and Harpagus having been Medians—appear as the high officials.

³³² Μιτραβάτεα. Gaistford, and the majority of MSS., have Μιτροβάτεα. But the name seems undoubtedly to be derived from Mithras, and one MS. gives the reading in the text. It is analogous to the Pontine name Mithradates, the bearers of which professed to be Achæmenids. (See note 419 on i. 121.)

³³³ ἐν Δασκυλείῳ. Dascyleum, on the Bithynian coast, was the head-quarters of one of the Persian armies which held that part of Asia which lay within the Halys. Magnesia on the Meander was another principal station (below, § 122). Sardis, although the chief city of the region, does not seem to have been a military head-quarters, although it had a garrison of its own. (See notes on v. 101 and 102.) Probably its commercial importance and its luxury contributed equally to render it an undesirable station for any considerable body of soldiers.

³³⁴ Μύρσον. This name in another form (Μυρσίλος) was the Hellenic equivalent of Candaules. See note 32 on i. 7. Candaules is also made to be himself the son of a Myrsus. The individual here spoken of is probably the same as the one whose death is related afterwards. (v. 121.)

³³⁵ Μίνωος. The manuscripts S and V have Μίνω.

³³⁸ ἐμοὶ γὰρ βασιλεὺς Καμβύσης ἐπιβουλεύει θάνατον. The cause of this jealousy does not appear from any thing in Herodotus; but following the clue furnished by the history of Persia in the Behistun Inscription, one may perhaps conjecture that Oroetes, although a Persian, was favourable to the Median religious party, of which Bartius, the brother of Cambyses, and afterwards the Magian usurper, were heads. (See notes 218, above, and 346, below.) It is to be remarked, that Oroetes seems to occupy the same position which had previously been filled by two Medians, Mazares and Harpagus. (See notes 331, above, and 350, below.)

³³⁹ κατὰδῆσας δὲ τὰς λάρνακας. Before the invention of locks, the only way of securing chests was by cording them. Thus ΕΖΕΚΙΕΛ (xxvii. 24) speaks of "chests of rich apparel bound with cords" among the merchandize of Tyre. To fasten the cord in such a way as to baffle the attempt of a stranger to unloose it, became a point of skill under such circumstances; and the proverb, ὁ τοῦ Ὀδυσσεὺς δεσμός, in allusion to the Homeric expression (Odys. viii. 447) came to be applied to denote all extraordinarily secure fastenings.

³⁴⁰ παντοίῃ ἐγίνετο, "resorted to all kinds of means." So in ix. 109, Xerxes παντοίως ἐγίνετο, to evade the performance of his rash promise to Artaynte.

³⁴¹ ἐπὶ τὴν πεντηκόντερον. See note 131, above. The article too is to be remarked. See note 87, above. The feature of the fatal galley was doubtless never wanting to the story as told at Samos.

³⁴² ἐπεφημίζετο, "uttered an ominous phrase;" i. e. she put herself in the position of an inspired soothsayer, and solemnly placed a ban upon her father's design. His reply seems to have a reference to this assumed character, and to mean that he would dedicate her as the officiating priestess at some oracle. The prominence of the superstitious element in the narrative, and the mention of Mæandrius's offering, point to the traditions of the Heraeum at Samos as a likely source of the author's information. It should be observed, that the Samians would understand by Zeus, not the Olympian deity, but the elemental principle of increase, the Pater Aether of Lucretius. Hence the dream of the maiden was fulfilled by her father's naked body being rained upon (below, § 125).

³⁴³ οἱ Συρηκοσίων γενόμενοι τύραννοι. The allusion is to Gelon, whose victory over the Carthaginians at Himera was said to have taken place on the same day as the action at Salamis (vii. 166); and to his brother and successor Hieron, whose patronage of letters made him celebrated throughout Hellas. The word μεγαλοπρέπεια denotes that kind of elegant sumptuousness which the Greeks regarded as the distinctive virtue of a sovereign or chief citizen, and which showed itself especially in the maintenance of great state on public occasions, such as the Olympic festival, or the erection of public works on a great scale. ARISTOTLE describing it, says: ἔστι τῶν δαπανημάτων οἷα λέγομεν τὰ τίμια, οἷον τὰ περὶ θεοῦ ἀναθήματα καὶ κατασκευαὶ καὶ θυσίαι, ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ ὅσα περὶ πᾶν τὸ δαιμόνιον καὶ ὅσα πρὸς τὸ κοινὸν εὐφιλοτιμητὰ ἔστιν, οἷον εἰ που χορηγεῖν οἴονται δεῖν λαμπρῶς ἢ τριηραρχεῖν ἢ καὶ ἐστιᾶν τὴν πόλιν. (Elhic. Nicom. iv. p. 1122.) It was the possession of this quality which rendered many of the Hellenic dynasts popular, and which in later times kept Alcibiades a favourite in spite of his unparalleled insolence. See his speech in THUCYDIDES (vi. 16). The Hellenic good taste, however, in spite of the passion for sumptuousness, revolted at mere profusion. An ill-directed μεγαλοπρέπεια became what they called βαναυσία (vulgarity). Likewise μεγαλοπρέπεια was incompatible with all regard for private advantage: οὐ γὰρ εἰς ἐαυτὸν δαπανηρὸς ὁ μεγαλοπρεπής, ἀλλ' εἰς τὰ κοινά. (ARISTOTLE, l. c., p. 1123.)

³⁴⁵ τῇ οἱ Ἄμασις ὁ Αἰγύπτου βασιλεὺς προεμαντεύσατο. This clause is omitted in S and V. The allusion is to § 43; but it is a very inaccurate statement of the facts of the case so far as appears from the narrative of Herodotus in its present shape.

³⁴⁶ ὑπὸ Μήδων ἀπαραιρημένους τὴν ἀρχήν. Cambyzes when dying implores his Persian friends μὴ περιιδεῖν τὴν ἡγεμο-νίην αὐτοῦ ἐς Μήδους περιελθούσαν (above, § 65)—a phrase which implies a restoration of the relative position of the Medes and Persians which existed before the revolution effected by Cyrus. And the same thing seems to follow from the note incorporated into the text in i. 130. (See note 439 thereon.) Oroctes, with the force at his command in his satrapy, probably had connived at the change, in the hope of acquiring an independent sovereignty for himself. The Magian began his reign by an ostentatious liberality towards the dependencies. See above, § 67.

This view of the Magian usurpation is in exact accordance with the Persian account as given in the Behistun Inscription, and with what (it can scarcely be doubted) was the real course of events.
 But the authority followed by Herodotus in his main account represented the whole transaction as a mere personal usurpation of the Pseudo-Smerdis. Hence the real state of the case only appears by such casual expressions as these showing themselves in parts of the work where the author is following another tradition. See note 218 on § 79, above.

³⁴⁷ Μιτραβάτα. The MSS and Gais-ford have Μιτροβάτα. See note 332,

above.

³⁴⁸ ἀγγελῆσι. Most of the MSS here have ἀγγελιφόρον. But the reading in the text is warranted by S and V, and it seems likely that ἀγγελιφόρον crept in as a gloss explanatory of the technical term. The Persian kings (like the Roman emperors) established a regular line of posts along all the great military roads.
 Herodotus gives a description of the system (viii. 98), and compares it with the Hellenic λαμπαδηφορία. The word ἀγγε-ρῆσιον is an adjective, and the substantive ἄνδρα is to be supplied.

³⁴⁹ οἰδεόντων. So the manuscripts S and V. Gaisford, with several others, inserts of before the word.

³⁵⁰ νομὸν τὸν τε Φρύγιον καὶ Λύδιον καὶ Ἰωνικόν. It is not to be assumed that these three nomes (which are the three first in Darius's cadastral system described above §§ 90—94), existed so divided at the time Oroctes was paramount.
 He appears rather to be successor to the position of Harpagus (see note 331, above); and this position to be described in terms of a later system. It seems likely that a principal motive to this later division was the diminution of the power of chiefs like Aryandes, Harpagus, and Oroctes; which last, after destroying Mitribates, held in his hands the whole of Asia within the Halys, and might with very fair prospects hope to make his ground good against the new sovereign of Persia, to whom he stood very much in the same relative position as Vespasian to Vitellius, upon the accession of the latter to the throne of the Cæsars. If Mitrabates were an Achæmenid (which seems not unlikely, see note 332, above), there would be an additional reason for Oroetes destroying him, and for Darius resenting the act. He and his sons were clansmen of Darius and his party, and hence he speaks of them presently as δὺο ἡμέων.

³³¹ δοκιμωτάτους. The manuscripts S and V have λογισμωτάτους.

³³² τοὺς ἀνακαλέοντας αὐτὸν καὶ πεμπομένους ὑπ’ ἐμεῦ κτείνει. These words explain the phrase ἐς οὐ πρὸς ἡδονὴν οἱ ἦν

τὰ ἀγγελλόμενα (above, § 126). The courier had brought a firman recalling Oroetes on the authority of the new monarch. By disobeying the firman he did what amounted to treating Darius as a rebel, and the destruction of Mitrabates and his son would be a natural proceeding in the same line of policy, supposing them Achæmenids. Just in the same way Darius destroyed the family of Intaphernes (§ 119).

³³³ ὁ Ἀρτόντεω. This is the reading of all the MSS; but it is difficult to conceive that the same oriental name is not represented by this form, by Artyntes (vii. 67) and by Artayntes (viii. 130).

³³⁴ βιβλία γραψάμενος πολλὰ. See note on v. 15.

Darius sprains his ankle, and fails to obtain relief from the Egyptian surgeons.

Democedes of Crotona, formerly surgeon to Polycrates,

130 and afterwards slave to Orontes, is sent for,

³⁵⁵ ἀποθρῶσκοντα ἀπὸ ἵππου. DIO CHRYSOSTOM (Oratt. xiv. p. 231 and lxxvii. p. 663) represents the accident to Darius as having occurred in a fall from his horse. He also in the latter passage gives Demodocus (not Democedes) as the name of the successful surgeon. But these variations probably arise merely from a slip of memory in details unimportant for his purpose. TIMÆUS (ap. Athenæum, p. 522) gives Democedes as the name of the operator.

³⁵⁶ Αἰγυπτίων. The celebrity of the Egyptian medical practice appears from the instance of the physician sent by Amasis to Cyrus. See above, § 1.

³⁵⁷ παρακούσας, “having casually heard.” The manuscripts S and V have the words οἷα δὴ before παρακούσας. Gaisford follows the rest of the MSS, which omit them. The sense is not precisely identical in the two cases. By inserting the particles the author implies it as his opinion that probably the informant of Darius had, while in Sardis, casually heard of the skill of Democedes,—by omitting them, he states it as a positive fact.

³⁵⁸ ἐσαγγέλλει. All the MSS but S and V, and Gaisford, have the simple form ἀγγέλλει. But the compound is more appropriate to what may be reasonably supposed to have been the act of the unknown informant,—the sending in the report which he had heard. Compare 2 Kings v. 4.

³⁵¹ ἐς τοῦ χρυσοῦ τὴν θήκην. This reading rests on the authority of the single manuscript S, but it is the only one (among many variations) not manifestly corrupt.

³⁵² πατρὶ συνέχετο. Herodotus uses the same expression in vi. 12, μᾶλλον ἢ τῇ παροούσῃ δουλεῖν συνέχεσθαι. In both cases the annoyance spoken of is one acting by perpetual irritation. The temper of Democedes's father and the drilling of the martinet trainer of Phocæa were unbearable from the same cause, the continuity (τὸ συνεχές) of the trouble. The same idea would be conveyed by the reading ἀγρυπνίῃ συνέχετο, which is preserved by SUIDAS in citing the passage § 129. I should translate the text: "At Crotona he was kept on the fret by a father of bitter temper."

³⁵² τρίτῳ δὲ ἔτει Ἀθηναῖοι ἑκατὸν μνέων.

It is quite clear from the chronology of the story that Democedes would be retained at Athens, not by the commonalty, but by the Pisistratids. The sum of money too is out of keeping with republican parsimony. From the Achæniens of ARISTOPHANES, which was acted in the beginning of the Peloponnesian war, it appears that the pay of an ambassador was only two drachmæ per diem, and yet this extravagance went to the soul of the worthy Dicaeopolis (ὁμοί των δραχμῶν, v. 67). And at this time the revenue of Athens was nearly 2000 talents; whereas in the time of Democedes it does not appear certain that there was any public revenue at all. These inconsistent features make it unlikely that the story of Democedes is a contemporary one. But the practice which prevailed in the time of Herodotus (and perhaps in the time of Homer, who reckons "the prophet" and "the physician" among the δημοεργοί or public functionaries, Odys. xvii. 383) exists even to this day. The continent of Greece is supplied with doctors chiefly from Cephalonia, and there is scarcely a town of note or an Agalik which is without one. In the Morea they were often the confidential agents of the Agas. SIBTHORP (op. Walpole's Turkey, ii. p. 77) found at Pyrgo an individual who acted in this capacity, and who received 400 piastres salary from the district, which contained 10 villages. His profits however principally arose from presents, and from his good offices with the Aga in favour of malefactors. He had been a druggist's boy at Zante, and could neither read nor write, but he possessed some empirical knowledge, and such influence that he had just stopped the feud between two powerful chiefs by negotiating a marriage between their families.

³⁸³ ἤκουον μουσικὴν εἶναι Ἑλλήνων πρῶτοι. This would probably be at the time of Telesilla's highest reputation. See note on vi. 81.

³⁸⁴ ἡ μήν. Gaisford ἡ μιν.

³⁸⁵ ὅσα ἐς αἰσχύνην ἐστὶ φέροντα. Some of the MSS omit the preposition ἐς. But it seems to have an appropriate force, “all those things which tend to dishonour.” An exact parallel is supplied by iv. 90, τὰ ἐς ἄκασιν φέροντα, “effects conducive to healing,” “curative effects,” and in this latter passage the preposition is found in all the MSS.

³⁶⁶ αὐξανομένη γὰρ τῷ σώματι, κ.τ.λ. STOBÆUS (civ. p. 592) quotes as a dictum of Democritus: Αὐξανομένου γὰρ τοῦ σώματος συναύξονται φρένες, γηράσκοντος δὲ συγγηράσκουσι. The sentiment is an obvious one, but the phraseology is almost too similar for accident.

³⁶⁷ ζεύξας γέφυραν. This expression apparently refers to the bridge over the Bosphorus, which the author relates to have been constructed by Mandrocles the Samian (iv. 85—87).

³⁶⁸ ὀλίγου χρόνου. The ellipse is of the participle δέοντος.

³⁶⁹ τὴν πρώτην. The ellipse is of the substantive δδόν.

³⁷⁰ Ἀττικὰς. In spite of this desire of Atossa, which would hardly be unknown to the Persian courtiers, her own brother-in-law, Artaphernes, is represented some time afterwards as asking whereabouts in the world Athens was (v. 73). It may be said that he affected this ignorance with a view of striking terror into the Athenian commissioners. But, on the other hand, it is very conceivable that the story of Atossa's intrigues was in a great degree invented for the purpose of justifying the Athenians, who ostensibly were the originators of the war. See note on v. 97. ÆSCHYLUS in the Persians rather represents Atossa as the opposite of the character here attributed to her; and the very part which she is here made to play is by later writers given to the wife of Xerxes. See ÆLIAN (Hist. Animal. xi. 27).

³⁷² πλήσας. The nominative case is to be observed. Darius had already freighted the vessel (or given orders to that effect), and now promised Democedes that it should be ready to sail with him. If πλήσαντα had been used, the freighting of the merchantman would have been a part of Darius's promise.

³⁷³ γαυλόν. This word appears to be the Phœnician term for a merchant vessel. It is derived by Bochart from the Hebrew root gal, "round." The term is therefore the exact equivalent of na'is stroγγύλη, which is perhaps the Greek translation of it. In viii. 97 the expression γαυλὸς φοινικίους is used.

It is rather curious that Herodotus, who has just before used the word ὀλκάς of this very vessel, should now change the term and persist in changing it (§ 137). Possibly this arises from the circumstance that the story of the escape of Democedes may be derived from the south of Italy, the inhabitants of which were familiar with Carthaginian traders in Sicily, and consequently with the Phœnician name γαυλὸς for a merchant vessel,—whereas the account of his fortunes at the Persian court may have come from another quarter, where the more common phrase ὀλκάς was in general use. (See the note 131 on § 44.) That the story of the escape of Democedes actually was current at Crotona appears from an independent source. It was the practice there for the chief magistrate's servant to accompany his master on the seventh day of the month to the public altars, habited in a Persian garb. The local tradition accounting for this custom was, that the people stript of his robes Sidon, and after surveying the coast of Hellas, arrive at Tarentum. By the collusion of Aristophildes, the prince, Democedes escapes to Crotona.

The Persians follow, and, attempting to seize him, are beaten, the Persian who laid hands upon Democedes, and claimed him as Darius's slave; and, to show their contempt, dressed up the prytanis's orderly in them. (TIMÆUS ap. ALHENAÏUM, p. 522.)

³⁷⁴ παντοίων ἀγαθῶν. Gaisford, by placing a comma before these words, obscures the real sense of the passage. The merchant-vessel was filled with all kinds of precious merchandize, but not the trimmes, which were intended merely as a convoy. The word πληροῦν applied to a trireme means simply "to man," and is used commonly in this sense. παντοίων ἀγαθῶν is governed by some such word as ἔπλησαν, gathered by inference from it. See note 190 on i. 59.

³⁷⁵ προσίσχοντες, "on making the land." The conception of the author is, that the vessel made a run direct from Sidon to the coast of Greece. But although they surveyed and noted down the whole of the sea-board, no definite account of what they did appears until their arrival at Tarentum. It seems probable from this, that no account, directly or indirectly, from the lips of Democedes, can be the source of the story. He, according to Herodotus, was so completely the guide to the Persians in the matter, that after losing him they at once returned homewards (§ 137, ἐστέρημένοι τοῦ ἡγεμόνος). It is very unlikely, therefore, that a story for which he himself was the authority should omit all reference to τὰ οἰνομαστότατα Ἑλλάδος, which were visited in the course of the voyage. See above, note 362.

³⁷⁶ ἐκ ῥηστῶν. This expression is used in the sense of ἐκ βεβήλων, and perhaps acquired the meaning of fraudulency by the same process of association, viz. as being the opposite of "strict-dealing." In the same way facilis came to be used in Latin in the expression "faciles nymphae," to denote the opposite of rigid morality, and in English las conduct implies shuffling.

³⁷⁸ τοῖσι σκυτάλοισι. The word σκυτάλη, or σκυτάλον, means the stick around which a strip of leather was wound, on which dispatches were sent by the government of Sparta to their functionaries abroad. But although in Athenian Greek a technical term, it was most probably the common word for a staff in Lacedæmon, and might not unnaturally bear the same sense in a mainly Dorian city like Crotona. Its use, therefore, in this passage, is not wonderful, especially if the narrative is of Magna-Grecian origin.

³⁸⁰ ἔξαιρεθέντες. This word implies that Democedes was taken out of their very hands by his rescuers. (See TIMÆUS quoted in note 373, above.) They were robbed indeed of the transport, but not in a contest brought to so direct a personal issue, and hence the milder phrase ἀπαιρεθέντες.

³³³ φεύγων ἐκ Σάμου. He was expelled by his brother, (see above, § 39,) who after this made a close alliance with Amasis. While this lasted, of course Syloson could not go to Egypt; but he took advantage of the presence of Cambyses's army to do so.

³³⁴ δι' εὐηθίην, “from his good-nature.” What the Greeks understood by εὐηθία is well explained by a phrase of THUCYDIDES (iii. 83): τὸ εὐθές οὐ τὸ γενναῖον πλείστον μετέχει, “simplicity, which is a chief element in nobleness.” It is the exact opposite of “knowingness,” and of course when carried to excess degenerates into “silliness,” of which quality it is often used as an euphemistic name.

³³⁵ ἐς τοῦτον τὸν ἄνδρα. The manuscripts M, K, P, F, have ὡς for ἐς. See note 352 on ii. 121.

³³⁶ εὐεργέτης. This term is used almost technically. See the note on § 154, ἐς τὸ πρόσω μεγάθεος τιμῶνται.

³³⁷ φ' ἐγὼ προαιδεύμαι, “to whom I am under obligations.” It is difficult to see how this sense is to be derived from the word αἰδεῖσθαι: but such a one is imperatively required both here and in i. 61. The preposition has no meaning of antecedence in point of time, but rather of preference, as in προτιμᾶν. Thus προαιδεῖσθαι may mean, “to have special respect for,” “to feel reverence in the presence of;” and as the receipt of a favour produces a feeling of inferiority, the sense required in the text may have sprung up.

³⁸⁸ ἀναβέβηκε δὲ τίς κω παρ' ἡμέας αὐτῶν; "and who of them has up to this time come up the country to our court?" The MSS vary between ἀναβέβηκε δ' ἡ τις ἢ οὐδεὶς κω, ἀναβέβηκε δὲ τις ἢ οὐδεὶς κω, and ἀναβέβηκε δὴ τις ἢ οὐδεὶς κω. Gaisford has adopted the first of these readings. But although in the writers of the lower times (ARISTIDES and ÆLIAN) the expressions ἡ τις ἢ οὐδεὶς, and ἡ τι ἢ οὐδὲν, appear to have been used as the equivalent of οὐδεὶς and οὐδὲν, I doubt whether in this passage the reading does not arise from an union of two alternative variants, οὐδεὶς and τίς the interrogative. By striking out either the words τίς ἢ, or ἡ οὐδεὶς, from the text of S and V, a genuine reading will remain. The same cause probably produced the corruption of the passage of Xenophon, which Valcknaer quotes in justification of ἡ τις ἢ οὐδεὶς.

³⁸⁹ ἔχω δὲ χρέος ὡς εἰπεῖν οὐδὲν. Some MSS (which Gaisford follows) omit the word ὡς. Others vary between the reading in the text and χρέος οὐδὲν ὡς εἰπεῖν.

³⁹⁰ στρατηγὸν Ὀτάνα. Probably Otanes took the position which had been held by Orastes. (See note 350 on § 127.) It can hardly be supposed that the first subject in Persia, now become the king's father-in-law, would take the command of a mere local expedition for a specific purpose. The application of Syloson to Darius is represented as immediately succeeding the accession of the latter, who speaks of himself as νεωστὶ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἔχων, and as yet having had no visitors from Greece (§ 140). The division of the satrapies can therefore scarcely have been established at the time.

³⁹¹ καταβὰς ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν. It does not appear what seaboard is intended here; and probably no definite place was meant by the story. Above (§ 135) by the same phrase the coast of Phœnicia will be meant, if §§ 135, 136 belong originally to the same tradition.

Mæandrius left viceroy of Samos, builds and endows a shrine of Zeus Eleutherius, and then endeavours to establish a common-wealth.

³⁹² ἐπιτροπαίην παρὰ Πολυκράτεος λαβὼν τὴν ἀρχήν, “having received the supreme authority from the hands of Polycrates to hold it in commission.” So iv. 147, Theras ἐπιτροπαίην εἶχε τὴν ἐν Ξπότρῃ βασιλίην. (See note 105 on § 36.) Mæandrius is spoken of in v. 27, incidentally, simply as the βασιλεὺς of Samos, probably because Herodotus is there following a Hellenistic authority, unrecognized of the details of Polycrates’s history.

³⁹³ τὰ τῷ πέλας ἐπιπλήσσω. The same expression is used in vii. 136, αὐτὸς τὰ κείνοις ἐπιπλήσσει ταῦτα οὐ ποιήσεν.

³⁹⁵ σύ γε. See the next note.

³⁹⁶ ἐὼν ἐν τοῖσι ἀστούσι δόκιμος. Probably a member of the old aristocracy of houses which had been put down by Polycrates. Hence his insult to Mæandrius as being of mean birth (γεγονὸς κακός), and that he at any rate (σύ γε) had not a claim to bear office over them. The only office Mæandrius had wished for was the priesthood of a particular temple; but the priestly office was in most cases one of the special prerogatives of peculiar families. (See the notes on v. 67, and v. 69, and also on iv. 161.) The party to which Telesarchus belonged seems to have recovered power upon the revolution effected by Aristagoras. See the first note on vi. 5, and vi. 22.

³⁹⁸ στασιῶται. Some MSS have στρα-τιῶται, which perhaps is the preferable reading; as from the expression ἐπικού-been supported by mercenaries.

³⁹⁹ θρόνους θέμενοι. In the Lycian monument discovered by FELLOWES, the Persian commander is represented sitting upon a δίφρος, not on a θρόνος, with his feet on a footstool, while the prisoners are brought before him. The same group is found on many of the Nineveh marbles, but in none is the seat a θρόνος, i. e. a high-backed chair. Perhaps the high rank of Otanes (see above, notes 350 and 390) caused the adoption of the θρόνος, if he was present in person, or even in actual command of the army of which a detachment formed the expedition to Sa-mos.

 same epithet is applied to Cambyses,

148 Μαιάνδριος δ' ἀποδράς ἐκ τῆς Σάμου ἐκπλέει ἐς Λακεδαίμονα⁴⁰⁴.

⁴⁰¹ οὕτω, "then and not before." See note 22 on i. 5.

⁴⁰² τοὺς διφροφορευμένους. DINON related that it was a point of etiquette with the Persian kings never to get out of their carriage at once upon the ground, however small the distance might be, nor yet to use the assistance of an attendant's arm, but to step out on to a golden stool (δίφρος), which an official, called διφροφόρος, always carried behind the carriage. (ap. Athenæum, xii. p. 514.) It seems not unlikely that οἱ διφροφορεύμενοι here means those chiefs who were of such a rank as to possess the right of being attended by this functionary.

⁴⁰³ παρήγγειλε. It does not seem absolutely necessary to suppose that Otanes was on the spot. If he had been, he would probably have been among the διφροφορεύμενοι Πέρσαι,—indeed, in the post of honour among them,—and his rescue would have been so difficult, that it could hardly have escaped mention. The expression seems not inappropriate to orders forwarded from head-quarters, for instance, from some place on the main, like the Panionium, which would be a very few miles from the city Samos.

⁴⁰⁴ ἐς Λακεδαίμονα. Thither the Samians opposed to Polycrates had fled just about the time of Cambyses's expedition to Egypt. (Above, § 45.)

τέων κακὸν γενέσθαι· οἱ δ' ὑπακούσαντες ἐξεκήρυξαν Μαιάνδριον⁴¹⁰.

⁴⁰⁵ ἐξέσμων. The more common form is not σμάω, but σμήχω. σμήγμα is an abstergent substance used for the same purpose as our soap. (Athenæus, ix. p. 409.) The servants of Mæandrius were employed in cleaning his cups with a plate-powder, which, when wiped off, of course showed their lustre to the greatest advantage, and he took the opportunity to bring Cleomenes home with him exactly on these occasions. Herodotus uses the word διασμέντες, "scouring," of the brass goblets of the Egyptians (ii. 37). But here the effect to the eye was produced by cleaning off the σμήγμα, and showing the maiden lustre of the metal. Hence the compound in the text is the more appropriate.

⁴⁰⁶ ἂν ἐκέλευε, "habitually bade him," just as ἂν προηγε, "habitually led him on," and ἀπελάυνε¹ ἂν, "used to be driven away," § 51, above. For this use of ἂν see ΜΑΤΤΕΙΛ, Gr. Gr. § 599, a.

⁴⁰⁷ δικαιοτάτος ἀνδρῶν γίνεται. This seems to have been a traditional character of Cleomenes. The Lacedæmonian story related in v. 51 goes to the same point.

⁴⁰⁸ μαθὼν δὲ ὡς ἄλλοισι. Probably these were the opposite party in Lacedæmon to that of which Cleomenes may be considered as the representative. That opposite party was unquestionably the one which held the pure Dorian blood in highest estimation, and was favourable to Doric interests, or, in other words, to the maintenance of the aristocratic family governments. If we suppose Cleomenes to have succeeded his father Anaxandrides between the arrival of the first exiles (§ 45) and that of Mæandrius, an additional reason appears why the former should have succeeded in their application for aid and the latter not. Anaxandrides was apparently of more decided Dorian feeling than his son. He had brought the wars with Arcadia to a successful termination (i. 67),—an event which raised the power of the Doric race, and the Lacedæmonians at their head, to an unprecedented pitch. (See i. 68, put together with i. 56.) Cleomenes, on the contrary, disclaimed being a Dorian, (v. 72,) and even tried to organize an Arcadian confederacy (vi. 74). See the notes on v. 41 and v. 75.

⁴⁰⁹ τιμωρίην. The more appropriate word would be βοήθειαν. But Mæandrius might very likely have put himself forward in Lacedæmon as the representative of the ancient party which had been humbled by Polycrates, to which the exiles (mentioned § 45) belonged; and it is not impossible that the fact which lies at the bottom of the story related by Herodotus in §§ 142, 3, was, that he attempted to reorganize a constitution in which this party should have its due weight. But Telesarchus, like the Bourbons at their restoration to France, showed that he had learnt nothing and forgotten nothing during the suspension of his civil rights.

⁴¹⁰ ἐξεκήρυξαν Μαιάνδριον. The manuscript S has for these words merely the single word ἀπέτεμον.

⁴¹¹ Τὴν δὲ Σάμον σαγηνεύσαντες οἱ Πέρσαι παρέδωσαν Συλοσῶντι. For these words S has οἱ δὲ Πέρσαι παρέδωσαν Συλοσῶντι Σάμον, thus continuing the last sentence, and omitting the word σαγηνεύσαντες. These variations seem too great to be accidental: and it is remarkable that Herodotus should in vi. 31 give an explanation of the meaning of the word σαγηνεύειν at some length, if he had previously used it here. Some presumption hence arises, that when the passage vi. 31 was written, this part of the text is more likely to have existed in the shape at present given by the manuscript S. See what appears like another variation in the note on vi. 101.

⁴¹² Βαβυλώνιοι ἀπέστησαν. The time to which Herodotus assigns this event agrees very fairly with the statement of the Behistun Inscription. In that, the first public event recorded, after the counter-revolution in which the Magian was slain and the kingdom established on the old footing, is the (apparently simultaneous) revolt of Atrines son of Opidarnes, who rebels and becomes king of Susiana, and of Natitabirus who becomes king of Babylon, professing to be Nabokodrosor son of Nabonidus. Darius sends to Susiana, takes Atrines and slays him; but marches in person against Babylon, forces a passage (on the 27th day of the month Atrytata) across the Tigris on rafts, defeating the army of Natitabirus, and (on the second day of the month Anamaka) engages Natitabirus at Zázána on the Euphrates, and drives his army into the river. He then proceeds to Babylon, takes it, seizes Natitabirus, and afterwards puts him to death. In the Inscription there is nothing to induce a supposition that the month Anamaka does not succeed the month Atrytata in the same year. No doubt while Darius is at Babylon a great many nations are in the Inscription recorded to have revolted. But see note 415, below.

⁴¹³ ἐν τούτῳ παντὶ τῷ χρόνῳ. The policy of the Magian would doubtless be favourable to their plans. See the expression in § 67: ὅτε ἀποθάνοντος αὐτοῦ πόθον ἔχειν πάντας τοὺς ἐν τῇ Ἀσίῃ πάρεξ αὐτῶν Περσέων, and the note 346 on § 126.

⁴¹⁴ σιτοποιοῦν, literally, "as a preparer of food." But the word perhaps may be taken generally, so as to mean any female domestic servant. When it is considered how large a portion of domestic service consisted of the preparation of food, (for the wheat had to be ground in the family,) and how bare the dwellings of the ancients were of furniture, it is not surprising that this word should be used in a general sense, or at any rate that the office expressed by it should be regarded as important beyond all comparison with any other branch of menial duty. Thus the Platæans, under similar circumstances to those in the text, reserved a certain number of γυναικες σιτοποιοι, (THUCYDIDES, ii. 78,) and EURIPIDES makes Polyxena describe her destiny in captivity, by putting the ἀνάγκη σιτοποιὸς ἐν δόμοις in the first place of the servile tasks she had reason to expect. (Hecuba, 362.)

 that this length of time assigned to the siege arises from a confusion on the part of the authorities followed by Herodotus of two sieges; in the first of which Darius commanded in person, while in the other the city was taken by Intaphres, a Median.
 In the Behistun Inscription the former appears as the third, the latter as the ninth of the great successes which are recorded. See the notes 412, above, 418, below, and 1 on iv. 1.

⁴¹⁶ δς τῶν ἐπτὰ ἀνδρῶν. In some MSS these words are preceded by τοῦ or τούτου, the latter of which Gaisford adopts.

⁴¹⁷ τούτου τοῦ. This reading rests on the authority of S. Another MS has τοῦ-τῷ τῷ. Gaisford reads τούτῳ.

⁴¹⁸ τῶν οἱ σιτοφόρων ἡμιόνων μία ἔτεκε.
 Ctesias makes this feature the only one in the narrative of Herodotus which he allows. He himself represents Zopyrus as being in command of Babylon, and as being slain in a revolt of the inhabitants not under Darius, but under Xerxes.

 The capture of the city he represents as achieved by a Megabyzus, husband of Xerxes's daughter Amytis (ap. Photium, Bibl. p. 39). See the note 440, below, and also note 631 on i. 187. Herodotus also relates Xerxes to have carried off the golden statue from Babylon (i. 183).
 In the Behistun Inscription Darius is represented as having twice taken Babylon after a revolt, which on the second occasion is excited by one Aracus, an Armenian, who, like Natitabirus in the first, professes to be Nabokodrosor. See the note 415,
 above.

⁴²⁰ φήμην. S has φῆμιν both here and in i. 43, where see note 133.

⁴²¹ ἐς τὸ πρόσω μεγάθεος τιμῶνται, “are rated with a view to advance in greatness.” The practice appears to have been to keep a kind of register in which “good services” were entered, and perhaps also the reward which was rendered for each. The information given by Mordecai which saved Ahasuerus from assassination was of this kind, and accordingly “it was written in the book of the chronicles before the king” (Esther ii. 23). Under this system it was possible to adopt that custom of which Herodotus expresses his admiration (i. 137), i. e. strike a balance of the merits and demerits of any party against whom a charge was brought. Thus, when Ahasuerus could not sleep, and the chronicles were read to him to amuse him, he asked, “What honour and dignity hath been done to Mordecai for this?” (Esther vi. 2.) So too Syloson, like Mordecai,

⁴²² μαστιγώσας. The word ἐωυτὸν is to be supplied.

⁴²³ ἐκ τοῦ θρόνου ἀναπηδήσας. The strongest proof which an oriental could give of emotion. See note on vii. 212.

⁴²⁴ ἐμὲ δὴ. The sense is nearly, but not quite, the same as would be given by ἐμὲ γε. The expression in the text seems to mean “a man of my rank.” Zopyrus intimates that whatever outrages might be committed upon others, yet when they came to him (δὴ), there they must stop, whereas ἐμὲ γε would leave it undecided to what cause his security might be due, —for instance, it might be to his personal courage. For an oriental court it is plain that the expression in the text is in better keeping. One manuscript (S) omits the particle δὴ.

⁴³⁵ παραστήσονται, “will yield,” literally “place themselves by us.” The common use is of the active voice with an ellipse of ἐαυτοῦς, just as in the English phrase ‘give up.’ See the note 41 on § 13, above.

⁴³⁶ κῶς οὐκ ἐξέπλωσας τῶν φρενῶν. A similar expression occurs vi. 12: ἐκπλάσσαντες ἐκ τοῦ νῆου.

⁴³⁷ ἐς δεκάτην ἡμέρην, “on the tenth day.” The accusative case is used with the preposition ἐς to specify the day on which any given event is to take place. Doubtless the idiom is to be explained by the ellipse of some such word as ἀναριθμοῦνται, which from the familiarity of the expression came to be omitted, like δέοντος in the phrase ὁλόγου δέοντος. Thus

Alcestis, in EURIPIDES, speaking of her impending death, says:—

καὶ τόδ' οὐκ ἐς αἶθρον οὐδ' ἐς τρίτην μοι μῆνός ἐρχεται κακόν.
 (Alcest. 321.)

⁴³⁸ περίξ προσβάλλειν πρὸς τὸ τεῖχος. This expression shows that in the mind of the original narrator of this story walls of such a size as those described in i. 178 were not thought of. He had in view something like what continually occurred in the military operations of Hellas, where, from the size of the fortifications, a simultaneous attack on every point was not an unpromising scheme. See note 437, below.

⁴³⁰ συμβουλεύσαι. This contrast of this infinitive with the indicative ἐφαίνετο which presently follows should not be overlooked. Zopyrus professed that he had given counsel, which he had really not given, on grounds which were really solid ones. The change of construction delicately distinguishes what in English an additional sentence is required to express. He professed "that he had been thus treated for having advised Darius"—so he said—"to withdraw the army, seeing that there was no apparent means"—as indeed was the case—"of taking the city."

⁴³⁷ ὅσας δὴ. See note 525 on i. 157.

⁴³⁸ πέντε μυριάδων τὸ κεφαλαῖωμα τῶν γυναικῶν συνῆλθε. This number suggests 50,000 as the amount of the surviving marriageable males in the idea of the narrator of the story. Making all allowance for the destruction of the population in the two sieges, it is difficult to suppose this a natural relic of the inhabitants of an enclosure like that described in i. 178. Let the reader conceive a circle drawn around the London Post Office with a radius of 12,000 yards, or very nearly seven miles, this circle circumscribed by a square, and the square surrounded by a rampart standing 348 feet high and 87 feet thick at the bottom, the whole encompassed by a fosse large enough to supply the material for it; and then imagine the population which the enceinte must have been intended to contain.

and succeeds in betraying the city.

Darius destroys the walls, and impales 3000 of the principal inhabitants.

The present Babylonians a new population.

Zopyrus considered by Darius as inferior to no Persian for good services rendered. Honours bestowed on him. His grandson an exile at Athens.

⁴³⁹ δῶρά οἱ ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος ἐδίδου. See note 213, above.

⁴⁴⁰ ὃς ἐς Ἀθήνας αὐτομόλῃσε. Possibly in the desire of this individual to create an exalted notion of his ancestor's reputation, may be found an explanation of the difference between Herodotus's and Ctesias's accounts of the capture of Babylon. (See note 418, above.) But even then we must suppose the story to have passed through an Hellenic channel before it could acquire the features it possesses at present. (See note 428, above.) At the same time, in its substance it has a genuine Asiatic character. RAWLINSON, after adverting to the statement of Poly-senus, that the stratagem was copied from one practised by a certain Transoxian Sacan with a view of destroying the army of Darius, well remarks that this latter in all its minutest features is a standard oriental story, applied in different ages by the Persian bards and traditionists to Ferus and the Hiyáthelah, by Abu Rihán to Kanishka and the Indians, and by the historians of Cashmeer to their famous king Lalitáditya. (Note on the Behistun Inscription, p. xxi.) The Latin adaptation of the tale to Sextus Tarquinius and Gabii is familiar to every schoolboy (Livy i. 58, 54), and is worth comparing if only to observe the features belonging to his own age and country with which each writer unconsciously invests it.

EXCURSUS ON III. 5.

IN the "Outline of Assyrian History" which RAWLINSON has sketched out from the data furnished him by the Nimroud sculptures, an opinion is confidently put forward that the Kadytis of Herodotus is in fact Gaza, a name appearing in the Nimroud monuments under the form Kharita. This form Rawlinson argues that the Greeks changed into Kadytis, as Akhaib into Ecdippa. Together with this notion, he brings forward the conjecture, that the capture of Gaza by Pharaoh alluded to in the heading of a prophecy of JEREMIAH¹, is identical with that of Kadytis mentioned by Herodotus² as having been effected by Neco, the son of Psammitichus, after the battle of Magdolus; and he adds that the description of Herodotus in the present passage is exactly applicable to Gaza, and will by no means answer to Jerusalem.

I am unable to concur in any of these opinions, except perhaps the one that the description of Kadytis does not correspond with Jerusalem,—a circumstance of which an explanation has been attempted in the foot-note on the passage. But, if possible, the description is even less applicable to Gaza. Whatever Kadytis may have been, and whatever amount of corruption may have crept into the text of Herodotus describing its site, it is quite clear that in the apprehension of that writer there were several ἐμπόρια lying between it and Ienysus. Now certainly nothing of this sort was to be found between Gaza and Ienysus, for the former was the southernmost of the Philistine cities, and the latter a mere watering-place just on the edge of the desert, a very few miles from it³. Indeed ARRIAN calls Gaza itself the actual frontier⁴.

Again, taking Herodotus's views of the proceedings of Psammitichus, it seems impossible to conceive that monarch leaving so important a position as Gaza in his rear during a twenty-nine years' siege of Azotus. In the course of his gradual encroachments northwards, the Philistine towns would have fallen into his hands one after the other, and Gaza the very first in the natural order of things. But Kadytis (whatever Herodotus understood by it) is represented by him as captured, not by Psammitichus at all, but by his son Neco, at a time which was at least thirty, and perhaps forty, years after the commencement of the siege of Azotus.

The hypothesis of the conversion of Khazita into both Kadytis and Gaza appears also to me to involve great difficulties. The Greek language would have presented no obstacle whatever to the direct adoption of the form Khazita; so that the only way of accounting for the existence both of Kadytis and of Gaza as representatives of it involves the assumption that the two words, starting from a common original (Khazita), arrived in Hellas by different routes, having in the mean time become so modified as to have acquired on their reappearance in Greek, two such widely different aspects. But I am not aware of any facts calculated to lend the least plausibility to this hypothesis, unless it be the one, that while Herodotus does not mention Gaza, other authors are equally ignorant of Kadytis,—although the commercial importance of the former must have brought it under the notice of the Hellenic merchants who traded to Egypt, and through them (if in no other way) under the notice of Herodotus himself.

But if it be necessary to find a reason for our author not naming Gaza, I should be more inclined to adopt a conjecture that he does really mean that city when he speaks of the Syrian Agbatana (iii. 64),—a place as unknown to other writers as Kadytis. The word Agbatana is by Rawlinson himself interpreted to mean “a place of strength for treasures⁵,”—a signification which would make it almost a translation of Gaza. And indeed if the Syrian Agbatana be not Hamath on the Orontes, it is more likely to be Gaza than any other place. The name is the only ground for its identification with either the one or the other; for, so far as the description in Herodotus is concerned, it may lie any where on the road between the Persian and the Egyptian frontiers. As it seems to be the same word with Hamath, and only a translation of Gaza, I myself should be inclined to regard it as the former, if compelled to decide between the two alternatives⁶. But in such questions, all that can be done is to balance probabilities, and to be distinctly aware that they are only probabilities, and are not to be propounded as ascertained facts.

³ See RENNELL, Geography of Herodotus, cited in note 16 on iii. 5.

If the account of Herodotus be taken in combination with the books of Kings and Chronicles, it seems clear that from the beginning of the reign of Psammitichus at least, the Egyptian sovereigns commenced a system of aggression which was soon met by resistance on the part of the great monarchs of Mesopotamia, and that the struggle only terminated by the conquest of Egypt under Cambyzes. Before the reign of Psammitichus the two powers had indeed come into collision with one another on several occasions, but from this time forward the contest seems to have been nearly continuous. Psammitichus had, when an exile from Egypt, taken refuge in Syria, and, subsequently to his return, had experienced the great use which might be made of foreign auxiliaries⁷. From the time of his becoming sovereign of his native country, he seems to have turned his thoughts to the best means of availing himself of external resources, maintaining an Ionian and Carian force, and encouraging the cultivation of the Hellenic language and Hellenic intercourse⁸. That he had, in the apprehension of Herodotus's informants, extended his influence over the Philistine territory, is evident not only from his capture of Azotus after a blockade of 29 years⁹, but from his meeting the Scythian invaders and concluding a treaty with them, some where on the Philistine side of the desert¹. All this hangs very ill together with the notion that Gaza, the key to the military road, should yet remain to fall before his son Neco several years afterwards as the fruit of victory in a pitched battle at Magdolus. It seems more natural, if the common reading of JEREMIAH xlvii. 1 be adopted², that the "smiting of Gaza" should be the first open encroachment upon the Philistine towns, of whose conquest the capture of Azotus might be considered to constitute the keystone. Those Philistine towns had been crippled by the kings of Judah³, and the kingdom of Judah in its turn (under Manasseh, Hezekiah's son) been humbled by the Assyrian empire⁴. During the turbulent times of Manasseh's successor Amon, and the minority of Josiah, the kingdom of Judah could have had no time to recover strength; and this is the state of things with which Psammitichus's reign synchronizes,—a state obviously most encouraging to an ambitious and powerful neighbour. But the prophet Jeremiah, aware that all the countries on the coast of the Mediterranean were to be regarded as the extremities of the huge body of which Assyria was the heart, may well have warned them, even before a single blow was struck, of the flood that would "rise up out of the north" as the result of this policy of aggression⁵.

The conduct of Neco, as described by Herodotus⁶, is just what might be expected from a king desirous of carrying out the plans of his father, and who had acquired or inherited a predominant influence on the coast of the Mediterranean. His first design in proposing to make his canal may well have been the transporting a fleet from that sea to the Persian Gulf, in order to follow the line of the reputed conquests of Sesostris. Subsequently, either from the cause given by Herodotus or some other, he determined to invade Assyria by the coast road, reckoning on the neutrality of the king of Judah⁷. In this expectation, natural as it may have been, considering the past and present relations of Judah with Assyria, he was disappointed. Josiah attempted to oppose him, and paid the forfeit of his temerity with his life. Jerusalem, if not captured, was at any rate so completely put at the mercy of Neco as to receive his nominee as king, and pay a large contribution in money⁸. Three years after this event the Egyptian army is found on the banks of the Euphrates*, and, eleven years after, it has been destroyed or driven back into Egypt, every portion of the territory overrun by it having been in the mean time recovered by the Assyrian monarch, Jerusalem captured, and the vassal of Neco on the throne there carried off into captivity¹.

But when combining the notices in Herodotus which relate to this time with the account given in the historical books of the Old Testament, it is absolutely necessary to be fully aware how small a portion of the important incidents above enumerated (spreading as they do over the space of eleven or twelve years) is to be found noticed in the Greek writer. If we had no other source of information on the subject than his work affords, all that we should know would be, that Neco, desisting from an ineffectual attempt to connect the Nile with the Arabian Gulf, attempted certain expeditions by land—with what success or against whom the narrative does not say, and we have no reason to believe that the narrator knew. One thing alone is told with any definiteness of detail, and that one is (as in so many other instances of traditionary history) connected with an offering in a temple²,—a temple too which in the time of Herodotus was no longer standing³. Neco fought a battle with certain Syrians at Magdolus, and afterwards took a city called Kadytis, of no less importance than Sardis. If we were to find in an account of the fortunes of Napoleon nothing but a statement that at one time he endeavoured to create a flotilla on the northern coast of France, and afterwards, desisting from this, made several campaigns, in one of which he captured a large city (of a name otherwise unknown), and sent the standard of the regiment which had guarded his person on the occasion to be suspended in the cathedral of Nôtre Dame; no one could fail to trace in such a selection of incidents the influence of popular tradition, not necessarily false or even exaggerated, but of very little value in assisting the arrangement of more copious or authentic documents. And it is not easy to see any difference between this case and that furnished by our author.

EXCURSUS ON III. 74.

THE deciphering of the Behistun (or Bisutun) Inscription by RAWLINSON, from the light which it has thrown upon the early history of Persia, has enabled us to form a truer estimate than before was possible, both of the nature of the sources of information possessed by Herodotus, and of the amount of allowance to be made in estimating his authority. It has been referred to above in several notes on the First and the Third Books, as a reason for modifying in a very important degree the inferences which have been drawn, and might otherwise legitimately be drawn, from the statements of the "Father of History;" but it seems desirable to explain in a more connected manner than is possible within the limits of a foot-note, the general bearing of the two authorities upon one another.

It is impossible to doubt, that in the main outline of the events recorded, the credit to be attached to the Inscription is incomparably greater than that which can be claimed by any existing historian, or by the whole of them put together. The Inscription is a formal account of the acts of Darius, sculptured by his own authority, and consequently possesses as authentic a character as a medal or a contemporaneous state paper; that is to say, its authority is absolute for events and dates, although the colour given to the events would naturally be made conformable to the views of the sovereign by whose order they were recorded.

The site of this inscription is the lower part of a naturally scarped precipice of enormous height—it is said nearly 1500 feet—in which the range of mountains constituting the northern boundary of the plain of Kermanshah suddenly terminates towards the East. At a height of about 100 feet from the base, a smooth surface has been formed by cutting into the rock, and in this, presenting the appearance of a bas-relief set in a frame, Darius, with a crown on his head and a bow in his hand, is represented as setting his foot upon a prostrate figure, who with stretched-out hands appears to ask for mercy. Nine other personages, with their hands pinioned behind them, and connected by a rope which passes round their necks, approach the monarch; and behind him stand two attendants, apparently of high rank,—as their costume, except for the crown, is the same as that of Darius himself—carrying the one a bow, the other a lance upon which he leans. In the air above the group hovers the figure of Ormuzd, which is substantially the same as that in the title-page of Mr. Layard's Nineveh, and over the heads of the human figures are tablets containing cuneiform or arrow-headed writing explaining who they are. But the most important part of the whole are the inscriptions in the same character containing the annals of the monarch. These Rawlinson has discovered to be trilingual, although the elements of the words in each being cuneiform might induce the belief in a superficial observer that the language was the same throughout. To the three languages he gives the several names of Persian, Median, and Babylonian. The first is contained in five columns (of which the four first are twelve feet in length and about six in breadth), immediately under the group of figures just described. Judging from the scale given together with the drawing of the group¹, the dignity of the personages seems to have been regarded in the size of which the sculptor represented them. Darius himself, and the figure upon which he is trampling (who is Gomates the Magian), are made full six feet in height. The two attendants on the king are no more than five feet, six or seven inches, while the conquered chiefs with ropes round their necks barely rise above four feet,—with the exception of the last, Sarukha the Sacan, who besides being a little taller than his companions in misfortune, wears a tiara, whereas they are all bare-headed.

¹ In the JOURNAL OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY, vol. x., which is devoted to Rawlinson's Commentary on the Cuneiform Inscriptions of Babylonia and Assyria, and contains the interpretation of the Persian tablets on which the views in this Excursus rest.

Of the five columns the first and third are, according to Rawlinson, very fairly legible. They contain ninety-six and ninety-two lines respectively, which are broken up—the one into nineteen, the other into fourteen paragraphs, each beginning with the form Thātiya Dáryawush k'hsháyathiya (Saith Darius the king). The second column extends to ninety-six lines, but it is much injured by a fissure in the rock, which extends along the whole length of the tablet. The fourth column contains ninety-two lines, the greater part lamentably injured. The last legible paragraph (the 18th) in this column furnishes a list of those individuals who alone were with Darius when he “slew Gomates the Magian, who was called Bartius,” and the very natural bias to bring the account given by Herodotus to aid in deciphering this, produced one or two erroneous guesses which a second careful inspection of the Inscription on the spot has corrected. The assistants of Darius are now undoubtedly ascertained to have been Intaphernes son of Veispares, Otanes son of Socres, Gobryas son of Mardonius, Hydarnes son of Megabignes, Megabyzus son of Dadoes, and Ardomanes son of Vacces. Following this list of names there was once another paragraph, which is entirely obliterated, and appears never to have had any equivalent in the Median translation;—a singular circumstance, which suggests the conjecture that its obliteration may have been ordered during the lifetime of the monarch, perhaps as a conciliatory measure towards his Median subjects. The fifth column only extended to half the length of the other four, containing but thirty-five lines, and it is described by Rawlinson as having been of a supplemental character, and to have contained an account of two revolts; the one in Susiana, which was crushed by Gobryas, the other one conducted by Sarukha, the chief of the Sacans who dwelt upon the Tigris, which was put down by Darius himself. Rawlinson states however, that one side of this tablet is completely destroyed, and that it is impossible to give a complete translation, although it appears (he says) that both expeditions ended successfully. The Sacan Sarukha, who is the last of the string of figures sculptured in the bas-relief, has been added subsequently to the other eight by a further smoothening of the face of the rock.

Fortunately the first column of the inscription, which is in the best preservation, contains by far the most important statements in a historical point of view. Its four leading paragraphs are a repetition of the contents of a tablet over the head of the monarch in the bas-relief, and run as follows.

"I am Darius the great king, king of kings, king of Persia, king of the provinces, son of Hystaspes, grandson of Arsames, an Achæmenian."

"Saith Darius the king: my father was Hystaspes, of Hystaspes the father was Arsames, of Arsames the father was Aryaramnes, of Aryaramnes the father was Teispes; [whose] father [was] Achæmenes."

"Saith Darius the king: on that account are we called of Achæmenes; from of old we have been unsubdued; from of old those of our race were kings."

"Saith Darius the king: eight of my race were kings before me; I am the ninth."

The fifth paragraph acknowledges his power to be the gift of Ormuzd, and the sixth gives a list of the provinces which, by the favour of Ormuzd, had come under his power². In the seventh and eighth he declares the entire subjection of these to him, and declares that throughout them he maintains the true faith and roots out heresy, and in the next six he gives a complete history of the circumstances which led to his own succession, as follows.

"Saith Darius the king: Ormuzd granted me the empire. Ormuzd brought help to me until I acquired this empire. By the grace of Ormuzd I hold this empire."

"Saith Darius the king: This is what was done by me before I became king. He who was named Cambyses, the son of Cyrus of our race, he was here king before me. Of that Cambyses was a brother named Bartius, of the same mother and the same father³ as Cambyses. Cambyses slew that Bartius. When Cambyses had slain Bartius, that which Bartius had stirred up was unknown to the state. Afterwards Cambyses proceeded to Egypt. When Cambyses had proceeded to Egypt, afterwards the state became irreligious; afterwards a lie became abundant both in Persia and Media and the other provinces."

² The list is given in the note 278 on iii. 94. But a subsequent visit to the spot has induced Rawlinson to add Gadara after Sogdiana, or, as he would now write it, Suguda.

"Saith Darius the king: Afterwards was a man, a Magian, named Gomates. He rose up from Pissichada, a mountain named Arakadres: from thence on the 14th day of the month Viyakhna, then it was that he rose up; to the state he thus lied: 'I am Bartius, who am Cyrus's son, Cambyses' brother.' Afterwards the whole state came into the conspiracy; it passed from Cambyses to him, both Persia and Media and the other provinces: he seized the empire. On the 9th day of the month Garmapada then it was he thus seized the empire. Afterwards Cambyses chafing died."

"Saith Darius the king: That empire of which Gomates the Magian deprived Cambyses, that empire from of old belonged to our race. After Gomates the Magian had deprived Cambyses of both Persia and Media and the other provinces, he did according to his desire; he became king."

"Saith Darius the king: There was not a man, neither Persian nor Median, nor any one of our family, who would deprive Gomates the Magian of the empire. The state feared to oppose him. He often proclaimed to the state as he had known Bartius do, in that same way he proclaimed to the state, 'Beware it hold me not in other account than as Bartius, son of Cyrus.' No one was bold; every one was standing around Gomates the Magian until I came. Afterward I adored Ormuzd. Ormuzd brought me aid. On the 10th day of the month Bagayadish, then did I with faithful men slay Gomates the Magian and those who were his chief associates. Siktakhotas was the fort named; Nisaea the region of Media: there I slew him: I deprived him of his empire: by the grace of Ormuzd I became king. Ormuzd gave me the empire."

"Saith Darius the king: The empire which had been wrested from our race that I recovered; I established it firmly; as in the days of old, so did I. The rites which Gomates the Magian had introduced, I *prohibited*⁴. I restored to the state the chants and the worship,

⁴ Rawlinson renders this sentence, "He would frequently address the state which knew [the old] Bartius, for that reason he would address the state, saying, 'Beware lest it regard me as if I were not Bartius the son of Cyrus.'" and to those families which Gomates the Magian had deprived of them. I firmly established the kingdom, both Persia and Media and the other provinces as in the days of old. Thus did I restore what had been taken away. Thus did I, by the grace of Ormuzd, that Gomates the Magian might not blot out our race."

In comparing this official statement with the account of Herodotus, it is plain at the first blush of the matter, that while in the one case the successful sovereign appears as the representative of great interests, the champion of a race of distinct blood and religious faith, and seems pointed out for the position he takes by the illustrious descent which he boasts, if not actually by near relationship to the sovereigns he succeeds; in the other his personal prowess and energetic character are made the sole source of his success, and there is no intimation that by birth he was a person of any distinction. His father holds a provincial government under the Persian king, and he himself, while serving in the Persian army which occupied Egypt, is a person of no importance, glad to accept a present of a cloak, and so little likely to be able to make any kind of return for it, although of a generous temper, that the donor regrets the sudden access of liberality which had induced him to part with his garment⁶. While, therefore, the two accounts of Darius's fortunes are not necessarily incompatible with one another, they certainly do seem to spring from entirely different sources. One could almost as little gather the illustrious connexions and the political party of Darius from Herodotus, as one could his peculiar temperament from the rock tablets. In these we recognize the dry but authentic record of those widely operating influences which issue in momentous political changes; in the narrative of the logographer we may (I apprehend) no less decisively remark the characteristics of popular tradition, which seizes and preserves in a way that nothing else can do the ethical characteristics of men of mark, while it soon drops or modifies the historical facts which really constituted the staple of their lives. Each of these classes of evidence has its value in after times. The historian of Napoleon will neither neglect the songs of Beranger nor the bulletins of the Moniteur, if he wishes to form a complete estimate of his hero. The Dundee Ballads are in their way

quite as valuable as the Annual Register. The greatest misuse of either the one or the other is to consider them as documents of the same kind, and to treat them as if nothing more was required in combining them than to piece out the one with fragments gathered from the other.

If, however, a different principle of interpretation be adopted, and the rock inscription be regarded as the official record of the Persian court, while the narratives of Herodotus and Ctesias are referred to as conveying the current notions of different localities and different classes, embodied in such stories as were likely to come to the knowledge of Hellenic merchants and Persian court-physicians, and moreover modified more or less by their individual habits and ways of thinking, a perfectly coherent idea may be formed of the whole transaction, without either detracting from the character of any one of the sources of information, or attributing the weightiest historical events to motives which belong to the region of fiction. The following sketch is an attempt to supply a clue for the criticism of the early history of these great states, on which at that time the destinies of the world depended.

The relation of Media to Persia, antecedently to the revolution in which Astyages was dethroned, seems to have approached that of a suzerain over a dependency, analogous perhaps to that of the house of Hapsburg over the old Swiss Cantons before the time of Tell. The Persian clans, however much they might value the purity of their own blood, would be naturally despised by the Median courtiers, as the Scotch highlanders were by the frivolous associates of the English Stuarts, and as the Tyrolese are by the aristocracy of Austria. If the Achæmenids were even at first, as seems probable, the most noble of the Persian clans, this circumstance would not in any way help to save them from the contemptuous designation of peasants and herdsmen in the common conversation of the fastidious oligarchy of the capital. A Ban of Croatia would probably have met with no more complimentary a description at Vienna ten years ago.

Cyrus the Great, whom the inscription recognizes as of the family of Darius, without however in any way ascribing to him that heroic character or pre-eminent fame with which he is invested by Herodotus and the later historians, was unquestionably the offspring of a mixed marriage between Mandane, the daughter and *heir*ess of Astyages⁷, and some Achæmenid, not considered at the time to be of such a rank as to acquire by this marriage any predominant weight. This is accounted for by Herodotus in exactly the way in which one might expect popular traditions to account for it. He is said to have been of a quiet temper, although of a good family⁸. If the real motive, however, of marrying Mandane to a Persian was to prevent the excessive aggrandizement of her husband, some other security than mere temper would doubtless have been sought; and nothing would be more obvious than to select for her a husband, who, if of royal blood, should at the same time not be likely to succeed to the throne of his country. Now I am disposed to think there is a considerable probability that the individual thus selected was actually a collateral relation of Darius, and so connected with him as to make the latter, at the time of the death of the last surviving child of Cyrus, next heir to the crown of Media.

In Book vii. § 11 of Herodotus, Xerxes is made to trace his own pedigree up to his eponymous ancestor Achæmenes, and so completely without any motive for introducing this scrap of genealogy, that the most obvious reason for his doing it seems to be, that Herodotus, having obtained it from some quarter or other, was desirous of incorporating it in his narrative, and saw no other way of doing so but by putting it in the mouth of the monarch himself. That it does not belong to the cycle of traditions which are the source of the narrative of the infancy of Cyrus is certain from the fact, that in that narrative the father of Cyrus's parent Cambyses bears a name identical with that of his illustrious grandson⁹, whereas in the pedigree of Xerxes that same Cambyses is made the son of Teispes. And the exact accordance of the pedigree with the Behistun Inscription for the greater part of its extent would seem to be a decisive proof that it is derived directly or indirectly from the same source, if only the remainder of it can be explained consistently with the same record; and this I will endeavour to show may be done most naturally by adopting the hypothesis just mentioned.

The pedigree Xerxes gives of himself (taken downwards for the sake of convenience) runs as follows. (1) Achæmenes, (2) Teispes, ⁷ HEROD. i. 109.

⁹ πυρρόνομαι ὡς ἔρα Μανδάνης τε εἴη παῖς τῆς Ἀστυάγους θυγατρὸς καὶ Καμβύσεως τοῦ Κέρου (i. 111).

(3) Cambyses, (4) Cyrus, (5) Teispes, (6) Ariaramnes, (7) Arsames, (8) Hystaspes, (9) Darius, (10) Xerxes, which (it will be seen) becomes identical with the authentic genealogy of the Behistun Inscription, if the second, third, and fourth terms of the series be taken away. This, however, without some satisfactory explanation of the reason for which Herodotus was induced to adopt them, is a mode of reconciling discordant statements by no means to be approved. But what if the only error here should be, that Herodotus, or rather the authority followed by him, had put two separate genealogies (belonging to the two branches of the same family) one after the other instead of side by side? What if the pedigree of Cyrus ran (1) Achæmenes, (2) Teispes, (3) Cambyses, (4) Cyrus, and that of Darius in exact accordance with the Behistun Inscription, starting from the common ancestor, (1) Teispes, (2) Ariaramnes, (3) Arsames, (4) Hystaspes, (5) Darius? This mistake is so natural a one, and accounts so well for the form given to the genealogical tree in the passage in question, that it can be fairly assumed as a probable hypothesis, remaining to be confirmed or weakened by the conformity or disagreement of other facts with it.

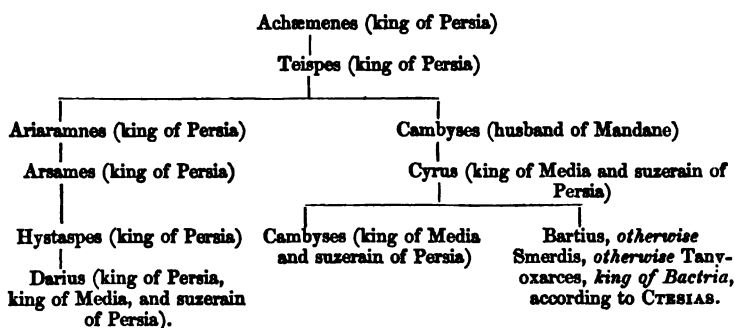

The internal government of Media in the time of Astyages appears clearly to have been a monarchy surrounded by an extremely powerful oligarchy, united to one another by the bond of the Magian religious system. The religion of Persia, on the other hand, appears to have approached very nearly to pure Theism, or at any rate to have been quite alien from the symbolism and the complicated ceremonial of Media. This difference of religion superadded to the differences of civilization must have increased the improbability of Cyrus the Persian succeeding to the throne of Astyages, had not the tyranny of the latter induced his nobles, and among them Harpagus, *his own relation*¹, to conspire against him, and, with the assistance of Cyrus and his hardy Persian troops, to dethrone him. Jealousy of each other (perhaps aided by the physical force which Cyrus had at command) probably prevented them from doing that which Astyages thought would have been the natural thing,—making one of their own body (Harpagus himself for instance) the successor²; and these considerations doubtless added force to the claims of Cyrus through his mother, which of themselves, had he been of pure blood, would have been irresistible³; and thus the son of Cambyses the Persian became king of Media and suzerain of Persia, but not king of Persia in the same sense in which the sovereigns of the line mentioned in the Behistun Inscription were, from Achæmenes down to Hystaspes inclusive. Consequently his name would not be introduced into that list, although his position would be higher than that of any of his family. But this elevation of Cyrus to the imperial throne could never have been acquiesced in if he had not been able to accommodate himself to the order of things into which he had been introduced. It was only natural that he should adopt the state religion, and be received as a Magian. This, as has been remarked in the note 441 on i. 180, is apparently the principle involved in the strange proceeding recorded by CTESIAS, that Cyrus secured his power by first adopting as his mother, and then marrying, Amytis, the daughter of Astyages, her husband being actually slain to enable him to do this⁴. The first act of the revolution was thus brought to an end, and no further troubles seem to have arisen till after the death of Cyrus.

The pedigree of the Achæmenids may, after what has been said, be with considerable probability set out as follows, in substantial accordance with Herodotus and Ctesias, as well as with the Behistun rock tablets.

⁴ Nascatur magus ex Gelli matrisque nefando

Conjugio, et discat Persicum aruspizium. CATULLUS, xc.

That the interests of the Magians and that of the dynasty of Astyages were bound up together, and that the possible succession of Cyrus was looked forward to as something fatal to the former as well as the latter, appears from HERODOTUS (i. 128).

It will now in its turn enable us to offer an explanation of some parts of the Inscription which are otherwise unintelligible. Darius, in the first part of what may be called his annals, as well as in the tablet above his own figure in the bas-relief, asserts that there have been eight kings of his race before him, and that he himself is the ninth. As it is plain from the genealogy which accompanies this assertion that three of the number were not in the direct line from Achæmenes to himself, and consequently were not kings of Persia, they must be sought for elsewhere. I believe that they are Cyrus the Great, Cambyses, and the true Smerdis. It may be argued against this view, that as he speaks of Smerdis (Bartius) as a fomentor of troubles, it is not to be supposed that he would acknowledge him as a sovereign de jure. To this, however, I cannot agree. Ctesias expressly states that Cyrus left his son Tanyoxarces (who is identical with the Bartius of the Inscription) an independent sovereign of a portion of his dominions, at the same time that he constituted the elder brother Cambyses his successor in the *empire*⁵; and although subsequent proceedings cost the younger son his life, yet this would not (I conceive) at all detract from the disposition to acknowledge his royal character. Jehu paid a similar mark of respect to the idolatress Jezebel immediately after he had caused her destruction⁶. And it is to be observed that Bartius's conduct is nowhere spoken of as if it had extended to open rebellion against Cambyses. He is rather conceived of as secretly tampering with the subjects of the latter, and, if destroyed at all during his reign, as cut off by assassination,—in so mysterious a manner as to occasion very different reports both of the time and the circumstances of his death, and to furnish more than one pretender with plausible grounds for asserting his existence. For until after the death of Cambyses it was popularly believed that he was alive and reigning; therefore, up to that time it was impossible that he should have been publicly declared a rebel and as such deprived of his royal character, even if we grant that this consequence would, in oriental ways of thinking, follow from such a public declaration. And after the death of Cambyses, and the assertion being publicly made that the professed Bartius was an impostor, there would remain no motive for such a gratuitous insult to the memory of a prince who no longer stood in the way of Darius.

To return to the history of the empire after the death of Cyrus; it may be gathered from every account of Cambyses that his distinctive character was that of a despiser of the prevailing religion, his hostility to which was carried to the extreme of intolerance. A savage in temperament and filled with religious fanaticism, his policy put an end to the calm which had been produced by the compromise of his father Cyrus, and induced the troubles which it was the interest of his brother Bartius, king of the Bactrians', to foment. It was only natural under such circumstances that the Medians should seize the opportunity of Cambyses's absence in Egypt to endeavour to rid themselves of him, and at the same time revive the supremacy of their own religion. It had become a question between supremacy or extinction; and accordingly the general revolt spoken of in the Behistun tablets took place, and was for a time eminently successful, until the Ormuzd worshippers under the guidance of Darius—the next heir to the empire after the death of Bartius—once more obtained the victory, and by the consummate skill of their champion succeeded in consolidating it. Indeed the true political significance of the Magian usurpation,—represented as it is by Herodotus in the light of a private scheme, carried into effect by an ambitious and unprincipled pretender,—yet shows itself here and there in his narrative, in insulated passages which harmonize ill with the story that he follows in his main account, but are in exact agreement with the course of proceedings as recorded in the Behistun tablets. Several of these undesigned confirmations of the official account have been remarked in the notes¹, and probably more will be detected by a reader whose attention has been once called to the subject.

The narrative of Herodotus represents the cadastral system introduced by Darius as his first measure after setting up the monument to which the strange story of his horse was attached⁹. But this system, from its very nature, implies a centralization of government. It was calculated by its operation to render the monarch far more independent of his powerful vassals¹, and likewise to procure him personal popularity in the outlying countries, the imposts on which were fixed by it at a definite sum, instead of being left dependent on the will of the ruffianly chiefs who happened to be in command. It was only to be expected that this limitation of arbitrary power should be unpalatable to the semi-barbarous Persian chivalry, and that they should express their contempt for the financial turn of their sovereign by nicknaming him "a tradesman²." Now when Herodotus puts the erection of the monument and the introduction of the cadastral scheme together, this is (I apprehend) due to the circumstance of the two relating to the salient points of Darius's life. His accession to the throne of Media not merely made him the feudal superior of the king of Persia, but united in one family the hereditary sovereignty of both countries, and thus furnished him with a power that his predecessors had not possessed,—that of converting a bundle of states into an organic whole. Except under such circumstances, it is likely that the centralization effected by him would have been impossible; and we see that those Persians who were not Achæmenids, as well as the Magian usurpers, are represented by Herodotus as pursuing the opposite policy, and one calculated to encourage the independence of the separate states³. But even with such advantages of position it is inconceivable that such a revolution as that effected in the creation of the Persian empire (as we find it at the end of Darius's reign) can have been brought about by him rapidly. It is more reasonable to consider it as the ultimate state into which things subsided at the end of a long series of wars and civil troubles. And this is exactly what the Behistun Inscription would lead us to believe. The annals, which take up the greater portion of the first and the whole of the remaining three tablets which completed the original monument, are nothing more or less than the details of those campaigns which issued in the acquisition of absolute dominion over the twenty-three provinces, these provinces themselves being enumerated immediately after the formal recitation of Darius's titles, that is, in the very beginning of the Inscription. The acquisition of the empire and its reduction under a system of central government is plainly regarded by the Persian monarch, in the same light as the French Code was by Napoleon: it is the great work in which he looks to go down to posterity, —the résumé of his achievements. Before it could have been effected the spirit of the individual races must have been quelled, their separate interests fused together, and the weight of individual nobles diminished to an extent which could scarcely have been produced by any other agency than that which the Inscription shows us to have been at work, viz. bloody wars of race and religion, terminating in the establishment of a central predominant power wielding the resources of the whole empire.

² See, for example, note 439 on i. 130; note 204 on iii. 70; note 238 on iii. 88.

Such a course of events is quite natural, and in accordance with what has taken place in many other countries. The struggles which resulted in the supremacy of Darius have their parallel in the Thirty Years' War of modern Europe, and in our own Wars of the Roses. Henry the Seventh is the English Darius in many important elements of his character and fortunes, although wanting his personal accomplishments and generous temper.

Conformably to what might have been expected from a train of events such as has been sketched out, it appears that Darius changed the seat of government from Agbatana to Susa. This was as important a step as it would be to transfer the British court and legislature from London to Edinburgh; or as it would have been if the Bourbons on their restoration had made Bourdeaux the capital of France. Yet the fact only appears indirectly from the narrative of Herodotus⁴, who is perfectly unconscious of the momentous revolution of interests necessarily involved in such a policy, and never explicitly notices it at all.

Again, the extreme anxiety about the personal identity of Bartius, and the very mysterious circumstances attending his death, receive an entirely new illustration if the relationship of Darius to Cyrus was what we have suggested. It is perfectly certain that very many persons believed Gomates to be the genuine son of Cyrus, and perhaps with justice. Darius believed himself to be the only person cognizant of the death of the real Smerdis⁶. Prexaspes must have believed the same⁶. Otanes, in his turn, fancied the pretender's secret known only to him⁷. One thing is clear, that it was absolutely necessary for the Persian party to destroy Gomates, and that they had the same motive for denying his claim to be the son of Cyrus that the Orange party in the reign of James II. had for trumping up the story of the warming-pan. The claim of legitimate succession has always been too powerful an engine not to be coveted by aspirants to power, and secured, if necessary, by the commission of crime; and the removal of the only obstacle to Darius's accession (whether Gomates or Bartius) was at last achieved by a small band of conspirators⁸, who justified their act to the world by the equivocal evidence of producing the head of their victim and that of his brother⁹ in public.

But by whatever means Darius may have acquired his power, it is plain from various incidents mentioned in the narrative of Herodotus, that he used it in a prudent and temperate manner. If he spared nothing to establish the supremacy of the religious party of which, according to the Behistun Inscription, he was the champion, yet, that result having been obtained, he appears to have been at least tolerant of the conquered party. The fierce fanaticism which had served him excellently as a weapon of offence must have become very inconvenient when he had no longer rivals to overthrow; and it was only to be expected that he should revert to the policy of Cyrus and carefully avoid that of Cambyses. And hence, probably, arose that revival of Median customs and religious rites in the court of the new dynasty, which is indicated in the consultation of Magian

⁶ Id. iii. 74.

⁸ This is the statement of the Behistun tablets as well as of Herodotus.

⁹ I am much inclined to suspect that the two Magians of Herodotus's story (iii. 78, 79) grew out of the two pretenders, Gomates and Veisdates, of the Behistun annals. Each of these professed to be Bartius the son of Cyrus; but there seems to have been a considerable interval between their attempts,—the one being the first, the other the seventh of the nine figures which in the original bas-relief appear as conquered by Darius. See note 415 on iii. 152, for a parallel case.

soothsayers by his son Xerxes¹, the Magian hero worship at Ilium², the scrupulous reverence for Delos exhibited by the Median commander Datis³, and (as it would seem) the recognition in later times of the necessity of a Magian priest even where the ceremonial belonged to a simple religious system⁴. Indeed the remarkable tendency of the Persians to adopt foreign customs, which Herodotus himself remarks as an especial characteristic, would probably have baffled the attempt of Darius, had he even been desirous of making one, to retain them, after inheriting the wealth and civilization of their late masters, in the simplicity of their ancient manners and ancient faith. The more sagacious chiefs of the old school doubtless, like Artembares⁵, prophesied the degeneracy of a generation brought up in habits which would have excited the horror of Cyrus, but their protest was in vain; and in the time of Herodotus it can scarcely be doubted that the court of the Great King presented in morals, religion, and social indulgence of all kinds, a picture in no respect different from that which might have been seen in the worst days of the Median or Assyrian dynasties.

After the capture of Babylon, Darius undertakes an expedition against Scythia to

² τοῦ Δαρείου ἔλασις. The narrative is continued below, § 82. In the Behistun inscription there are four original columns in which the conquests of Darius are recorded, the fourth being a recapitulation of them. From this it appears that Babylon was twice taken by his troops, the second time commanded by Intaphres, a Median; and this is the last of his feats in the original inscription. But there is a supplementary column, unfortunately illegible, which appears to relate to an expedition against the Sacæ,—the name by which, according to Herodotus, the Persians called all the Scythians (vii. 64). No doubt he was represented as succeeding here as well as in the other campaigns; for in a field cut in the rock above all the inscriptions, in which the figure of Darius is seen trampling upon Gomates the Magian, there comes a string of eight kings pinioned, and behind these a figure in a pointed cap, with the inscription, "This is Sarúhka the Sacan." Although the inscription of the supplementary column is unreadable, it is yet plain, 1. That if it described the Scythian expedition, the Persian arms were represented as victorious. 2. That the expedition must have taken place at a later period in Darius's reign than is supposed by Herodotus; for the supplementary column is of a later date; and the latter part of the fourth of the original inscription is taken up with an address to the king's successors to follow up his policy, by which he had preserved the favour of Ormuzd and consolidated the empire.

³ ὑπῆρξαν ἀδικίης. The anxiety shown by all nations, except those who, like the Caunians (i. 172), have a war-god for their tutelary deity, to justify themselves by pretexts even the flimsiest for beginning war on their neighbours is very remarkable. It would seem that naked injustice is an unbearable spectacle even to uncivilized races. See the pretence of the Ægi-netans for enslaving the Samian refugees

⁷ τοῦ τὰς φλέβας. The manuscript S has this reading. The others, which Gaisford follows, omit τοῦ.

⁸ δονέουσι τὸ γάλα. Herodotus describes this as if the stirring the milk were a step in the process of getting cream from it. But in fact it is a part of the operation of making koumiss. The Calmucks found among the Cossacks of the Don are described by CLARKE as mixing one-sixth of warm water with five-sixths of mare's milk, which mixture is kept in continual agitation till fermentation ensues. This result is hastened by adding a little old koumiss by way of leaven. They also go through an additional step, by distilling this liquor over fires of dung, and getting from it a kind of bad brandy (Travels in Russia, vol. 1. pp. 313, seqq.); but this seems to belong to modern civilization.

⁹ τούτων μὲν εἵνεκα. The meaning of the writer is, not that the blindness of the slaves rendered them more serviceable for the duty imposed upon them, but that they were blinded because they could perform this service—the only one put upon them—equally well. Of course their blindness prevented the possibility of their ever absconding, which would otherwise be rendered very easy by the nomad life their masters led.

¹⁰ τάφρον ὀρυζάμενοι εὐρέαν. RUBR-QUIS (in 1253) found a ditch extending across the isthmus of the Crimea, and a custom house for levying duties,—chiefly on salt. The distance is very little more than two geographical miles, and the position would appear by the account of BARON TOTT (quoted by Rennell, p. 98) to be a very strong one. He says that if properly palisaded and armed, it would defend the Crimea from an army of 100,000 men. From this circumstance, and from that of ΣΤΡΑΛΩ (vii. c. 4, p. 92) giving the name of Taphrii to the inhabitants of the coast of the Καρκινίτης κόλπος (the modern Ulu Deynits, or Dead Sea), which runs up to the isthmus from the west, Rennell and others have assumed that the trench mentioned here by Herodotus must be at Pericop. But from § 20 it seems pretty certain to have been in the neighbourhood of Taganrock.
That there was the appearance of a dyke at Pericop in very early times is quite to be expected from the nature of the locality.
The Crimea, which rises abruptly on the south to the height of 1200 feet above the sea, sinks gradually to the north, and at last with so easy a slope as to lose itself insensibly in the great plain of the adjacent country N. of the isthmus,—which is very little above the level of the Euxine.

But the isthmus across which the lines of Pericop are drawn, although itself a plain, overtops the plain without by about 40 feet. This however it joins with so gentle a slope as to appear artificially joined.
(TOTT, op. Rennell, p. 67—70.) From this description it is obvious that the alluvial deposits of the Borysthenes and the accumulations of sea sand must have gradually converted the Crimea from an island into a peninsula, but have been confined to the lower level during the process. In the mean time the difference of level mentioned by Tott will have produced to the eye the effect of an escarpment, and given the channel, as it gradually narrowed, the appearance of a dyke.

¹¹ καὶ ἔφευγον. An exactly similar story to this in the text is related in the Chronicles of Novogorod; and, as in He-rodotus's tale, the tradition attaches to a certain locality. The slaves of Novogorod, who had cohabited with the wives of the citizens during their seven years' absence in the siege of a Greek town, fly, when their old masters begin to brandish their whips, to a place which continued to bear the name of Chalappigrod (Slaves' Castle).

¹² τῷ οὔνομα εἶναι Ταργίταον. In this name some have supposed the root of the word 'Turk' to exist. What the derivation of that name is remains an uncertain point; but it is one by which all the Tartars of the north of the Black Sea and Caspian (a region including the whole of Herodotus's Scythia) prefer to be designated (ADELUNG, Mithridates, i. p. 453), although the Nogay and Crim Tartars, who coincide more closely with Herodotus's Scythians, call themselves 'Mankat.' (ID. ib. p. 471.)

¹⁶ ἄσπον ἵνα βουλόμενον αὐτὰ λαβεῖν. The manuscripts S and V have ἄσπον ἵνα αὐτῶν βουλόμενον λαβεῖν.

¹⁷ ἀπώσασθαι. The two manuscripts S and V have for this word the reading ἀπαλάσσεσθαι, which Schweighäuser and Gaisford consider to have arisen from a gloss. To me it appears to be a genuine variant, although not preferable to the reading of the other MSS.

¹⁹ Τράσπιοι. The MSS vary between this form, Τράπιοι, and Τράπιοι. The last is the reading of S and V.

²¹ θυσίησι μεγάλῃσι ἱλασκόμενοι μετέρχονται. Herodotus uses the expression λιτῇσι μετέρχεσθαι below (vi. 69). The phrase ἱλασκόμενοι, as applied to the gold, will not surprise, if we consider that the objects were regarded as sacred fetishes. In the same way the Israelites burnt incense before the brazen serpent, which Hezekiah on that account destroyed. (2 Kings xviii. 4.)

²² πτερῶν γὰρ καὶ τὴν γῆν καὶ τὸν ἥερα εἶναι πλέον. This is, as Herodotus conjectures below (§ 31), a misrepresentation of the falling flakes of snow, which in the old German mythology was represented as feathers tumbling from the bed of the goddess Holda, when she shook it in making it. Holda as a deity comes pretty near to the Latin Diana. See GRIMM, Deutsche Mythologie, p. 165.

²³ οἱ τὸν Πόντον οἰκούντες. This expression seems to prove, not indeed that Herodotus's information of the Scythians was derived directly from themselves, but that it was something different from the legends current in the Pontine towns.

²⁴ κατοικημένον. This is the reading of all the MSS except two, δ and Δ, which have κατοικημένην. Schweighäuser, considering that there is a clumsiness in the combination οικεῖν κατοικημένον would read κατοικημένον, which is often used by Herodotus as the equivalent of κειμένην. (See i. 142. 193; iv. 196.) But although the sentence would run better by adopting this suggestion, this reason is a very insufficient one for resorting to conjecture.

²⁵ μίσκοπαρθενόν τινα ἔχιδναν. The tradition (given as Scythian) by DIONORUS (ii. 43) makes Zeus (not Heracles) the progenitor of Scythes by Echidna. Probably the insignia of the Scythian Zeus were such as to suggest Heracles to the imagination of the Pontine Greeks. These would be the bow, the belt, and the drinking-cup (see below, § 10), i.e. the idol would be attired in the garb of a native warrior. Just so the deity worshipped on the banks of the Libyan lake Tritonis wore the costume of the women of the country. See note 487, below.

²⁶ καὶ τὸν κομισάμενον ἐθέλειν ἀπαλλάσσεσθαι. These words answer to the clause κείνην ὑπερβαλέσθαι, κ.τ.λ., and are to be taken after the word λέγουσι, with which the whole narrative is introduced. “They relate that while she kept putting off the restoration of the steeds in the wish to enjoy Heracles’s society as long as possible, he wanted to get them and be gone.” Τὸν is the equivalent of ἐκείνον, as continually in Herodotus.

She bears three sons; Agathyrus, Gelonus, and Scythes, of whom only the youngest was able to string his father's bow.

He is the ancestor of the Scythian chiefs.

Another story, to which the author inclines, brings the Scythians ζωννύμενον, τούτον μὲν τῆσδε τῆς χώρας οἰκίτορα ποιεῦ' δς δ' ἂν τούτων τῶν ἔργων τῶν ἐντέλλομαι λίπηται, ἔκπεμπε ἐκ τῆς χώρας καὶ ταῦτα ποιεύσα, αὐτὴ τε εὐφρανέαι καὶ τὰ ἐντεταλμένα ποιήσεις." Τὸν μὲν δὴ εἰρύσαντα τῶν τόξων τὸ ἕτερον, (δύο γὰρ δὴ φορέειν τέως Ἡρακλέα,) καὶ τὸν ζωστήρα προδέξαντα, παραδοῦναι τὸ τόξον τε καὶ τὸν ζωστήρα ἔχοντα ἐπ' ἄκρης τῆς συμβολῆς φιάλην χρυσήν, διδόντα δὲ ἀπαλλάσσεσθαι τὴν δ', ἐπεὶ οἱ γενομένους τοὺς παῖδας ἀνδρωθῆναι, τοῦτο μὲν σφι οὐνόματα θέσθαι, τῷ μὲν Ἀγάθυρσον αὐτῶν, τῷ δ' ἐπομένῳ Γελωνόν, Σκύθην δὲ τῷ νεωτάτῳ· τοῦτο δὲ τῆς ἐπιστολῆς²¹ μεμνημένην αὐτὴν ποιῆσαι τὰ ἐντεταλμένα· καὶ δὴ δύο μὲν οἱ τῶν παιδῶν, τὸν τε Ἀγάθυρσον καὶ τὸν Γελωνόν, οὐκ οἶους τε γενομένους ἐξικέσθαι πρὸς τὸν προκείμενον ἀέθλον, οἴχεσθαι ἐκ τῆς χώρας ἐκβληθέντας ὑπὸ τῆς γεωαμένης, τὸν δὲ νεώτατον αὐτῶν Σκύθην, ἐπιτελέσαντα, καταμείναι ἐν τῇ χώρῃ· καὶ ἀπὸ μὲν Σκύθew τοῦ Ἡρακλέος γενέσθαι τοὺς αἰεὶ βασιλέας γινομένους Σκυθῶν ἀπὸ δὲ τῆς φιάλης ἔτι καὶ ἐς τότε φιάλας ἐκ τῶν ζωστήρων φορέειν Σκύθας, τὸ δὴ μόνον μηχανήσασθαι τὴν μητέρα Σκύθη. ταῦτα δὲ Ἑλλήνων οἱ τὸν Πόντον οἰκέοντες λέγουσι.

"Ἔστι δὲ καὶ ἄλλος λόγος ἔχων ὧδε, τῷ μάλιστα λεγομένῳ αὐτὸς πρόσκειμαι· Σκύθας τοὺς νομάδας, οἰκέοντας ἐν τῇ Ἀσίῃ, πολέμῳ πιεσθέντας ὑπὸ Μασσαγετῶν οἴχεσθαι διαβάντας ποταμὸν Ἀράξea²² ἐπὶ γῆν τὴν Κιμμερίην τὴν γὰρ νῦν νέμονται Σκύθαι, αὕτη λέγεται τὸ παλαιὸν εἶναι Κιμμερίων²³. τοὺς δὲ Κιμμερίους,

²³ τὴν γὰρ νῦν νέμονται Σκύθαι, αὕτη λέγεται τὸ παλαιὸν εἶναι Κιμμερίων. The Cimmerians, in the apprehension of those persons from whom Herodotus obtained his information, appear to have been regarded as a distinct race formerly overspreading the plains to the north of the Black Sea as far as to the bank of the Danube on the west, and that of the Volga on the east (see note 677 on i. 201) who had been expelled by the Scythians, the then existing inhabitants of the region. But the only remaining memorials of the race seem to have been the names Κιμμέρια τεύχεα, Πορθμῆζα Κιμμέρια, &c. (below, § 12) in Europe, and insulated traditions current in different localities,—for instance, at Sardis (i. 15), and at Sinope

(iv. 12),—relative to one or more invasions of Asia by them. STRABO shows the very indefinite character of these traditions, and the doubt attaching even to the name of the invaders: *οἱ τε Κιμμέριοι, οὗς καὶ Τρήρνας ὀνομάζουσι, ἢ ἐκείνων τι ἔθνος, πολλάκις ἐπέδραμον τὰ δεξιὰ μέρη τοῦ Πόντου καὶ τὰ συνεχῆ αὐτοῖς, ποτὲ μὲν ἐπὶ Παφλαγονίας, ποτὲ δὲ καὶ Θρόγας ἐμβαλόντες· ἥρκα Μίδαν αἶμα ταύρου πίνοντα φασὶν ἀπελθεῖν εἰς τὸ χρεόν. Λόγδαμος δὲ τοὺς αὐτοῦ ἔγωγε μὴχρι Λυδίας καὶ Ἰωνίας ἤλασε, καὶ Χάρδεϊς εἶλον· ἐν Κιλικίᾳ δὲ διεφθάρη. Πολλὰκις δὲ καὶ οἱ Κιμμέριοι καὶ οἱ Τρήρες ἐποίησαντο τὰς τοιαύτας ἐφόδους· τοὺς δὲ Τρήρας καὶ Κῶβον ἐπὶ Μάδους τὸ τελευταῖον ἐξελαθῆναι φασὶ τοῦ τῶν Κιμμερίων βασιλέως (i. c. 3, p. 97. See note 59 on i. 15). In the story to which Strabo refers a Madys is king of the Cimmerians, but in Herodotus, i. 103, Madyes (which is essentially the same name) is king, not of them, but of their Scythian enemies. The later geographers, identifying the Κίμβριοι of Roman history with the Κιμμέριοι, endeavoured to bring the race from the German Ocean to the Tauric Chersonese. (POSEIDONIUS, ap. Strabon. vii. c. 2, p. 89.) This is a course precisely parallel to that adopted by ERNOSTUS with regard to the Pelasgians. (See note 179 on i. 56.) ADRIANO is very earnest in protesting against the identification of the races denoted by the two names. He conceives the Cimmerians to be a Thracian tribe, and to be represented by the *Tauri in the time of Herodotus (iv. 99). That they were Thracian he considers to follow from the prevalence of the same names Cotys, Seleucus, Rhescuporis, and Rhemetalces among both the Thracian and the Bosphorane sovereigns. Names terminating in -sades (such as Berisades and Medosades) are likewise found among both. The Cimbri, on the other hand, he considers to be genuine Germans. (Mithridates, ii. p. 353.) The Κιμμέριοι of the Odyssey (xi. 14) are a purely mythical people; and the Alexandrines, ARISTARCHUS and CRATES, read Κερβερίων in that passage.

²⁰ μὴδὲ πρὸς πολλοὺς δεόμενον κυνδυνεῖν. This reading, which is adopted by Gaisford, rests upon A, B, S, V, and appears to me to be genuine. But it does not seem that δεόμενον is to be in any way connected with πρῆγμα. I should render the passage, "and that there was no need to fight against such numbers,"—an euphemistic expression for the sentiment that it would be absurd to do so. There is no ellipse of any other word in the phrase πρῆγμα εἶναι, any more than in ἔργον εἶναι, which is often used in just the same way, meaning to be 'the proper thing to be done.'

²¹ καταλαμβάνειν. This is a conjecture of Valcknaer's. The MSS have καταλαμβάνει, which Gaisford retains. But the infinitive seems requisite. See i. 89: τάδε τοι ἐξ αὐτῶν ἐπίδοξα γενέσθαι. vi. 12: πολλὰ ἐπίδοξα τῶντ' αὐτῶν πείσεσθαι εἰσὶ.

³⁴ ἐν τῇ νῦν Σινώπῃ πόλιν Ἑλλάς οἰκισται. Sinope was a colony from Miletus, and the most important of the settlements on this part of the coast of the Euxine. It was situated on the neck of a promontory, and had a port on each side. The original cause of the settlement probably was the great abundance of the smaller tunny-fish (called by the name πυλαμύδια), in which it even exceeded Byzantium. The rock-bound shore in the neighbourhood rendered it very dangerous of access, while the soil was remarkably fertile. (STRABO, xii. c. 3, p. 23.)

λεγόμενος λόγος. That this account should be common both to Greeks and barbarians, and yet not (in all probability) a true one, may be easily explained. See the note 364 on i. 104. It was a fact that the Cimmerians were pressed by nomad hordes, the same which afterwards inhabited the Scythia of Herodotus's time. It was also a fact that similar hordes called by the same name, i. e. Sacæ (by which the Persians denominated all Scythians, vii. 64), invaded Media. The problem with the λόγοι was to connect these two facts; and the story in the text served excellently (while the geography was obscure) for this purpose. But it will be observed that in this passage the site of Media is undoubtedly mistaken, and that ἐς μεσόγαιαν τῆς οἰδοῦ τραφέντες is an exact description of what would be likely to happen to a pastoral horde on turning the spur of Caucasus which runs down to the w. coast of the Caspian Sea. They would spread up the valley of the Cyrus, far away from Media. But still in after times this country might, for commercial purposes, be regarded as Median by Greek merchants,—as has been shown in the note 363 on i. 104,—and thus justify the phrase ἐσέβαλον ἐς τὴν Μηδικήν.

³⁵ Ἀριμασποὺς, ἄνδρας μονοφθάλμους. The name Arimaspi is derived by Herodotus from two Scythian words. See below, § 27.

³⁸ ποιήσας. This is the reading of Gaisford, on the authority of the manuscripts K, P, F, δ. Others, including S, have εἴπας, a reading which ORIGEN appears to have found (c. Cel. iv. 3).

³⁹ εἴρηται. This is the reading adopted by Gaisford, though the MSS which he follows in the last line have εἴρηκα; and so has ORIGEN.

⁴⁰ ἐν Προκοννήσῳ καὶ Κυζίκῳ. There would be considerable traffic between these places on account of the marble quarries in the former, which supplied material for the finest buildings in all the cities of this region, especially Cyzicus. (STRABO, xiii. c. 1, p. 92.) It is the modern Marmora, which gives its name to the sea in which it lies. It will be observed that each of these two places was held as a fief of Persia in the time of Darius, as dynasts from each of them were among the number left in charge of the bridge over the Ister (§ 138, below). There is no account of their being conquered, and probably all that took place was the transfer of their allegiance from a Lydian to a Persian suzerain. See note on vi. 37, ἐν γνέμῳ γεγονός.

⁴¹ ἀμφισβητέειν. This is the reading of all the MSS (except S, which has ἀμφισβητέειν), and it is retained by Gaisford. ORIGEN, however, has the form ἀμφισβητέειν, which, as Kenrick has remarked, is formed after the analogy of παρεβατέειν, and appears to be the genuine form in other places. (See note on ix. 74.) In the next line he has νεκρῷ for νεκρῷ.

⁴⁴ εἶναι κόραξ. The crow or raven was originally a symbol of the prophetic deity. Afterwards it became an attendant of him, the poetical mythologists furnishing a reason for the satisfaction of the imagination of the worshipper. Aristaeas and the crow are to Apollo just what Callisto and the bear were to Artemis. See notes 164 and 366 on i. 52 and 106.

⁴⁵ ἐστᾶσι. So Gaisford and the MSS. ORIGEN has εἰσι. The reading of the MSS is the more appropriate one, as the laurel trees were bronze representations of the natural shrub. (THEOPOMPUS, ap. Athenaeum, xiii. p. 605.) It was very natural that this should be in the agora, where one would hardly look for real laurels. A similar representation seems to have existed in the temple at Jerusalem in the time of king Josiah. (2 Kings xiii. 6.) Compare too 1 Kings xv. 13. No doubt the pools and groves of nature were the original sites of the ritual in the elemental religions, but when cities were built and the form of ceremonial still retained, artificial representations became necessary in many cases.

⁴⁶ τῆς περὶ ὅδε ὁ λόγος ὥρμηται λέγεσθαι. STRABO (i. c. 2, p. 21) distinctly asserts that the geographical knowledge of τὰ πέραν τοῦ Ἰστροῦ τὰ μέχρι Τύρου ποταμοῦ was due to the Romans, while that of the parts beyond the Tyrras, μέχρι Μαυροῦν καὶ τῆς εἰς Κάλχους τελευτήσης παραλίας, dates only from the time of Mithridates.

⁴⁷ ἀτρεκές. So Gaisford following A, B, S, V. The manuscript M has ἀτρε-

¹⁸ οὐδὲ οὗτος. This accumulation of negatives is quite in accordance with the genius of the Greek language. ΠΛΑΤΟ has: τιθῶμέν γε αὐτοὺς λέγειν, μηδὲν μηδὲν μηδεμίαν δύναμιν ἔχει κοινωνίας εἰς μηδέν. (Sophist. p. 251.)

¹⁹ ὅσον μὲν ἡμεῖς . . . ἀκοῇ ἐξικέσθαι. The same expression is used above (i. 171), ὅσον καὶ ἐγὼ δυνατός εἰμι μακρότατον ἐξικέσθαι ἀκοῇ, where see the note 572 for other instances.

²⁰ Σκυθίας. S and V have Σκυθικῆς. κρόμμυνα καὶ σκόροδα καὶ φακοὺς. These articles of food are united in Numb. xi. 5. They, with salt fish, furnished the only seasoning to the bread which was the staple food of the common people almost universally in the time of Herodotus. See ii. 125, and note 371 thereon.

²² ἐρήμος. The manuscripts S and V accentuate this word on the first syllable.

The grammarians assert that it was the practice of the old Ionian and Attic dialect to sound it as with the circumflex on the penult, as also in the case of ὁμοῖος and ἐτοῖμος.

²³ ἡ Ὑλαίη. Herodotus mentions this region by name in several other places (§§ 19, 54, 55, 76), and in the last of these defines its position more carefully than in any other, and in terms which are appropriate to a maritime trader familiar with the landmark constituted by the Ἀχιλλεῖος δρόμος. In the other passages the site is laid down as it might be by a land traveller or geographer in a general description of Scythia. The timber obtained from it no doubt rendered it an object of interest to the Hellenic traders, but they would know it rather as the place from which the timber floats came than by having personally visited it. It is said now to be quite bare of wood.

²⁴ ἄνω. This is an ingenious emendation of Valcknaer's from ἐνθροποι, the reading of all the MSS, which would be written in its abbreviated form ἄνοι. It is confirmed by a passage of EPHORUS (ap. Scymnum Chium, t. ii. p. 49, ed. Hudson), which is no doubt taken from and above it the Corn-growing Borysthenites, who call themselves Olbiopolitans.

After eleven days to the north is a desert, and beyond it

Πέρην δὲ τοῦ Γέρρου ταῦτα δὴ τὰ καλούμενα Βασιλήϊα⁶⁰

Herodotus's description: πρὸς ἀνατολὰς δ' ἐκβάντι τὸν Βορυσθένην τοὺς τὴν λεγομένην Ὑβλαν (legendum Ὑλαιαν) οἰκοῦντας Σκύθας· εἶναι δὲ γεωργοὺς ἐχομένους τούτων ἦν. Gaisford adopts it.

⁵⁴ ἐπὶ τῷ Ὑπάνι ποταμῷ. The city Olbia stood upon the right bank of the Hypanis, about six miles above the junction with the Borysthenes. The site bears the name of Stomogil (Hundred mounds), from the number of tumuli in the neighbourhood. In an inscription found there mention is made of certain μυζέλληνες, which no doubt are the hybrid population called by Herodotus Callipidae and Alazones (above, § 17).

⁵⁶ ἡ δὲ. So Gaisford prints on the authority of S, V, and c. The other MSS have ἡδη δὲ, a variation certainly not inferior to the text.

⁵⁷ Ἀνδροφάγοι. He mentions these cannibals again below (§ 106).

⁶⁰ τὰ δὲ πρὸς τὴν ἡῶ, κ.τ.λ. It is extremely difficult to reconcile the topography of this section with that of §§ 99—101. Perhaps we may suppose that Herodotus is here following Olbiopolitan accounts, which took no account of any thing but the hordes along the line of a caravan route, by which the traffic from the neighbourhood of the mouth of the Tanais arrived. In the last two sections the description likewise suggests that Olbia is the source of the account, being probably the mart to which the commodities from the several localities mentioned in § 17 were floated down.

⁶¹ ἡμερέων τεσσέρων καὶ δέκα ὁδόν. This would give seventeen days (perhaps caravan marches) from the Borysthenes to the river Gerrhus. In § 101 the distance from the Borysthenes to the Maeotis is estimated at only ten.

⁶² τὰ καλούμενα Βασιλήϊα. It is not clear whether these words imply merely a region, so called from being tenanted by the Royal Scythians, or whether they refer to any definite landmark,—such for instance as a remarkable assemblage of barrows,—called by some name of which τὰ βασιλήϊα may be the Greek translation. It is quite certain that on the banks of the river Tyras there were barrows which went by the name of 'the Kings' Grave' (see above, § 11), and it is only to be expected that similar names should be given to similar appearances elsewhere.

ἐστι, καὶ Σκύθαι οἱ ἄριστοί τε καὶ πλείστοι, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους eastward to the river Gertus. East of this are the Royal Scythians, who extend as far as Cremni, and even to the Tanais. North of these are the Melanchlani, 21

It seems however very unlikely that actual regal palaces should have existed, as some commentators have imagined.

⁶³ Μαιήτιδος. This is the reading of Gaisford. Several MSS have the form Μαιώτιδος, which is universal in § 3, above. In viii. 23 two MSS alone have the form Ἰστυαίτιδος, the others Ἰστυαίτιδος.

⁶⁴ Κρημνοί. This would probably be at or near the modern Taganrock.

⁶⁵ Σαυροματέων. See note 296 on § 116, below.

⁶⁶ ἐκ τοῦ μυχοῦ. In this bay there was an emporium called by the same name as the river (Tanais), where the Cimmerian Bosphoranes of Corocondame and Phanagoria used to exchange wine and articles of dress for skins and slaves which were brought thither by the nomads on each side of the Tanais. By the way in which STRABO speaks of these places, there can be little doubt that they existed in the time of Herodotus, yet they are obviously unknown to him. Yet independently of this important traffic, the sea of Azof was the head quarters of the fisheries in these parts (xi. c. 2, p. 401). It would seem therefore as if from some cause or other this line of traffic was closed at the time Herodotus wrote, and that the commerce of the north and east was obliged to find its way overland to the Borysthenes or Hypanis (§ 17, above). Strabo expressly mentions (xi. c. 5, p. 423) that the carriage of the merchandise from Babylon and from India was once in the hands of the Aorsi and Sirakes (whom he places in the plains of the Don and Kouban), and that they received it from the Armenians and the Medes; and though the time to which he refers is later than Alexander, yet the route can hardly then have been first struck out.

⁶⁷ λάξιν. The manuscripts S and V have τάξιν. The word λάξιν is derived from a root λαχ, still traceable in the form ἐλαχον, which is the regular aorist of λαγχάνω. Lachesia, the name of one of the Moere, has the same origin.

⁶⁸ Βουδίνου. For the description of these see below, § 108.

⁶⁹ ἀπηλιόττην ἄνεμον. This is the s.e. wind, or perhaps the s. by s.

then a desert seven days in extent; then more eastward come the Thysagetae and Iyrcae; and beyond them other Scythians, a swarm from the Royal Scythians.

In the flanks of the mountains which bound the plain of Scythia live the Argippeans, a sacred race of bald men, who live under trees, possess no weapons, are appealed to as judges, and possess the privilege of sanctuary.

" φαλακροὶ ἐκ γενεῆς γινόμενοι. MALTEBRUN (cited by Bähr) says that it is the practice among the Calmucks to shave, from the very earliest years, the heads of those whom they destine for the priesthood. Possibly such a priestly caste is the foundation for the statement in the text.

" ποτικὸν μὲν οὖνομα τῷ δενδρέῳ ἀπὸ

ERMAN, Reise um die Erde, i. p. 427—9, quoted by Cooley, says that the present inhabitants of the southern parts of the Ural are called Baskhire, which he strangely maintains to be etymologically equivalent to φαλακροὶ. They are not Monguls, but Turks; although they have the Mongul physiognomy, and consequently accord with Herodotus's description. Their mode of preparing the fruit of the bird-cherry is exactly what Herodotus describes; and the acid strained off is called by the Russians of the present day by the name Atschui. But these points of similarity may well exist without establishing the identity of the race.

" πῖλῳ στεγνῷ λευκῷ. This is the felt out of which the Tartar tents are commonly made. The epithet στεγνός (close) differentiates it from textile fabrics.

⁷⁵ τῶν ἔμπροσθεν ἐθνέων, "of the tribes before you (as you travel on)." Larcher contends that πολλὰ περιφάνεια means "a thorough knowledge," and quotes two or three passages from Demosthenes to defend his view. But although it may be conceded that something like this is the upshot of the meaning, such a translation would entirely mask the association of ideas suggested by the expression. τὸ περιφανές is the opposite of τὸ ἐν γνώσει πεπραγμένον, and in the passages of Demosthenes which Larcher cites this is most plain. A better version of πολλὰ περιφάνεια would be "a perfectly easy means of seeing."

⁷⁶ δι' ἑπτὰ ἔρμηνων καὶ δι' ἑπτὰ γλωσσέων. This seems to show that there were seven distinct tribes through which the caravan traffic passed between its departure from the oriental mart and its arrival on the Borysthenes or Hypanis. This would induce the belief that the extent of the journey must be very great, perhaps even as far as China.

⁷⁷ ἀτρεκέως. So Gaisford, following the majority of MSS. But S has ἀτρεκές. See above, note 47 on § 16.

⁷⁸ οἱ τὴν ἐξάμηνον καθεύδουσι. The notion contained in these words doubtless arose from the circumstance of the long nights in the arctic regions being known by report. We need not however conclude that any Hellenic travellers had ever arrived within the arctic circle. See note 128 on § 42, below.

⁷⁹ [τὴν]. This word is omitted in S and V.

⁸⁰ [ἀτρεκέως]. This word is omitted in the manuscripts M, K, P, F.

²³ δέ. The manuscript S omits this word, as if the paragraph next following were of the nature of a note.

²⁴ ἀναμίζαντες δὲ πάντα τὰ κρέα. It is observable that this custom, which Herodotus ascribes to the Issedones here and to the Massagetæ (i. 216), the printing in colours which he attributes to the inhabitants of Caucasus (i. 203), the diet which he gives to the natives of the islands in the Araxes (i. 202), and the promiscuous intercourse which he imputes to the Massagetæ (i. 216), are by STRABO all given to one people, viz. the nomadic inhabitants of the basins of the Jaxartes and Oxus, whom he calls the Massagetæ (xi. c. 8, pp. 432, 433). The variation is in my opinion solely due to the circumstance, that Strabo is writing after the growth of geography as a science, and under the guidance of Eratosthenes and the other learned Greeks, who had reduced the accounts of travellers into a systematic form, whereas Herodotus has no geographical system of his own, and merely combines in a rough way information derived from different channels. See the note 677 on i. 201; 681 on i. 202; and 685 on i. 203.

²⁶ Ἴσσηδόνες εἰσὶ οἱ λέγοντες . . χρυσοφύλακας Γρύπας. This apparently refers to the stories of the war continually going on for gold between the Arimaspi and the Griffins,—which appears to have formed a portion of the Ἀριμασπεῖα ἔρεα attributed to Aristæas in the time of Herodotus, but considered as spurious by later writers. Compare §§ 13, 16, above, with iii. 116. These passages agree well enough with the present on the supposition, that in the Arimaspea the poet feigned himself to be rapt by the inspiration of Apollo into the country of the Issedones, and then made them the vehicle for the main subject of his composition, of which he laid the scene in the lands beyond; while all the time the materials for these fictions were derived from the Scythians, with whom the Hellenic traders on the Euxine had dealings. That witchcraft should enter largely into legends proceeding from such a source is very natural; and Aristæas very probably made himself the hero of some of the scenes. Hence perhaps sprang the current notion of his being a conjurer (ἀνὴρ γόης, εἰ τις ἄλλος. STRABO, xiii. c. 1, p. 92). The work was very little known in the Roman times. GELLIIUS (Noct. Att. ix. 4) bought it together with a bundle of other old books (including Ctesias and Onesicritus) at Brundisium, for a sum so small as to astonish him. All the volumes “ex diutino situ squalebant, et habitu aspectuque tetro erant.”

²⁶ ἈΡΙΜΑ γὰρ ἐν καλέουσι Σκύθαι. EUSTATHIUS, in citing this passage, makes ἄρι, not ἔριμα, the Scythian for "unity," and μαστός to mean "an eye."

²⁷ τοὺς μὲν ὀκτὼ τῶν μηνῶν ἀφόρητος οἶος γίνεταί κρυμὸς. That this is a great exaggeration of the length of the winter is allowed; but the ancients universally described the cold season as of very long duration. HIPPOCRATES says of Scythia: ὅστε τὸν μὲν χειμῶνα αἰεὶ εἶναι, τὸ δὲ θέρος ὀλίγας ἡμέρας καὶ ταύτας μὴ λίγην. Heeren and others have endeavoured to explain the exaggeration by supposing a considerable change to have taken place in the climate. But, as compared with either Italy or Greece, the climate was no doubt always sufficiently severe to make a Scythian winter proverbial, and favour the reception of exaggerated accounts. The extension of the winter to eight months is, I believe, due entirely to the circumstance that the commercial season lasted only four. From November to March the Mæotis is frozen, and navigation is seldom safe earlier than April. From April to midsummer a s.w. wind prevails, which brings up the shipping from the Propontis, and greatly increases the depth of water in the sea of Azof. At midsummer the water is at its greatest height. But soon after the wind sets from the east and diminishes the depth rapidly. The merchandize which comes down the Tanais is brought in barks which will not bear the sea, and they are broken up at Rastoff. The cargoes, being placed in lighters, are carried to Taganrock and to the ships which lie in the roads there. As the water gets shallower with the east wind, the ships anchor farther and farther out to sea, and are sometimes obliged to sail without completing their cargo. This singular kind of monsoon takes place almost every year after midsummer. (HESPER: MS Journal quoted by Clarke, i. p. 424.) Clarke, who was at Taganrock early in July after a prevalence of east wind, found ships drawing no more than eight or ten feet of water obliged to lie ten miles off the shore, and in the autumn the greatest depth in the whole sea of Azof is often no more than fourteen feet.

²⁸ ἐπὶ τοῦ κρυστάλλου. The manuscript S has ἐπὶ τούτου τοῦ κρυστάλλου. The freezing of the strait is not at all uncommon now in severe winters, and to such an extent that loaded wagons cross from shore to shore. This however arises mainly from the pack ice brought down the Tanais into the Mæotis, which is carried by the current towards the Bosphorus and caught in the narrow channel,—which, according to STRABO (vii. c. 4, p. 96), is, between Parthenium on the European shore and Achilleum on the Asiatic, no more than twenty stadæ. Prince Gleb, son of Vladimir, measured the distance from Tmutaracum to Keritsky (which, according to Clarke, corresponds with that from Phanagoria to Panica-pæum) on the ice in the year 1065, and found it 30,054 fathoms. (CLARKE, Travels, ii. p. 85.) It was said that Neoptolemus, the general of Mithridates, gained a cavalry skirmish on the ice in the winter in exactly the same locality in which he had won a naval action the summer before. (STRABO, vii. c. 3, p. 91.)

ZANTINUS (ἐκ v. Σινδοί) says Σινδοί· ἀπὸ μεσημβρίας τῆς Μαυρίτιδος λίμνης· ἐνιοὶ δὲ καὶ τὸ Σινδικὸν γένος φασὶν εἶναι τῶν Μαιωτῶν ἀπόστασμα. For a probable reason of the variation observable in the MSS see note 25 on i. 5. In ix. 15 the MSS vary between ἐς Σκῶλον and ἐς Κῶλον.

⁹¹ οὗτος. This word is omitted in S and V.

⁹² ἀνέι. See note 604 on i. 180.

⁹³ θέρεος. S and V have θέρος, which is the reading of the MSS without exception two lines back.

⁹⁴ ἥμινοι δὲ καὶ ὄνοι οὐκ ἀνέχονται ἀρχὴν. See the note on § 129, below.

⁹⁶ ἐς τοὺς πλησιοχώρους. These would be the Arcadians, whose breed of asses was celebrated. "Arcadis pecuaria" (PERSIUS, Sat. iii. 9).

⁹⁸ τὰ ὦν πτερά. The force of the article is to be observed. "The feathers then (i.e. of which we were speaking) is a name which the Scythians, in my opinion, give to the snow, indicating the similarity."

⁹⁹ ἀλλ' Ἑσιόδῳ . . . τὰ ἔπεα ἐποίησε. The manuscript S has the genitives Ἑσιόδου, Ὀμήρου. F. A. Wolf suspected this sentence to proceed not from Herodotus, but from a grammarian. His opinion is treated unfavourably by Schweighäuser, on the ground that similar paragraphs occur in many other parts of the work. This objection is not to me a valid one, except as showing that Wolf's remark has a wide application. See note 432 on ii. 145. In another passage (v. 67) the Ὀμήρεια ἔπη which Herodotus speaks of are probably the Thebaïs, which began with the words Ἄργος ἔειδε, θεά, πολυ-δίφιος, and the Epigoni was so closely connected with this poem, that it would hardly be questioned by any one who believed in the authenticity of the former. See CLINTON, F. H. i. p. 352. The mention of the Hyperboreans by Hesiod must have been made in some work now lost.

¹⁰⁰ ἐπὶ τὸν Ἀδρίην, "to the Adriatic bay," the word κόλπον being understood. See note 536 on i. 163.

was changed, at least in the local traditions of Attica. They were said to come by the hand of Scythians to Sinope, and from thence to be forwarded to Prasia in Attica,—the Athenians being the parties by whose hand they ultimately arrived at Delos (i. 31. 2). Probably the route varied with the varying course of commercial enterprise, which had considerably changed between the time of Herodotus and Pausanias.

¹⁰² Περφερέες. So Gaisford prints on the authority of several MSS. But some have περιφερέες, and one (S) περ-φέρες.

¹⁰³ τοῖς πλησιοχώροις. So Gaisford prints, although the MSS without exception have τοὺς πλησιοχώρους. The change does not appear to be necessary, although the construction becomes a more usual one when it is made.

¹⁰⁴ τὰς Θρηκίαιας καὶ τὰς Παιονίδας γυναῖκας. The Paeonians represented themselves as a colony from the Teucrians of Troy, and they were of the same race with the Thracians of the European continent.
See note on v. 13. It is not necessary to suppose that the writer is here speaking of the Paeonians of the Strymon; he may very well mean some of the tribes of the same race who skirted the northern shore of the Propontia. No doubt some of these are the Paeonians, who struck so heavy a blow to Perinthus (v. 1).

¹⁰⁵ Βασιλῇ. All the MSS agree in this form, but in i. 205 all have Βασιλεία.
The Thracian name of the goddess was Βένδις (HESYCHIUS, sub v.), and a festival in honour of her (called τὰ Βενδίδεια) was introduced at the Piræus in the time of Socrates, a prominent part in it being a procession of Thracians. (PLATO, Polit.
i. p. 327.) It seems not impossible that the λαμπαδηφορία, which was introduced into the Athenian festival, symbolized the transmission from tribe to tribe of the sacred rites of the deity no less than did the barley-straw and its contents sent from the Hyperboreans. This would be the more likely if the ritual was introduced into Athens not direct from Thrace, but from Lemnos, which is likely from other circumstances. See SMITH'S Dictionary of Greek and Roman Mythology, v. Ben-dis. There was a Thracian tribe in Lemnos called Sinti (STRABO, vii. fr. 21), the same which received Hephaestus when ejected from Olympus. (Iliad i. 594.)

¹⁰⁶ θνύσας τὰ ἱρά. So Gaisford prints from S and V. The great majority of MSS have ἔχουσας, which might stand in the sense of "holding." The word has been considered a corruption from ἐρδεύσας.

¹⁰⁷ πρὸ γάμου πλόκαμον ἀποταμνόμεναι. PAUSANIAS mentions that at Megara the marriageable virgins used to offer a similar sacrifice on the tomb of Iphikioe (l. 4. 3). This is obviously a ritual belonging to exactly the same religious system, and differing only in the name of the deity. See the notes 164 and 366 on l. 53 and 105.

¹⁰⁸ ἐκ Λυκίης ἐλθὼν. Probably Olen was connected with a colony of Apollo-worshippers from Patara in Lycia. See note 612 on l. 182.

TUBELA (in the year 1168) speaks of the fontecchi or hostleries for the several nations which traded to Alexandria at that time.

¹¹⁰ τὸν περὶ Ἀβάριος λόγον. The first form of the story of Abaris seems to have been that he was a priest of Apollo, who made a begging pilgrimage, carrying what professed to be an arrow belonging to his god as a sacred symbol. This is the way in which he was described by the orator LYCURGUS. (See LOWBEC, Aglaophamus, p. 314, note p.) In subsequent times the legend took a different form, and the arrow was represented as a magical vehicle (like the broomstick of the witches) upon which he travelled. In this shape CÆLUS quoted it in his book against which ORIGEN wrote (c. Cels. iii. p. 129). But it can scarcely be doubted that the arrow the legend of Abaris's pilgrimage, and the existence of Hyperboreans, and derides the circularity of the earth and its envelopment by an ocean.

His own geographical system. Asia.

οἷστον περιέφερε κατὰ πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν οὐδὲν σιτεύμενος. εἰ δὲ εἰσὶ τινες Ὑπερβόρειοι ἄνθρωποι, εἰσὶ καὶ ὑπερνότιοι ἄλλοι¹¹¹. γελῶ δὲ ὀρέων γῆς περιόδους γράφοντας πολλοὺς ἤδη, καὶ οὐδένα νόον ἔχοντας ἐξηγησάμενοι¹¹². οἱ Ὀκεανὸν τε ῥέοντα γράφουσι πέριξ τὴν γῆν ἐοῦσαν κυκλοτερέα ὡς ἀπὸ τόρνου¹¹³, καὶ τὴν Ἀσίην τῇ Εὐρώπῃ ποιούντων ἴσην ἐν ὀλίγοις γὰρ ἐγὼ δηλώσω μέγαθός τε ἐκάστης αὐτέων, καὶ οἷη τις ἐστὶ ἐς γραφὴν ἐκάστη.

Πέρσαι οἰκεῖν¹¹⁴ κατήκοντες ἐπὶ τὴν νοτιήν θάλασσαν, τὴν Ἐρυθρὴν καλεομένην τούτων δ' ὑπεροικέουσι¹¹⁵ πρὸς βορῶν ἀνέμου Μῆδοι, Μήδων δὲ Σάσπειρες, Σασπείρων δὲ Κόλχοι, κατήκοντες ἐπὶ τὴν βορηήν θάλασσαν ἐς τὴν Φάσις ποταμὸς ἐκδιδοῖ was originally the symbol of the Deity for whom the mendicant expedition was undertaken. The most sturdy beggars among the Pagan priests were those who advocated the claims of the Mother, so that the term μητράγερτης was from them applied to all. But they were not the only mendicants. SOPHOCLES, in a satyric drama (Inachus), introduced Here herself as a priestess begging, with the words Νόμῳ δροσγύνοισ θεαῖσιν ἀγέλω, Ἰνᾶχου Ἀργεῖον ποταμὸν παῖδι βιοδόχοις. (PLATO, Resp. ii. p. 431. Schol. Aristoph. Ran. 1385.) Sometimes the sacred symbol was an animal, as a crow, or a goose. The early Christians were very bitter against these collections in favour of what they called the 'Dii tributarii,' "Non sufficimus," says TERTULLIAN, "et hominibus et Diis vestris opem ferre."

¹¹¹ εἰ δὲ εἰσὶ τινες Ὑπερβόρειοι . . ἄλλοι. This passage is cited as by Herodotus in the SCHOLIAST on Apollon. Rhod. ii. 675. The two names are very often confounded. HECAEUS wrote two books on the subject of the Hyperboreans, and positively asserted that they existed in his time. (Schol. Apoll. i. c.)

¹¹² γελῶ δὲ ὀρέων . . . ἐξηγησάμενοι. This passage appears to be corrupt in the latter part. Dobree proposes to read ἐχόντας for ἐχοντας; a conjecture which is adopted by Bekker. I should be more disposed to read ἐχοντα, and write οὐδ' ἓνα instead of οὐδένα. The final letter of the word ἐχοντας might have arisen in an uncial manuscript through the error of the transcriber writing C (σ) instead of ε, and the subsequent corrector, on observing that ἐξηγησάμενοι was deficient in its initial letter, at once inserting it. If ἐχοντα be adopted, it is to be taken as the accusative plural after ἐξηγησάμενον. Translate: "But I smile to see multitudes of persons up to the present time drawing up charts of the earth, and not a soul giving explanations that have sense."

¹¹³ ἐοῦσαν κυκλοτερέα ὡς ἀπὸ τόρνου. See note 71 on ii. 21.

¹¹⁴ Πέρσαι οἰκεῖν. Schweighäuser conceives that the word Ἀσίην must have originally preceded these words. It is not found however in any existing MS. It will be remarked that the νοτιή θάλασση here and in § 42 is a very different sea from that mentioned above. (See note 17.)

The space a, b, c, d is the part of Asia occupied by the four nations, Persians, Medes, Saspirees, and Colchi, d being supposed to be the head of the Persian Gulf.

a, k, i, A is the northern ἀκτὴ, Phasis being at a, and Sigeum at k. From d to k is the χωρὸς πλατὺς καὶ πολλὸς, h, g being the Phœnician line of coast. g, d, e, f is the other ἀκτὴ, in which, reckoning from d, g as a base, there occur the "three nations," which Niebuhr makes to be Persians, Assyrians, and Arabians. But see below, note 121.

¹¹⁶ ταῦτα τέσσερα ἔθνεα οἰκέει ἐκ θαλάσσης ἐς θάλασσαν. These are apparently the nations through which much merchandise from the east would come into Greece, viâ Colchis. The goods would go by land carriage to the Caspian sea, and from thence pass up the river Cyrus. See note 363 on i. 104, and note 124, below.

¹¹⁷ Σιγείου τοῦ Τρωϊκοῦ. The promontory Sigeum (upon which the town of the same name was built) is an outlying spur from Mount Ida, standing up so boldly in the sea that at a distance it presents the appearance of an insulated rock. On the top of it there are at the present time a number of windmills, which form a landmark to the mariner. The same use was doubtless made of the buildings in the time of Herodotus; and hence perhaps the reference to it in the text. Three or four miles to the north of Sigeum another spur from Ida runs into the sea, forming the promontory Rhæteum, near which was the city of the same name (vii. 43); and between these two was the marshy mouth of the Scamander and Simois united in one stream. The alluvium brought down by these waters continually changes the appearance of the plain between, and the position of the mouth is said to be much nearer Sigeum than was formerly the case. (HOFFMANN, Griechenland u. die Griechen, pp. 1657—60.)

Immediately opposite to Sigeum on the Chersonese coast was the temple of Proteus and the town Eleusa (STRABO, xiii. c. 1, p. 103), of which Herodotus speaks (vii. 33; ix. 120).

¹¹⁸ τὰ δὲ πρὸς νότον. Some of the MSS have τὰ δὲ πρὸς νότον. Above, all without any exception have πρὸς βορῆν (or βορέην). It is more likely in this passage that the genitive should have been altered into the accusative for the sake of producing symmetry than the reverse.

¹¹⁹ Μυριανδρικοῦ κόλπου. This is the reading of Gaisford, following a conjecture of Wesseling; but it rests on a very doubtful foundation. XENOPHON (Anab. i. 4. 6) mentions a town called Myriandrus, which was a Phœnician settlement on the coast, five parasangs south of the pass between Syria and Cilicia. STEPHANUS BYZANTINUS (sub v.), quoting that passage, adds τὸ κτηγικὸν Μυριανδρικοῦ κόλπος, but without any reference to Herodotus (although he had quoted him very little before, sub v. Μυκάλη). No MSS support the reading, they varying between Μαριανδρικοῦ, Μαριανδρῶν, Μαριανδρῶν, and Μαριανδρῶν, every one of which variations point to the north of Asia Minor instead of the south. But whatever the reading be, it seems plain that the gulf alluded to is the gulf of Issus, and also that it is not accurately known to the narrator. Perhaps the traffic with the east by way of the Orontes was in the hands of the Phœnicians, and no Hellenic vessel allowed to go near the coast, north of Poseideum. (See note 13 on iii. 5; iii. 91; and note 624 on i. 185.) Xenophon found a great number of merchant vessels in the roads at Myriandrus, but does not say to what nation they belonged.

¹²⁰ ἔθνεα ἀνθρώπων τριήκοντα. Some of these are named in i. 28, but it seems very unlikely that the two accounts rest on the same authority.

βίη¹²¹. λήγει δὲ αὕτη (οὐ λήγουσα εἰ μὴ νόμφ) ἐς τὸν κόλπον τὸν Ἀράβιον, ἐς τὸν Δαρείος ἐκ τοῦ Νεῖλου διώρυχα ἐσήγαγε¹²². ¹²¹ ἢ τε Περσικὴ . . . ἢ Ἀραβίη. I can give no satisfactory explanation of these words, and do not believe them to be genuine. Persia is apparently not reckoned by Herodotus in either ἀκτῇ, but is a portion of the base from which the two ἀκταὶ spring. The "three nations" spoken of as lying in the ἀκτῇ are, I conceive, the Phœnicians, Assyrians, and Arabians.

¹²² ἐς τὸν Δαρείος ἐκ τοῦ Νεῖλου διώρυχα ἐσήγαγε. See note 485 on ii. 158. It seems strange that Herodotus should here think it necessary to describe the Arabian gulf by this notice, after the very full account of it in ii. 11. But that passage may be a subsequent addition.

trict abounding in gold, a proof of the productiveness of which he gives in the enormous gratuity which Tigranes was enabled to bestow upon Pompey's army. This peculiarity of the region may perhaps explain Herodotus's use of the word Saspires in i. 104 and this passage, where he seems to take in the whole (or greater part) of that which STRABO calls Iberia and Albania. If he is in these passages following a commercial authority, the commercial importance of the commodity gold might, in such a case, cause the name of the particular region where it was found to be extended to the whole of the country of which this region constituted a part. It is to me very doubtful whether the Saspires of iii. 94 and vii. 79 are co-extensive with the Saspires of this passage.

¹²⁶ ἐς τὴν Ἐρυθρὴν θάλασσαν. By this phrase must here be meant the Arabian gulf. The distance by the artificial navigation from sea to sea appears to have been estimated at 1000 stadæ. See note 488 on ii. 168.

¹²⁸ τὸν ἥλιον ἔσχον ἐς τὰ δεξιὰ. This passage is relied on by RENNELL, who is a strong advocate for the truth of Herodotus's story of the circumnavigation of Africa by the Phœnicians under Neco's instructions, as decisively proving the truth of his view. But whichever way the balance of probability may incline in the general question, it appears a complete assumption that even the equinoctial line must have been passed in order that this notion should prevail. It would be known by the Arabians that the further south a traveller went (within the limits of their knowledge), the nearer he would approach to the sun; and hence they may well have assumed that when he got beyond a certain line he would leave the sun behind him. An exact parallel to this process of reasoning is furnished by the authorities (Tartars of the extreme north of Central Asia) on whom MARCO POLE depended for his accounts of the Northern Sea. "In an island of that sea," he says, "are bred the gerfalcons; and I assure you that the place is so far north, that the polestar πρῶτον μετὰ δὲ, Καρχηδόνιοι εἰσι οἱ λέγοντες ¹²⁰. ἐπεὶ Σατάσπης γε ὁ Τεάσπιος ¹²⁰, ἀνὴρ Ἀχαιμενίδης, οὐ περιέπλωσε Λιβύην, ἐπ' αὐτὸ τοῦτο πεμφθεὶς· ἀλλὰ δεισας τό τε μήκος τοῦ πλῆους καὶ τὴν ἐρημίην, ἀπήλθε ὀπίσω, οὐδ' ἐπετέλεσε τὸν ἐπέταξέ οἱ ἡ μήτηρ ἀέθλον· θυγατέρα γὰρ Ζωπύρου τοῦ Μεγαβύζου ἐβίησατο παρremains behind, and is seen to the south" (p. 263). The process of reasoning by which this impossible conclusion was arrived at, shows itself manifestly from passages in other parts of his work. Of Sumatra he says, that "it lies so far south, that the north star is never seen" (p. 282). At Cape Comorin, "the north star, which we had not seen since leaving Java, appeared to us, when thirty miles out at sea, rising about a cubit above the horizon" (p. 311). At Malabar, "the north star at its greatest height appears two cubits above the water" (p. 312). The Hyperborei owe their existence to the same way of thinking. They are in the original notion a mythical people dwelling beyond the home of the northern storm-blasts (βίραι), which was supposed to be certain mountains (οἱ τὰ Πρωταῖα ὄρη καὶ τοὺς Ὑπερβορέους μυθοποιῶντες, STRABO, vii. c. 3, p. 71); and hence Herodotus could reasonably say, that on the same principle there must be also Hypernotians, i.e. human beings living further off than the region out of which the south wind blew (above, § 36). See also note 78 on § 25, above.

¹²⁰ Καρχηδόνιοι εἰσι οἱ λέγοντες. It does not appear at what time the voyage of which Herodotus here speaks was made, but it must have been subsequent to the failure of Sataspes. He obviously means to say that there were three commonly alleged circumnavigations of Africa,—that under the auspices of Neco being the first, and the second (that by Sataspes) being in fact an abortive attempt; so that really the next after Neco who asserted themselves to have accomplished the feat were the Carthaginians. There is no occasion to desire to change λέγοντες into πλέοντες. The word περιπλῶσαι is understood.

¹²⁰ ὁ Τεάσπιος. This is the reading of all the MSS (except S, which has Τεάσπεως), which would imply a nominative case Τεάσπης. But in vii. 11 there is an equal unanimity for the nominative Τεάσπης. It cannot be doubted that the original Achaemenid name is the same for both these forms, and the natural inference from their variation seems to be that the source of the story in the text is a different one from that of vii. 11. This one obviously comes through a Samian channel. See the end of the section.

¹²¹ Σολόεις. Immediately after rounding Soloeis, the coast bends for a time to the east. Of the place see note 96 on ii. 32.

¹³³ φὰς τὰ προσωτάτω. This is the reading of Gaisford with all the MSS, except S, which has σφεας τὰ προσωτάτω.

¹³³ ἐσθῆτι φοινικῇ, "in a garb made of palm leaves." In the existing MSS the form φοινίκιος is always used to express the colour, while φοινικίος is appropriated to denote that which is derived from the palm-tree.

¹³⁴ ἐκὼν ἐπιλήθομαι. The manuscripts S, V, α, c have ἐπιλήσομαι. The expression ἐκὼν ἐπιλήθετο is used above (iii. 75), and τῶν ἐντολέων μεμνημένος ἐπελανθάνετο (iii. 147).

¹³⁵ ὃς κροκοδείλους . . . παρέχεται. The other river which, in the apprehension of Herodotus, produces crocodiles, is no doubt the Nile; and it may be hence gathered that the Ganges was entirely unknown. But it seems not impossible that the reputation of the Ganges was transferred to the Indus; for the latter river does not (I believe) produce alligators, at any rate within the limits which in the time of Herodotus were at all known.

¹³⁶ Σκύλακα ἄνδρα Καρνανδέα. It will be observed that Herodotus says nothing of Scylax as an author, but regards him wholly as a discoverer. The reputation acquired by this voyage probably caused his name to be attached to the existing work, which is of a much later date. See Niebuhr's article, translated in the Cambridge Philological Museum, for a complete discussion of this subject. See also note 499 on i. 46. The conclusion to which Niebuhr arrives is that the current treatise was compiled subsequently to the 100th Olympiad, and perhaps even subsequently to the 105th, but before the growth of the Macedonian empire.

¹³⁷ Κασπατύρου τε πόλιος καὶ τῆς Πακτυϊκῆς γῆς. See note 294 on iii. 102.

¹³⁸ πρὸς ἡῶ τε καὶ ἡλίου ἀνατολὰς ἐς θάλασσαν. This is the course of the Ganges, but not of the Indus below Attock. It is however the general direction of the Cauzal river, upon which the discoverer embarked, and this, coinciding with that of the alligator-producing Ganges, may have led to the confusion in the text.

The boundary of Europe is unknown; and so is the origin of the names Europe, Asia, and Libya.

Ἡ δὲ δὴ Εὐρώπη πρὸς οὐδαμῶν φανερὴ ἐστὶ γνωσκομένη, οὔτε τὰ πρὸς ἥλιον ἀνατέλλοντα, οὔτε τὰ πρὸς βορρῇν εἰ περιρρυτός ἐστι· μήκει δὲ γινώσκεται παρ' ἀμφοτέρων παρήκουσα. οὐδ' ἔχω συμβαλέσθαι ἐπ' ὅτεν μὴ εὐούση γῇ οὐνόματα τριφάσια κέεται ἐπωνυμίας ἔχοντα γυναικῶν, καὶ οὐρίσματα αὐτῇ Νεῖλός τε ὁ Αἰγύπτιος ποταμὸς ἐτέθη, καὶ Φάσις ὁ Κόλχος· (οἱ δὲ Τάναϊν ποταμὸν τὸν Μαίητην¹⁴⁰ καὶ Πορθμῆϊα τὰ Κιμμέρια λέγουσι) οὐδὲ τῶν διουρισάντων τὰ οὐνόματα πυθέσθαι, καὶ ὅθεν ἔθεντο τὰς ἐπωνυμίας· ἡ δὲ γὰρ Λιβύη μὲν ἐπὶ Λιβύης λέγεται ὑπὸ τῶν πολλῶν Ἑλλήνων ἔχειν τὸ οὐνομα γυναικὸς αὐτόχthonος· ἡ δὲ Ἀσίη ἐπὶ τῆς Προμηθέος γυναικὸς τὴν ἐπωνυμίην καὶ τούτου μὲν μεταλαμβάνονται τοῦ οὐνόματος Ἀνδοί, φάμενοι ἐπὶ Ἀσίῳ, τοῦ Κότυος, τοῦ Μάνεω¹⁴¹, κεκληῖσθαι τὴν Ἀσίην, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐπὶ τῆς Προμηθέος Ἀσίης· ἀπ' ὅτεν καὶ τὴν ἐν Σάρδισι φυλὴν κεκληῖσθαι Ἀσιάδα. ἡ δὲ δὴ Εὐρώπη οὔτε εἰ περιρρυτός ἐστι γινώσκεται πρὸς οὐδαμῶν ἀνθρώπων, οὔτε ὁκόθεν τὸ οὐνομα ἔλαβε τοῦτο¹⁴²,

¹⁴⁰ οἱ δὲ Τάναϊν ποταμὸν τὸν Μαίητην. PROCOPIUS (iv. 6), in citing this passage, has the variation οἱ δὲ Τάναϊν ποταμὸν καὶ Μαίωτιν.

¹⁴¹ ἐπὶ Ἀσίῳ, τοῦ Κότυος, τοῦ Μάνεω. In the genealogies given above (i. 7 and 94) Manes is made the father of Atys, and Atys of Lydus, the eponymous ancestor of the Lydians. On the hypothesis that both the three genealogies belong to the same cycle of traditions, and that the reading here is genuine, the mythical pedigree will have run thus :—

BUT DIONYSIUS OF HALICARNASSUS combines the names differently, making Atys not the brother, but the son of Cotys (Archæol. i. 27); and LYCOPHRON (ap. Eustath. ad Dionys. Perieg. v. 270) made Asieus the son of Atys. All these appear to me to be merely different combinations of three genuine genealogies, themselves framed on the principle explained in the note 336 on i. 94. The Asia of which Asieus is the eponym is the low country at the mouth of the Cayster.

¹⁴² ὁκόθεν τὸ οὐνομα ἔλαβε τοῦτο. HESIOD makes Europa one of the Ocean-

des (Theogon. 357); but the name does not occur either in the Iliad or Odyssey. The earliest mention of the word as denoting a region is in the Homeric Hymn to Apollo, in the enumeration of the tribes which come to his temple:

ἡμὲν ὅσοι Πελοπόννησον πείραν ἔχουσιν, ἡδ' ὅσοι Εὐρώπῃν τε καὶ ἀμφιφύτους κατὰ νῆσους.

These lines, which occur in two places, (250. 290), are supposed by Heyne to be from the hand of a copyist, but in my opinion without sufficient reason. The word Europa is perhaps connected etymologically with εὐρεβος. HESYCHIUS: Εὐρώπη χάρα τῆς δύσεως, ἢ σκοτεινῇ. BUTTMANN (Mythologus, ii. p. 176) makes kadm and ereb, the roots of Cadmus and Europa, to signify respectively the east and the west.

¹⁴³ ἐς Λυκίην. Several of the MSS have Λιβύην.

¹⁴⁴ τῶν ἐντὸς τοῦ Πόντου. This expression is a very singular one. It seems appropriate rather to a mariner than any other kind of traveller, and to mean "tribes upon which he would come after having entered the sea."

¹⁴⁵ λόγιον οἶδαμεν γενόμενον. So Gaisford with the majority of MSS. Two (B and V) have λόγιον οἶδαμεν λεγόμενον.

¹⁴⁶ φερέοικοι. This is a literally accurate description of the Scythians, "quorum plaustra vagas rite trahunt domos," as HORACE (iii. 24, 10) describes it. Their modern representatives, the Calmucks, do not either, properly speaking, dwell in wagons; but the round framework covered with felt in which they live when forming a camp, is lifted bodily on to the wheels of the carriage. See Plate 6 in the first volume of PALLAS (Travels in Southern Russia), or the Vignette to chap. xiv. of CLARKE, vol. i. ÆSCHYLUS's description is no less exact:

¹⁴⁷ εὐδρος. So Gaisford prints with the majority of MSS, but S and V have ἐνδρος.

¹⁴⁹ πεντάστομος. STRABO makes the Ister seven-mouthed. The southernmost is, according to him, the so-called "sacred mouth." A passage of 120 stadæ through this brought the mariner to the island Peuce, at the lower part of which the tradition ran that Darius had made his bridge. Strabo, as if aware that such a proceeding would be useless, adds δύναρτο ὃ ἂν ἐνυχθῆναι κατὰ τὸ ἔνω. The next three channels were small, and the three last a middle size between these and the "sacred mouth." The mouths of such a river must be continually changing, and even their number varying. It would probably not be possible to identify at the present day either the Peuce of Strabo or the Leuce of Arrian (if they are not really the same). CLARKE (Travels, vol. ii. pp. 394—401) gives a very graphic description of the mouth of the Danube as he saw it. By his account one would incline to believe that there is only one remarkable island, and that Leuce was the true name of this. He speaks of its value as a landmark, "the shore being flat all the way from Odessa to the Danube; and so low near to the river's mouth, that no other object appears to those who approach the shore than tall reeds rising out of the water, or the masts of vessels lying in the river." He goes on to remark the whiteness of the Danube stream and of the porpoises seen in it.

¹⁵⁰ πέντε μὲν οἱ ῥέοντες. KOEN proposed as a conjecture πέντε μεγάλοι ῥέοντες, which is said to have met with the approbation of Porson. But it does not seem necessary to change the text, which rests on the authority of all the MSS.

¹⁵¹ Πυρετόν. The Pruthi is the easternmost of the rivers which fall into the Danube, and is doubtless meant by the Pyretus; but the identification of the other four tributaries mentioned by Herodotus is very doubtful. NIEBUHR considers the Tiarantus to be the Alouza, but between that and the Pruth more than three considerable streams fall into the Danube.

¹⁵³ αὐτιγενέες. So Gaisford reads with the majority of the MSS. But K, F, a have αὐθιγενέες and S αὐθηγενέες, and in ii. 149, αὐθιγενέες is unanimously sanctioned.

¹⁵⁴ Μάρης ποταμὸς. This name seems preserved in the Marosch, one of the tributaries of the Theiss, falling into it at Szegedin in Hungary. The river therefore may probably be identified with the Theiss.

¹⁵⁵ τρεῖς ἄλλοι μεγάλοι. These words have occasioned great difficulty, as no three large rivers are to be found flowing northward from the Balkan into the Danube. Some have proposed to insert the particle οὐ before μεγάλοι, some to omit the whole clause. It is however easier to suppose the writer ill-informed on the subject.

¹⁵⁶ Θρητικῶν τῶν Κροβύζων. These Crobzyi are said by the ΕΤΥΜΟΛΟΓΙΣΜ

MAGNUM (v. Ζάμολξ) to have the same practice of human sacrifices which is attributed by Herodotus to the Gela (§ 94, below).

¹⁵⁷ Σκίος ποταμὸς. So Gaisford prints on the authority of S and V. Other MSS have Kios. A river Ὀσκίος is mentioned by THUCYDIDES (ii. 96), and an Œscus by PLINY (N. H. iii. 26). Oscius and Skios are apparently merely local varieties of the same name, connected with each other as Etruscus and Tuscus (through the Umbrian turake); δρυγμα and ruga; ερυθρός and ruber; ελευθερος and liber; εσχεω and shy (Germ. schewen); effrayer and fray. (Compare the etymological pairs given in note 278 on ii. 100.) The modern name of the Œscus is Iskar.

¹⁵⁷ μετὰ Κύνητας. These are probably the same people to whom he elsewhere gives the name of Κυνήσιοι (ii. 33). There is no variation whatever in the MSS in either passage.

The Nile receives many tributaries in Ethiopia, but the last tributary, the Atbara, falls into it as far south as lat. 16°, not less than six hundred miles above the frontier of Egypt. The statement of Herodotus in the text serves to furnish a limit of the distance to which any authentic knowledge of the country extended.

¹⁵⁹ γλυκὺς ἔτι. Some MSS have γλυ-κὺς ἔστι. It has been conjectured with some probability that the saline quality of the waters of the Hypanis might have arisen from the effect of the s.w. winds driving the waters of the Euxine up the embouchure of the Borysthenees, and thus into the Hypanis.

¹⁶¹ Ἑξαμπαῖος. RITTER (Vorhalle, p. 345) recognizes in this name the word 'hexenpfad,' of which Irak ὁδοί would be a very fair translation.

¹⁶³ ἐς τὸν τεσσεράκοντα ἡμερέων πλόος ἐστὶ. The indirect character of much of Herodotus's information is shown by this statement of the locality of Gerrhus. He had heard it was the place where the Scythian kings were buried, that the burial place of these kings was on the confines of Scythia (there being nothing but a desert beyond), and that it was high up the Borysthenes, as far as the river was navigable. But some accounts seem to have made this distance 11 days, some 40. (See §§ 18 and 71, compared with this.) The Borysthenes (Dnieper) is in fact only navigable for about 80 leagues above its mouth. (See note 57 on § 18, above.) The Volga, on the other hand, is navigable almost to its source; and it is not impossible that the locality assigned to Gerrhus in the text partly arises from a confusion between these two rivers. Very near Tver (on the Volga, about a day's journey from Moscow) there is now a group of tumuli, remarkably perfect in their forms and conspicuous from their situation. ¹⁶⁴ τὸ μεταξὺ τούτων . . . οἱ γεωργοὶ Σκύθαι. STRABO expressly says that the Scythians who have the name of γεωργοὶ are the inhabitants of the Tauric peninsula. The soil from where the mountains begin to dip to the north was extremely rich, rendering thirty-fold with the rudest cultivation. The corn tribute paid to Mithridates from this region was no less than 180,000 medimni; and Leucon (of whom DEMOSTHENES speaks in the Oration against Leptines) was said to have shipped no less than 2,100,000 medimni at Theodosia for the Athenians (vii. c. 4, p. 97).

¹⁶⁵ τὸν Ἀχιλλήϊον Δρόμον. STRABO (xi. c. 2, p. 402) mentions an Ἀχιλλεῖος κόμη and a temple to Achilles upon the eastern shore of the entrance to the sea of Azof, exactly where the strait was the narrowest,—about 20 stadia across. Perhaps in all these cases there was one of the barrows which abound so much in this part of the world. ALCEMUS (fr. 49, Bergk) addressed Achilles as ὁ τὰς Σκυθικῶν μέγας, which is an indication that he was recognised very generally as a hero by the Hellenic settlers in Scythia. But this is not so likely to have been owing to the real or professed descent of the οἰκιστὰς of these several settlements from him, as to the very general existence of barrows similar to those which were already familiar to them in the Troad, and which were already coupled with the Homeric legend of Achilles. See note on v. 94.

¹⁶⁶ τὰ ἀνέκαθεν. See note on v. 62.

¹⁶⁷ Ἑργίς. See note 315 on § 123. The modern name of this river is said to be Sevierky, in which some slight vestige of its ancient title may be traced.

¹⁶⁸ ἐπιχολωτάτη. The MSS vary between this reading, ἐπίσχυλωτάτη, ἐπιχλωστάτη, and ἐπιχλωστάτη.

¹⁶⁹ Ζεὺς . . . Ἀπία. These two reputed Scythian words seem to be unquestionably of the Indo-Germanic family of languages. Apia is the name by which a portion of the Peloponnesus was anciently called (ÆSCHYLUS, Supplices, 260—269), and it is probably identical in etymology with the word ἡπία, and originally an epithet of the Earth considered as an object of worship (ἰάομαι μὲν Ἀπίαν βοῦνιν, Suppl. 117, 127). Artimpasa, if genuine, seems to be merely another form of Artemis with an affix. Oitosyros is most suspiciously like οἶτος ὁ ἄγρος—the Syrian dirge or chant, of which the proper name was Linus. (See note 207 on ii. 79.) Thamimasidas, too, suggests the Thamius of EZEKIEL (viii. 14) in a Hellenic dress, especially if the reading θαμιασά (which is apparently θαφιασά) be adopted. So that all these names, with the exception of Tabiti—and perhaps that too may be the
 * Tophet of 2 Kings xxiii. 10—seem to belong either to an Achaean or a Syro-phoenician language, and to all appearance are not genuine Scythian. In that case the authority for them could hardly be any other than one whose occupation brought him into contact with Achæans and Phœnicians. See note 368 on i. 105.

¹⁷⁰ Ἀρτίμπασα. So Gaisford prints with S, V, and Hesychius. But the majority of the MSS have Ἀρίππασα, and some, with Origen Ἀργίμπασα. For οἶτόσυρος ORIGEN has γογγόσυρος, and HESYCHIUS γοιτόσυρος, which is, no doubt, Foritosyros.

¹⁷¹ Θαμμιασάδας. So Gaisford prints with the majority of MSS. But S, V, a, c, d have Θαμισμασά, and ORIGEN Θαμιασάδα.

¹⁷² αὐτὸ, "by itself," i. e. without any attendant holding it; so as to present the appearance of advancing to the altar of its own accord. Similarly v. 85, ἀνακομισθῆναι αὐτὸν ἐς Φάληρον, "got back to Phalerum alone," all his companions having been slain. The idiom familiar in Attic colloquial language: αὐτὸ σημαίνει, "the matter will itself explain," is analogous to that in the text. VIRGIL uses the Latin pronoun ipse in the same manner:—

"Ipse lacte domum referent distenta capellæ Ubers." (Bucol. iv. 21.)

a good omen. Hence in the Moloch ritual, where parents sacrificed their own children, MINUCIUS FELIX speaks of their very caresses being employed to produce the appearance of this: "osculo compimente vagitum, ne febilis hostia immolaretur" (§ 30); and of the same thing TERTULLIAN says: "infantibus blandiebantur, ne lacrumanites immolarentur." (Apolog. § 9.)

¹⁷³ ὑποκαίουσι τὰ ὀστέα. Compare EZEKIEL xxiv. 5.

¹⁷⁴ ἀπαρξάμενος ῥίπτει ἐς τὸ ἔμπροσθεν. The feeling embodied in this act seems to be that the deity to whom the sacrifice is made is present, invisible, and ready to receive his portion of the feast. Compare the practice described in iii. 24. Thus the Lar, in the old Italian religions, always was served first; and HORACE gives his legacy-hunter the advice, "Ante Larem gustet venerabilior Lare dives." The act implied in the word κατάρχεσθαι is the dedication of the whole victim to the deity, to whom it was conceived not to belong until this ceremony had taken place. Thus Dido was unable to die before she had been thus dedicated. VIRGIL says (Æn. iv. 680):—

"Nondum illi flammam Proserpina vertice crinem
Abstulerat, Stygioque caput damnaverat Orco."

The absence of any such proceeding from the Scythian sacrifices indicates the rude and savage condition of the people as compared with other pagan nations of antiquity.

¹⁷⁵ τῶν ἀρχηγῶν. The manuscripts S and V have ἀρχαίων, but the text is apparently genuine. The word ἀρχαίων is more appropriate to the seat of a prefecture, or jurisdiction, such as those which were familiar to the civilized nations of antiquity, than to Scythia; and its use here must be regarded rather as an adaptation, like that of the word ἱρὰ, § 60, above, to the places where sacrifices were offered, although there were no temples. The word νομάρχης (§ 66, below) seems a similar adaptation.

¹⁷⁶ ἄπεδον. The manuscripts S, V, A, B have ἐπιπέδον.

¹⁷⁷ ἀκινάκης σιδήρεος ἴδρυται. AMMIANUS MARCELLINUS represents the Alans and Huns of his time as symbolizing their deity by a sword stuck into the ground (xxi. 2). Attila professed to have a peculiarly sacred idol of this description, which was found by a herdsman who had observed one of his heifers limping. Following the track of the blood he came to a sword stuck in the ground, which he took up and carried to the king, who received it as the sword of Mars, and considered that it indicated a mission to himself to conquer the whole world. (Valerius ad Ammian. Marcellin. l. c.) See too note 187, below.

¹⁷⁸ ἀποσφάζουσι τοὺς ἀνθρώπους ἐς ἄγρος. See iii. 11, and note 35 thereon.

¹⁷⁹ σὺν τῇσι χερσὶ, "arms and all," not "hands and all." See the note 351 on ii. 121. The notion of the sacrificers seems to have been to deprive the corpse of that limb which was, while life remained, serviceable for war. This would be the whole arm, but especially those muscles which are most called into play in the actions of hurling the spear, striking with the sword, or shooting with the bow, i. e. the muscles of the upper arm and shoulder. Hence Iolaus in EURIPIDES (Heracl. 740), lamenting his enfeebled condition, says:—

εἴθ' ὃ βραχίον, ὅλον ἡβήσαντά σε μεμνημέθ' ἡμεῖς, ἦνίκα ἐν Ἡρακλεῖ Σπάρτην ἐπύρθεῖς, ξύμμαχος γένού μοι τοιοῦτος.

¹⁸⁰ ἀπέρξαντες. This is an orist following the analogy of a non-existent present ἔργω, of which a relic still remains in the perfect ἔργα. HESYCHIUS explains ἔργον by θύσον. Translate: "and then after finishing the offering of the other victims too, they go away."

¹⁸¹ ὕσλ δὲ οὗτοι οὐδὲν νομίζουσι. It is not to be considered that the word νομίζουσι takes the dative case after it in this passage retaining its usual sense, but that it is the equivalent of χρῶνται, with the notion of custom superadded, and consequently used in the regimen of χρῶνται. So below, § 117, Herodotus says, φωνῇ οἱ Σαυρομάται νομίζουσι Σκυθικῇ (habitually use the Scythian tongue). See the note 132 on ii. 44.

¹⁵² τούτων τὰς κεφαλὰς ἀποφέρει. POSEIDONIUS (ap. Strabon. iv. c. 4, p. 319) notes it as a distinctive peculiarity of all the northern nations to scalp their dead enemies, and nail the skin of their faces to the front of their houses. The Gauls who took Rome spent the whole of the day succeeding the battle they won in decapitating the dead. (DIODORUS, xiv. 115.)

¹⁵³ ὀργήσας. So Gaisford prints on the authority of S and V. But the majority of the MSS have ὀργίσας. Perhaps ὀργάσας, as from a form ὀργάζω, is the true reading.

¹⁵⁴ νεκρῶν ἐόντων. According to CLARKE, the banditti haunting the steppes of southern Russia are now accustomed by way of revenge to cut the skin round the upper part of the legs of their victims, and then strip it off by the feet. This is called "giving a man a pair of red boots"

—boots of red leather being commonly worn in the Ukraine. (Travels, ii. p. 327.)

¹⁵⁵ ἀποδεύραντες. So Gaisford prints. But the word appears to rest on next to no authority, S and the Aldine edition adding καὶ διατείναντες, and the other MSS omitting the word altogether.

¹⁵⁶ ἦν ἄρα σχεδὸν δερμάτων πάντων λαμπρότατον λευκότητι. This passage has occasioned a great deal of difficulty to the commentators, and I am far from satisfied that the passage is sound. If it be, I should consider that ἦν is to be taken in the sense of ἐμελλε ἵσθαι, and regard the paragraph as an inference from the general qualities which have just been predicated of the human skin, and explaining the object which the Scythians would have in view in their barbarous practice. Translate: "But human skin being both thick and shiny, would of course be calculated to take the brightest appearance in point of whiteness of almost all skins."

¹⁸⁹ ὁ νομάρχης. See above, note 175 on § 62.

¹⁹⁰ This kind of rabdomancy is apparently the same as that attributed by AMMIANUS MARCELLINUS to the Alans of his time: "Rectiores virgas vimineas colligentes, easque cum incantamentis quibusdam secretis praestituto tempore discernentes, aperte quid portendatur norunt" (xxi. 2). These sticks seem to have been treated as push-pins. But the divination by marked sticks described by TACITUS (German. § 10) seems more analogous to the petalomanancy attributed by VIRGIL to the Sibyl of Cumae (Aeneid vi. 74).

¹⁹¹ οἱ δὲ Ἑνάρεες. ARISTOTLE (Ethica Nicom. vii. 8, p. 1150) speaks of a μαλακία, which is a family vice with the Scythian kings, and perhaps the same thing is the foundation for attributing an androgynous character to the Ἑνάρεες. HIPPOCRATES however gives a physical reason for a phenomenon which was imputed by the ignorance of the sufferers to the direct interposition of Aphrodite. (De aere, aquis, locis, pp. 561, 2.) It is remarked by Hippocrates that the disease prevails chiefly among the higher classes of the Scythians,—for which also he gives a physical reason. With regard to the etymology of the name, see note 368 on i. 106. Exactly the same complaint has been found in recent times among the Nogay Tartars. (REINROD, ap. Adelsung Mithridates, i. p. 472.)

¹⁹³ ἐπεὰν τὴν φιλήρην . . διαλύων χρῶ. The number three appears as a sacred one in the religious rites of nations the most widely separated from one another. VIRGIL (Bucol. viii. 77) makes the subject of Alpheisibæus's song say:

"Necte tribus nodis ternos, Amarylli, colores:

Necte, Amarylli, modo, et 'Veneris' dic, 'vincula necto.'"

One form of the divining rod was a year's shoot of hazel, forked, and with the forks twisted three times (GRIMM, Deutsche Mythologie, p. 546); and perhaps the singular epithet given in the Homeric Hymn (530) to the rod of Hermes (τριπέτηλον), rests upon a similar feeling.

¹⁹⁴ διαλελαμμένος ἄγεται, "he is seized and brought." See note 402 on i. 114.

¹⁹⁵ [ἄλλους]. This word is omitted in S.

¹⁹⁶ καταδήσῃσι ἐπιорκῆσαι. A similar expression is used in ii. 174: κατέδησαν φάρα εἶναι.

¹⁹⁷ ἄμαξαν. The manuscripts S and V add the word καμάρης, and it is not impossible that this is a genuine reading, and that καμάρη meant "a tilted wagon." POLLUX (x. 52) gives Herodotus as an authority for κάμαραι being equivalent to ὀχήματα στεγαστά, and it is possible that he has this passage in his eye, and not i. 199. TACITUS (Hist. iii. 47) gives the local name of camaræ to certain covered boats, something like the Venetian gondola, made by the inhabitants of the coast in the neighbourhood of Trebisund; and STRABO (xi. c. 2, p. 405) says the Greeks φρυγάνων πλήσωσι, καὶ ὑποζεύξωσι βούς, ἐμποδίσαντες τοὺς μάντιας, καὶ χέρας ὀπίσω δήσαντες, καὶ στομώσαντες¹⁹⁸, κατεργνύσι ἐς μέσα τὰ φρύγανα· ὑποπρήσαντες δὲ αὐτὰ, ἀπικίει φοβήσαντες τοὺς βούς· πολλοὶ μὲν δὴ συγκατακαίονται τοῖσι μάντισι βόες, πολλοὶ δὲ περικεκαυμένοι ἀποφεύγουσι, ἐπεὰν αὐτῶν ὁ ῥυμός κατακαυθῇ. κατακαίονσι δὲ τρόπῃ τῷ εἰρημένῳ καὶ δι' ἄλλας αἰτίας τοὺς μάντιας, ψευδομάντιας καλέουσιν. τοὺς δ' ἂν ἀποκτείνῃ βασιλεὺς, τούτων οὐδὲ τοὺς παῖδας λείπει· ἀλλὰ πάντα τὰ ἔρσενα κτείνει, τὰ δὲ θήλεα οὐκ ἀδικεῖ.

They burn the false soothsayers alive.

give the same name to similar boats used in the Bosphorus. And although with us the tilt is accessory to the wagon, yet with the Scythians the wain would be rather considered as accessory to the tent which formed the sole habitation of its owner (see § 121 and note 146, above); and thus ἄμαξα καμάρης would be a more appropriate phrase than καμάρη ἁμάξης. (See the note 673 on i. 199.) It is, at any rate, extremely difficult to account for the introduction of the word καμάρης by a copyist,—very much more so than for its expulsion. RUBRQUIS, who visited the Crimea in 1253, describes the wagons of Scacatai as “laden with houses.” These consisted of a frame of wicker, covered with black or white felt, and thirty feet in diameter. They were placed upon huge wains drawn each by twenty-two oxen, and were lifted bodily off these carriages.

¹⁹⁸ στομώσαντες, “having gagged them.” This was to prevent the imprecations of the dying man being audible; as a curse uttered under such circumstances would be regarded as possessing a fatal power. MARCO POLO relates that when Kublai Khan put his kinsman Nayan, who had rebelled against him, to death, he did it by having him wrapped in a carpet, and violently tossed to and fro until he died. “This mode of death was adopted, that being of imperial lineage, his blood might not be shed upon the ground, nor his cries ascend into the air.” But the attachment of extraordinary validity to the expressions of a dying person was not peculiar to the Scythians. It appears in the description by ÆSCHYLUS of the sacrifice of Iphigenia, where Agamemnon is made to order the attendants στέματος καλλιπέρου φυλακὰν κατασχῆν, φθόγγον ἀραίον οἴκοις, βία χαλινῶν τ' ἀναυδῶ μῆνι (Agam. 236); and, in fact, the feeling on which it rests is a part of universal human nature.

¹⁹⁹ αἷμα συμμίσχουσιν τῶν τὰ ὅρκια ταμνομένων. LUCIAN makes the Scythians use a form of proceeding compounded of the one described in the text and of that which Tacitus imputes to the Armenians. (See TACITUS, quoted in the note 258 on i. 74.) ἀφ' οὗ γὰρ ἐνταμόντες ἀπαῖς τοὺς δακτύλους ἐνσταλάζουσιν τὸ αἷμα εἰς κύλικα, καὶ τὰ ξίφη ἔκτρα βδύσαντες ἅμα ἀμφότεροι ἐπισχόμενοι πίωμεν, οὐκ ἔστιν ὅ,τι μετὰ τοῦτο ἡμῶς διαδόσειεν ἔν. (Tusar. § 37.) The practice of tasting blood as a part of a solemn proceeding existed in the old religions of the Italian peninsula. FÆSTUS (sub v.) says, “Assiratus apud antiquos dicebatur genus quoddam potionis ex vino et sanguine temperatum, quod Latini prius sanguinem assere vocarent.” Hence SALLUST says of Catiline, that, in forming his party, “fuerunt qui dicerent eum humani corporis sanguinem vino permixtum in pateris circumtulisse: inde cum post execrationem omnes degustavissent, sicuti in solemnibus sacris fieri consuevit, aperuisse consilium suum.” The practice was probably a relic of religious ceremonies coming down from a time when sacrifices were human, and cannibalism the ordinary usage. See the note 34 on iii. 11.

²⁰⁰ Ταφαὶ δὲ ἐστὶ προσπλωτός. The 'tombs of the Scythian chiefs,' as well as those of the Cimmerian mentioned above (§ 11), are doubtless some of the barrows which abound all over the continent of Europe east of the Carpathian mountains, and extend southwards down into Greece, both European and Asiatic,—in fact probably existing wherever a pastoral people has penetrated in large numbers. CLARKE says that from the plain of Thessaly the whole coast northwards is lined with them. HAWKINS observed them on the north side of the Propontis between Silivria and Constantinople. They are also found in the fork of the Don and Donetz, and in the plains to the s.e. of the sea of Azof, between the Don and the Kouban rivers,—so thick, that from one point Clarke counted no less than ninety-one of them, with huge oaks growing upon them. (Compare FALKENER, quoted in note 331 on i. 93.) In the time of PAUSANIAS one very large one on the plain of Botticea was called the tomb of Orpheus (ix. 30). In the Iliad one on the plain of Troy is spoken of as the tomb of Aesyetes, and another as that of Ilus (ii. 793; x. 414). See too the note on v. 94, ἐξ Ἀχιλλεῖον πόλιος ὀρμηόμενοι, below. It is not likely that Herodotus's informant had ever been at the spot where the sepulchres of the kings are said to have been; for the locality is most doubtful. See note 163 on § 53, above.

³⁰³ ἀργύρῳ δὲ οὐδὲν οὐδὲ χαλκῷ χρέωνται. This must mean that they do not use either silver or bronze in commerce; for their arms would doubtless be of the latter. See RITTER, quoted in note 710 on i. 215. But the communication through caravan traffic with Central Asia would produce such an abundance of gold as might render any other metallic medium unnecessary in the commercial relations of these nomad tribes with the Hellenic merchants who dealt with them. See

³⁰⁴ τόρμον. This word is explained by the gloss writer as τρήμα. It is a "socket formed by boring," the root of the word being tor or ter, which appears in many Greek and Latin words containing the notion of 'turning,' e. g. torvus, τόρνος; terminus, τέρμα; tero, τελῶ; teredo, τερέτρων, τορύνη. ²⁰⁵ οὕτω μὲν τοὺς βασιλῆας θάπτονται. The following account is given by IBN BATUTA (the Arabian traveller in China about the year 1346), of the burial of the Khan of the Tartars, who had been slain in battle. "The Khan who had been killed, with about 100 of his relations, was then brought, and a large sepulchre was dug for him under the earth, in which a most beautiful couch was spread, and the Khan was, with his weapons, laid upon it. With him they placed all the gold and silver vessels he had in his house, together with four female slaves and six of his favourite Mamluks, with a few vessels of drink. They were then all closed up, and the earth heaped upon them to the height of a large hill. They then brought four horses, which they pierced through at the hill until all motion in them ceased; they then forced a piece of wood into the hinder part of the animal till it came out at his neck, and this they fixed in the earth, leaving the horse thus impaled upon the hill. The relatives of the Khan they buried in the same manner, putting all their vessels of gold and silver in the grave with them. At the doors of the sepulchres of ten of these they impaled three horses in the manner thus mentioned. At the graves of each of the rest only one horse was impaled." But that such proceedings as those described in the text were not merely a traditional custom, but rested on that common feeling of humanity which ascribes to the departed similar tastes and pursuits to those which have been valued by them in their lifetime, is clear from the following description of a Patagonian funeral, given by CAPTAIN FITZROY (Narrative of the Beagle, ii. p. 155). "The body is wrapped in the best mantle of the deceased, placed on his favourite horse, and carried to the burying-place of the tribe. The wizard rattles together two pieces of dried bladder in which are some loose stones, to frighten away the Validru or evil spirits, and the other people howl over the corpse as it is carried to the sepulchre. In a square pit, about six feet deep and two or three feet wide, where many others have been deposited, the corpse is placed in a sitting posture, adorned with mantles, plumes of feathers, and beads. The spurs, sword, balls, and other such property belonging to the deceased are laid beside him, and the pit is then covered over with branches of trees, upon which earth is laid. His favourite horse is afterwards killed. It is held at the grave while a man knocks it on the head with one of the balls of the deceased. When dead it is skinned and stuffed, then supported by sticks (or set up) on its legs, with the head propped up as if looking at the grave. Sometimes more horses than one are killed. At the funeral of a Cacique four horses are sacrificed, and one is set up at each corner of the burial place. The clothes and other effects belonging to the deceased are burned, and, to finish all, a feast is made of the horses' flesh."

²⁰⁶ κάνναβις, "hemp." This article grows in the northern part of Russia, higher up than any part of Scythia known to the Greeks. It will therefore have come down to the traders in the Euxine, λίμφ᾽ ἐμφερεστάτῃ ταύτῃ δὲ πολλῶ ὑπερφέρει ἢ κάνναβις· αὕτη καὶ αὐτομάτῃ καὶ σπειρομένη φύεται· καὶ ἐξ αὐτῆς Θρήικες μὲν καὶ εἴματα ποιεῦνται τοῖσι λινέοισι ὁμοιώτατα· οὐδ' ἂν ὅστις μὴ κάρτα τρίβων εἴῃ αὐτῆς διαγνώῃ, λίνου ἢ καννάβιός ἐστι· ὃς δὲ μὴ εἶδὲ κω τὴν κανναβίδα, λίνεον δοκῇσει εἶναι τὸ εἶμα· Ταύτης ὦν 75 οἱ Σκύθαι τῆς καννάβιος τὸ σπέρμα ἐπεὰν λάβωσι, ὑποδύνουσι ὑπὸ τοὺς πέλους, καὶ ἔπειτα ἐπιβάλλουσι τὸ σπέρμα ἐπὶ τοὺς διαφανέας λίθους τῷ πυρὶ· τὸ δὲ θυμῇται ἐπιβαλλόμενον, καὶ ἀτμίδα παρέχεται τοσαύτην, ὥστε Ἑλληνικὴ οὐδεμία ἂν μιν πυρὶ ἄποκρατῇσει· οἱ δὲ Σκύθαι ἀγάμενοι τῇ πυρὶ 76 ὥρουνται. τοῦτό σφι ἀντὶ λουτροῦ ἐστὶ· οὐ γὰρ δὴ λούνται ὕδατι τὸ παράπαν τὸ σῶμα· αἱ δὲ γυναῖκες αὐτῶν, ὕδωρ παραχέουσai, κατασάχουσai περὶ λίθον τρηγὺν τῆς κυπαρίσσου, καὶ κέδρου, καὶ λιβάνου ξύλου καὶ ἔπειτα τὸ κατασωχόμενον τοῦτο, παχὺ ἔδν, καταπλάσσονται πᾶν τὸ σῶμα καὶ τὸ πρόσωπον καὶ ἅμα μὲν εὐωδὴ σφέας ἀπὸ τούτου ἴσχει, ἅμα δὲ ἀπαιρέουσai τῇ δευτέρῃ ἡμέρῃ τὴν καταπλαστὴν γίνονται καθαραὶ καὶ λαμπραί.

Practice of burning the hemp-seeds to produce a vapour-bath.

The Scythians are most probably by water carriage, from a considerable distance. The notice in the text is the earliest of it, and one may suppose that the name is a native one. If so, the "Scythians" who cultivated it must have belonged to the Indo-Germanic race, for the identity of cannabis with the Teutonic hanf is certain. But it is possible that the name was given to the plant by the merchants who bought, not by the people who grew it.

²⁶⁷ ἀγάμενοι τῇ πυρὶ. The extraordinary practice mentioned in the text was no doubt partly for the purpose of getting quit of the annoyance of the mosquitoes, the numbers of which in the steppes are almost inconceivable. CLARKE says that in the plains of the Kouban no contrivance on the part of himself and his companion could prevent millions of these insects from entering the carriage; and in spite of gloves, clothes, and handkerchiefs, they rendered their bodies one entire wound, and excited a considerable degree of fever. The mortality occasioned by them in the Russian army, both of men and horses, was very great; and it was the practice of the soldiers to scoop out a hollow in the ancient barrows, and even in the greatest heats of summer to light fires in order to fill this with smoke, and thus escape the stings. (Travels, vol. ii. p. 59.) This circumstance will explain a curious sentiment attributed to Anacharsis (the Scythian) by DIOGENES LAERTIUS (l. 104). He wondered at nothing so much as that the Greeks should use charcoal: τὸν μὲν καπνόν ἐν τοῖς ὕρεσι καταλείπουσι, τὰ δὲ ξύλα εἰς τὴν πόλιν κομίζουσι. But at the same time the desire of intoxication was what determined the use of hemp seeds, from which at the present time the narcotic called bang is produced. The effect of hemp even while growing is to produce drowsiness and stupor in those who remain among it.

²⁶⁸ καὶ οὗτοι. "this people, too." Here it has been supposed there is a tacit reference back to ii. 91, where the writer has remarked upon the dislike of the Egyptians to Hellenic customs.

tures ἄλλων in the place of ἀλλήλων, and Gaisford adopts it. But the passage presents little real difficulty, if we suppose that χρᾶσθαι φεύγουσι is to be taken with the regimen of οὐ χρώνται, to which it is nearly equivalent. Translate: "These Scythians too have an invincible aversion to adopting foreign customs;—they will not take up any from one another, and least of all such as are Hellenic." Compare ii. 91: Ἑλληνικοῖσι δὲ νομαίοισι φεύγουσι χρᾶσθαι· τὸ δὲ σύμπαν εἰπεῖν, μὴδ' ἄλλων μηδαμᾶ μηδαμῶν ἀνθρώπων νομαίοισι.

²¹¹ κατὰ τὰ ὄρα. So ii. 90, κατὰ τὰ ἵκονον: v. 112 and vi. 88, κατὰ τὰ συνέθηκατο.

²¹² ἐς τὴν καλεομένην Ἰλαιν. See note 54 on § 18, above.

²¹³ ἐκδησάμενος ἀγάλματα. These were certain symbols suspended from the breast of the officiating priest. DIONYSIUS describes the proceeding which took place annually at Rome in honour of the same deity: ἱερᾶται αὐτῆς [τῆς θεῆς] ἀνὴρ φρονὲς καὶ γυνὴ φρονίγῃ· καὶ περιάγουσιν ἀνὰ τὴν πόλιν οὗτοι μητραγυροῦντες ὅσπερ αὐτοῖς ἔθος, τύπους τε περικείμενοι τοῖς στήθεσι, καὶ καταλούμενοι πρὸς τῶν ἐπομένων τὰ μητρῶα μέλη καὶ τύμπανα κροτοῦντες. (Archæolog. ii. 19.) When Manlius in his Asiatic campaign threw a bridge over the river Sangarius, there came to his camp Γάλλοι παρὰ Ἀττιδος καὶ Βαττάκου τῶν ἐκ Περσικῆς ἱερῶν τῆς Μητρὸς τῶν θεῶν, ἔχοντες προστηθῖδια καὶ τύπους. (POLYBIUS, xxi. 20.)

πάτρων, παῖδα δὲ εἶναι Γνούρου, τοῦ Λύκου, τοῦ Σπαργαπίθεος· εἰ ὦν ταύτης ἦν τῆς οἰκῆς ὁ Ἀνάχαρσις, ἴστω ὑπὸ τοῦ ἀδελφεοῦ ἀποθανών· Ἰδάνθυρσος γὰρ ἦν παῖς Σαυλίου· Σαύλιος δὲ ἦν ὁ ἀποκτείνας Ἀνάχαρσιν. Hellenic settler and a native, or a native chief and a Hellenic slave.

²¹⁷ ὑπο Πελοποννησίων λεγόμενον. The Spartans connected the origin of the madness of their king Cleomenes with an embassy of some Scythians to Lacedæmon. See vi. 84. Perhaps Anacharsis was in their traditions represented to have come on this occasion. The compliment to the Lacedæmonians at the expense of the other Greeks would induce one to suppose that the story which Herodotus heard from Peloponnesians originated at Sparta or thereabouts. It is apparently of more recent origin than the fashion of sophistical disputations; and perhaps the same may be said of all the stories of Anachar-

sis as a travelling philosopher. (See the passage from Plato, cited in note 113 on i. 32.) The epistle from Anacharsis to Hanno, which is gravely quoted by Cicero (Tusc. Disp. v. 32), is probably the translation of a rhetorical thesis of a much later time. But the views upon which this was based belong to the era which in Greece corresponded to the age of Buffon and Rousseau in France, and to that of Lucretius at Rome; when disgust at the scenes around them induced many to regret the time "when wild in woods the noble savage ran," and produced such fictions as the 'Contrat Social,' and the fifth book of the De Rerum Natura. The stories of the Ethiopians given by Herodotus belong to the same era. See note 56 on iii. 18.

²¹⁷ πέπαισται. This is the reading of S and V, the rest of the MSS having πέπλασται. But πέπαισται means παιδίας χάριν πέπλασται, and Gaisford rightly prefers it. The story is no doubt an ethopoeic fiction. See notes 113 and 477 on Book i.

²¹⁸ Ὀποίη. The manuscripts S and V have in place of this word Ὀρίη.

²¹⁹ ἦν δὲ αὕτη ἡ Ὀποίη ἀστὴ. The phrase ἀστὴ is a strong instance of adaptation, if the meaning of the author is that Opoea was a native Scythian woman. This however appears to be his intention; and perhaps the taking this woman as his wife is to be regarded as a conciliatory step on the part of Scyles to gain over the native interest, who may be supposed somewhat jealous of a chief born of a Hellenic mother. This supposition will account for the indignation with which they regarded his subsequent participation in Hellenic orgies, and their setting up in his place a brother of pure barbarian blood. There is entertained at the present day by the native Russian aristocracy a similar jealousy of the descendants of the western Europeans, through whom civilization was introduced into the country.

²²⁰ γυναῖκα ἔγημε ἐς αὐτὰ. The full expression would be ἔγημε καὶ ἡγάγετο ἐς αὐτὰ.

²²¹ ἐς χεῖρας ἄγεσθαι. See note 434 on i. 126.

²²² σφίγγες τε καὶ γρύπες ἔστασαν. RITTER (Vorhalle, pp. 225—227) quotes these decorations of Scyles's palace as an indication of the early passage of Indo-Bactrian symbolism, together with the religious ideas with which it was connected, into the regions about the Sea of Azof and the Euxine. But whether or not his theory be well founded, this passage can scarcely help it. It seems quite clear from the story of Scyles, that the ornaments in question belonged to the same time at which the palace was built. At that time the artists could hardly be other than Greeks, probably Asiatics, and if so, the forms in question would be suggested to them by what they saw in Asia Minor, in which such figures were unquestionably familiar after the long continuance of the Persian occupation.

²²³ διεπρήστευσε. The MSS vary between this reading, ἐπρήστευσε and διεπρήστευσε, which last rests only upon the authority of S, and looks like a correction for the sake of escaping the difficulty occasioned by the other readings. If it be adopted it must be rendered “asserted,” or “gave his word.” But perhaps διεπρή-στευσε is a corruption of the transcribers from διεπρήστευσε, a possible though unknown form equivalent in sense to διέδρη.

²²⁴ βακχεύει τε. This is the reading of M, P, F, K. Gaisford with the remainder omits τε.

²²⁵ Σιτάλης. This is the first time Herodotus mentions this chief, yet he does not think it necessary to give any further description of him. Sitaces no doubt became familiar to every one after he joined the Athenian alliance, which he did in the first year of the Peloponnesian war. (THUCYDIDES, ii. 29.) One may suppose therefore that this passage was written after that time. By parity of reasoning it may be supposed that the description of him given below (vii. 137) was written before this notoriety was acquired. See the note 566 on i. 170.

²²⁷ καὶ ὀλίγους, ὡς Σκύθας εἶναι. This expression is similar to μεγὰλα ἐκτῆσατο χρήματα, ὡς ἂν εἶναι Ῥοδῶπιν (ii. 136). Translate: "and few, to be Scythians." The smallest numbers which were given to Herodotus by his informants were great for any other nation.

²²⁹ ἐν τούτῳ τῷ χώρῳ κέεται χαλκήϊον. RITTER (Vorhalle, p. 344) conceives that the spot where this bowl was set up was a sacred one, and that it was the site of a colony of Buddha-worshippers. But the principal argument with which he backs his opinion rests upon the supposition that the footmark of Heracles (spoken of in § 82) was in the immediate vicinity,—of which there is certainly no hint in Herodotus. The two objects were undoubtedly on different sides of the river Hypanis, and the latter not near its bank. (Compare § 52 and § 82.) But Ritter in fact puts Exampneus between the Tyras and the Hypanis, apparently from a slip of the memory, and not, as Herodotus does, between the latter river and the Borysthenes. And it is not easy to see to what use Buddhists would put such a cauldron as that described. The Cimbri of the north of Europe had a much smaller one, which they held sacred, and sent as a present to Augustus Caesar. Over this it was their practice to cut the throats of the captives they took in war (STRABO, vii. pp. 68—70); and the identification of these Cimbri with the Cimmerii of Scythia seems to have rested mainly on the notorious similarity of their habits,—a circumstance which squares very ill with Buddhism.

²³² ἐς τὸν κατ' ἀρχὰς ἦια λέξων λόγον. The thread of the narrative is resumed from the beginning of this book,—and the expression κατ' ἀρχὰς affords a presumption in favour of the book being the commencement of a new division of the subject when it came from the hands of the author.

²³³ ζευγύναι τὸν Θρηῆκιον Βόσπορον. See the note 261 on § 88.

²³⁴ ἐξήλαυε τὸν στρατὸν ἐκ Σούσων. RENNELL considers the site of the ancient Susa to be the place called Sus, about forty-four geographical miles more to the n.w. in the direction of Babylon than Tustar or Suster, which was previously considered its site. (Geography of Herodotus, p. 203.) As far as Herodotus is concerned, or the Greeks of his time, it may be affirmed that all known of Susa was that it stood by the side of a river called Choaspes, was the royal palace of the Great King, and that it formed one termination of a great caravan road, of which Sardis constituted the other, in which road there was a certain number of halting places, and a certain amount of estimated, not measured, distance. (See notes on v. 49 and on v. 63.) The expression in the text implies that in the notion of the writer the army was concentrated at Susa, and marched from thence,—a journey of at least three months—to the coast. Such can never have been the actual plan of operations. See another instance of misapprehension of oriental strategics, i. 77 (with note 268) above.

²³⁷ πέφυκε θωυμασιώτατος. It is a remarkable circumstance, that while Herodotus gives the true dimensions of the Bosporus, on the supposition of the stade being about 600 feet, or 10 stades to a geographical mile, the magnitude in length and breadth which he assigns to the Euxine is enormously too great. The breadth of the strait and the length of the αὐχὴν would fall under his very eye, but this would not be the case with the other facts. When he comes to the Propontis the dimensions become much too great, and to make his statement harmonize with facts, the stades must be taken much smaller, as equalling no more than $\frac{1}{10}$ of their real magnitude. But even this exaggeration is much less than for the Euxine, where the stades must be taken at only $\frac{1}{10}$ of the proper magnitude. In other words, the error of estimated distance in a run by sea of the extent of the Propontis amounts to an excess of two-fifths, and in one of the extent of the Euxine to an excess of no less than eleven-tenths. (LEAKE, op. Geogr. Journal, ix. p. 11.) Now although the ability of the ancients to estimate a run out at sea was next to nothing, they having no contrivance answering to our log, it seems impossible that the rate of error should vary so greatly as appears above. It is more probable that the dimensions of the Euxine were exaggerated by the merchants from whom Herodotus obtained his information, than that he himself made the voyage and was deceived to so enormous an extent.

τριηκόσιοι καὶ τρισχίλιοι²³⁸. τοῦτου τοῦ πελάγους τὸ στόμα ἐστὶ εὖρος τέσσερες στάδιοι, μῆκος δὲ [τοῦ στόματος] ὁ αὐχλὴν τὸ δὴ Βόσπορος κέκληται, κατ' ὃ δὴ ἔξευκτο ἡ γέφυρα, ἐπὶ σταδίου εἴκοσι καὶ ἑκατὸν ἐστὶ· τείνει δ' ἐς τὴν Προποντίδα ὁ Βόσπορος· ἡ δὲ Προποντίς, εὐρεῖα εὖρος μὲν σταδίων πεντακοσίων μῆκος δὲ τετρακοσίων καὶ χιλίων, καταδιδοὶ ἐς τὸν Ἑλλήσποντον ἔοντα στενωπότητι μὲν ἑπτὰ σταδίου μῆκος δὲ τετρακοσίων· ἐκδιδοὶ δὲ ὁ Ἑλλήσποντος ἐς χάσμα πελάγους τὸ δὴ Αἰγαῖον καλεῖται. Mode of estimating the dimension of these seas.

²³⁸ τοῦ τὸ μὲν μῆκος . . τρισχίλιοι. For the enormous exaggeration of this statement as regards the Euxine see the last note. It is perhaps not impossible to guess the way in which the error arose. It would appear from § 86 that these distances are the result of a calculation of which the elementary fact is the number of day and night runs out at sea. Now it is a curious circumstance that if the estimated length of a day and night's run be taken at about sixty-two geographical miles,—an amount which results from the Homeric story of Odysseus sailing from Crete to Egypt in less than five whole days (Odys. xiv. 257)—the true dimensions of the Euxine will come out with very tolerable accuracy from the times ("nine days and eight nights" and "three days and two nights") given in § 86. If then we conceive the author receiving his information in terms of "time,"—which time had been traditionally handed down from the days when about 620 stades were the twenty-four hours' run,—and converting this time into "space" according to the standard which prevailed in his own day, when, as was the case from the time of the battle of Mycale, the navigation had undoubtedly become far more courageous, (See below, viii. 132,) we shall obtain an explanation of his erroneous statement without any drawback from his accuracy. The traders in the Euxine would certainly not be anxious to remove the ancient impression which existed of the length and dangers of the voyage. (See the next note.)

²³⁹ ἐς μὲν Φάσις ἀπὸ τοῦ στόματος. Herodotus, although he seems to have been himself at Phasis, doubtless here gives the average run, not from his own experience, but as he heard it from the traders. (For the importance of Phasis as an emporium see note 363 on i. 104.) The proverb was current: εἰς Φάσις, ἔνθα ναυσὶν ἔσχατος ὁρμός, although to the easternmost point of the sea was, according to STRABO, 600 stades further direct run (xi. c. 2, p. 408). This section furnishes an excellent lesson of the caution with which Herodotus's statements are to be weighed.

²⁴⁰ ἔνδεκα μυριάδες καὶ ἑκατὸν ὀργυιῶν, "one hundred and eleven myriads of fathoms," not, as Larcher supposes, 110,100 only.

²⁴¹ ἐκ τῆς Σινδικῆς. This is the region between Corocondame (which was nearly on the extreme point of the southern shore of the Cimmerian Bosphorus) and the mouth of the river Kouban. STRABO (xi. c. 2, p. 408) puts the Σινδικὸς λιμὴν 180 stades east of Corocondame, the coast in that part running due E. and W. Another harbour (called Bata) he puts 400 stades east of the port of Sind, and considers it to be due north of Sinope; while Herodotus in the text makes the

After surveying the entrance of the sea, Darius sails back to Mandrocles's bridge, and sets up two stelae upon the shore to commemorate the enterprise.

Ὁ δὲ Δαρεῖος ὡς ἐθήησατο τὸν Πόντον, ἔπλεε ὀπίσω ἐπὶ τὴν γέφυραν τῆς ἀρχιτέκτων ἐγένετο Μανδροκλῆς Σάμιος· θηησάμενος δὲ καὶ τὸν Βόσπορον, στήλας ἔστησε δύο ἐπ' αὐτῷ²⁴³ λίθου λευκοῦ, ἐνταμὼν γράμματα ἐς μὲν τὴν Ἀσσύρια²⁴⁴ ἐς δὲ τὴν Ἑλληνικὰ, ἔθνεα πάντα ὅσα περ ἦγε· ἦγε δὲ πάντα τῶν ἡρχε²⁴⁵. τούτων μυριάδες ἐξηριθμήθησαν, χωρὶς τοῦ ναυτικοῦ, ἐβδομήκοντα σὺν ἱππεύσιν· νέες δὲ ἑξακόσiai συνελέχθησαν. τῇσι μὲν νυν στήλησι ταύτησι Βυζάντιοι κομίσαντες ἐς τὴν πόλιν ὕστερον τούτων ἐχρήσαντο πρὸς τὸν βωμὸν τῆς Ὀρθωσίης²⁴⁶ Ἀρτέμιδος, χωρὶς ἐνὸς λίθου· οὗτος δὲ κατελείφθη παρὰ τοῦ Διονύσου τὸν νηὸν ἐν Βυζαντίῳ, γραμμάτων Ἀσσυρίων πλέος²⁴⁷. τοῦ δὲ Βοσ-port of Sind due north of Themiscyra. All the MSS have Ἰνδικῆς, on which see note 90 on § 28.

²⁴² οὐ πολλῷ τέφ ἐλάσσων ἑαυτοῦ. The inaccuracy of this statement even as compared with the exaggerated dimensions given of the Euxine is remarkable. The author seems to have had no data whatever by which the Sea of Azof could be measured. Undoubtedly it must be considered that the silting up of this sea necessarily proceeds much more rapidly than that of the Euxine, and consequently that their relative magnitudes must have altered considerably since the time of Herodotus. But in fact access to it seems to have been closed at the time the author was writing. (See note 65 on § 21.)

²⁴³ ἐπ' αὐτῷ, "on the coast of it." It will be observed that the στήλαι were no longer in situ; and that there was no positive evidence at what part of the strait the bridge had been thrown across. In the opinion of Herodotus it will have been half way between Byzantium and the temple of Zeus Urius at the mouth of the sea. But between the time of which he here speaks and the time at which he wrote, Byzantium had been deserted, and the empty town burnt by the Phoenicians with the Persian army (vi. 33).

²⁴⁴ Ἀσσύρια. These characters will doubtless have been the arrow-headed writing, but which of the three varieties which are combined on the Behistun Inscription it is impossible to say. It seems very questionable whether the Greeks were aware of any distinction between them. The same writing is no doubt that of the intercepted despatch mentioned in THUCYDIDES, iv. 50.

cumstance, that if he saw those out of which the altar of Artemis Orthosia had been built, he did not see the same appearance on them. He is evidence for the fact that a stone of peculiar character was lying by the side of the temple of Dionysus in Byzantium; and he was told that this was a component part of two στήλαι which had formerly stood on the shore of the Bosphorus, and that the remaining portions had been used for building the altar of Artemis in the same city. He was also told that the original monuments had contained a certain bilingual inscription, which was regarded as the muster roll of Darius's army on a particular occasion when he had all his subjects with him.

²⁴⁸ τοῦ ἐπὶ στόματι. The manuscripts S and V have τοῦ ἐπὶ στόματος. The temple spoken of is that of Ζεὺς Ὀβριος (ARRIAN, Peripl. § 11), the starting point for the run up the Euxine under a s.w. breeze, which began regularly in April. See note 87 on § 28, above.

²⁴⁹ πᾶσι δέκα. See note 213 on iii. 74.

²⁵⁰ ἀπ' ὧν δὴ. This offering of Mandrocles is the particular point to which the attention of the reader is directed.

See on this use of the particle δὴ the note 6 on i. 1.

²⁵¹ ἀνέθηκε ἐς τὸ Ἡραῖον. It seems unquestionable that the painting in the Heræum and the traditions of the temple attaching to it are the main foundation for the story of the bridge of boats having been laid across the Thracian Bosphorus. (See the last note.) It seems also certain that the army was represented as marching, not being ferried, across. In the picture therefore, at any rate, the whole transaction was represented as a parallel to the transit of the Hellespont by Xerxes, who himself ἐθίετο τὸν στρατὸν ἐπὶ μαστιγῶν διαβαίνοντα (vii. 66). From i. 164 it would appear that paintings existed in the temples of Phocæa when that city was taken by Harpagus,—perhaps votive offerings of merchants saved from shipwreck.

²⁵² Μανδροκλῆς. This name is given as Ἀνδροκλῆς in the citation of the epigram by GYLLIUS (Bosp. Thrac. ii. 13), and as Μανδοκλέων in the Palatine Anthology (vi. 341). In the next line the Palat. Anth. has τῷ μὲν δὴ στέφανον.

²⁵⁴ Ἴωνές τε καὶ Αἰολῆες καὶ Ἑλλησπόντιοι. For the probable early incorporation of the Ionians and Aeolians as Persian allies see the notes 476 on i. 141, and 503 on i. 176. It is not to be overlooked that in the narrative of this expedition of Darius no Phoenician force is mentioned. If there were no Phoenician ships, the expression ἦγε δὲ πάντα ὦν ἤρχε must be taken with considerable allowance (above, § 87). If there was a Phoenician force present, the omission of its mention possibly arises from the circumstance of Herodotus here following the authority of an Ionian narrative. See the note 269 on § 98, below.

²⁵⁵ ἐς ἄκεις φέροντα. See note 365 on iii. 133.

²⁵⁶ ὁδὸς δ' ἐπ' αὐτάς ἐστι ἴση, κ.τ.λ.
These two cities were probably the points from which persons wishing to make use of the mineral springs of the Taurus set out on their journey to them; and it is likely that at one or the other Herodotus heard the story of Darius's visit and of the monument which commemorated it.
The expression Περσέων τε καὶ πάσης τῆς ἡπείρου βασιλεὺς is a description of the king which would be natural to an Asiatic or Hellespontine Greek, but not to a Persian. (See the BEHISTUN INSCRIPTION quoted in Excursus on iii. 74, p. 423.) Nothing is more likely than that both this monument and the cairn mentioned in § 92 stood by the side of the mountain road which led from Perinthus to Apollonia, and that the authority of Herodotus is some traveller by this road whom he met at Perinthus.

²⁵⁷ ἐκδοὶ δὲ ὁ Τέαρος οὗτος . . . τὴν παρ' Αἰνῆ πόλιν. From this description of the river-system to which the Taurus belongs, it seems plain that the Agrianes must be the river Erzene, which falls into the Mariza (Hebrus) about ten miles to the south of Adrianople. Which of the tributaries of the Erzene is the Contadesdus can only be guessed. PLINY (N. H.
iv. 11) mentions the Taurus, but in such a way as to induce the belief that in the notion of the authority he followed its waters fell into the Euxine. And if the springs were high up in the mountain range which forms the water-shed between the tributaries of the Hebrus and the streams which fall into the Euxine, and the direction in the first part of the course appeared to be westerly, it is conceivable that visitors at the source should at once refer it to a river-system with which in its lower parts they were acquainted.

on i. 188 for the importance attached to water by the Asiatics. Still it is not likely that any man should commend for its potable qualities a water obviously of a mineral, and (judging from its effects) probably a sulphureous character. It was however the practice of the Persian court to pass a considerable portion of every summer in a part of the country in which mineral springs existed, and in fact to go through a course of water drinking and bathing,—a fashion which is ridiculed in a somewhat coarse manner by ARISTOPHANES (Acharn. 80—84). It is probable that the Persian officers in the Hellespont would retain their habits, and thus the springs of Tearus would become a kind of Toplitz or Aix la Chapelle for the Chersonese. In that case the visit of any person of high rank would naturally be commemorated by a monument, as a circumstance calculated to enhance the honour of the baths. That it should be set up by their express desire is another matter.

* Ζάλμοξιν. Some of the MSS have Ζάλμοξιν, and some Ζάμολξιν. The name Σαλμυδησσός, which apparently belongs to the same dialect, would induce the belief that Salm or Zalm is the real form of the first syllable of the name. From HESYCHIUS (sub v.) it appears that some identified this deity with the Hellenic Cronus. But this identification was probably not earlier than the Alexandrine times, when Cronus was regarded as an allegorizing of χρόνος (the course of time). ΜΝΑΣΚΑΣ (see Etym. Magn. v. Ζάμολξιν) is apparently one of the authorities referred to by Hesychius.

early an author as Herodotus. The original notion of ἥθεα βαθύ seems to be a character formed by sound and philosophical instruction, not of the merely technical kind (such as the use of weapons) to which the education of a savage would be confined. ἥθ. β. ἢ κατὰ Θρηίκας would be "the results of a deeper training than the Thracian customs recognized."

³⁶⁶ ἀρρομένου φανήσεται οὐδέν. The region described above (§ 17) as inhabited by Scythian husbandmen is not taken into account by the speaker. Neither is there any indication in the narrative of Darius's campaign of his entering such a country. The geographical part of Herodotus's account of the country apparently belongs to a different cycle of stories from those on which the expedition of Darius rests.

He orders the Ionians to watch the bridge for sixty days, and pushes on for the interior.

Description of the sea-board of Scythia from the Ister.

²⁶⁶ ἀπάψας ἄμματα ἐξήκοντα. It has been remarked that this rude method of computation ascribed to the Persians is very striking, and undoubtedly it would surprise us to find that it prevailed among them. But if it be looked at as a feature in a local story of the invasion, it indicates nothing more than that such a mode of computing was familiar to the locality whence the story was obtained,—perhaps a part of Thrace or Scythia. The practice of the early Romans and the Vulturnians to register the lapse of a year by driving a nail into the wall of a temple is well known from LIVY (vii. 3).

²⁷⁰ καλεομένης Καρκινίτιδος. This town has been mentioned before, as if known at least by description. But there is no appearance whatever of the author having visited it; and from the description in the text, it seems plain that he conceived it, the mouth of the Ister, and that of the Borysthenes, as lying nearly on the same parallel. STRABO himself does not appear to know the town, although he describes the Καρκινίτης κόλπος which is named from it. This latter is the bay of which the n.w. headland is formed by the ἄκρα Ταμυράκη,—the western point of a long narrow sandbank joined to the main by an isthmus in about the middle of its extent, called the Ἀχιλλεῖος δρόμος. But so little was known of the bay even in Strabo's time, from the dangerous navigation, that the local accounts of the distance from Tamyrace to the head of the bay varied from 1000 to 3000 stadæ (vii. p. 92). Now at the head of the bay (the Ulu Degnitz or Dead Sea) is the isthmus connecting the Crimea with the main, of the width of which the accounts also varied from 40 to 360 stadæ. (STRABO, l. c.) Of this isthmus Herodotus does not take any notice at all, except it be assumed that it is the site of the Slav's Dyke described in § 3, above, against which much may be said. In his view the coast of the Crimea is conceived as running pretty nearly in a straight line from the low land at the s.w. of the embouchure of the Borysthenes to the Χερσονήσος τρηχία, the mountainous district forming the European shore of the Cimmerian Bosphorus. After the cape (the Ram's head) is rounded, he imagines the main direction of the coast to be northward, or N. by E., until the mouth of the Tanais and the head of the Sea of Azof is reached. The narrow strait he seems to bring considerably to the north of its true position, and to be quite unaware of the extent and figure of the coast of the Crimea between κριοῦ μέτωπον (the Ram's head) and Panticapæum.

²⁷¹ δς δὲ τῆς Ἀττικῆς ταῦτα μὴ παραπέπλωκε. From the circumstance of the author using an illustration derived from the coast of Italy, it has been argued that this passage must have been written by him subsequently to his arrival at Thurii, and intended for the special purpose of informing the inhabitants of Magna Græcia. The passage in § 16, above, seems likewise to imply a familiarity with Metapontium,—such as might be expected from a person settled in the immediate neighbourhood.

²⁷² τὸ κατύπερθε τῶν Ταύρων. The manuscripts S and V omit τὸ.

²⁷³ τὰ πρὸς θαλάσσης τῆς ἡοῆς, "the eastern seaboard." The Sea of Azof and the Bosphorus seem to be conjointly described as the eastern sea in opposition to the sea to the west of the Crimea. The Euxine itself was in after times considered to be divided into an easterly and westerly portion by a line drawn from κριοῦ μέτωπον (the Ram's head), the southernmost point of the Crimea, to Cape Carambis in Paphlagonia. It was said that navigators passing between often saw the two points simultaneously. (STRABO, vii. p. 94.)

101 *ταίων δὲ, Μελαγχλαίων. Ἔστι ὦν τῆς Σκυθικῆς, ὡς εἰσὶν τετραγώνου*²⁷⁴, τῶν δύο μερέων κατηκόντων ἐς θάλασσαν, πάντη ἴσον τό τε ἐς τὴν μεσόγαιαν φέρον, καὶ τὸ παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν ἀπὸ γὰρ Ἰστρου ἐπὶ Βορυσθένα δέκα ἡμέρων ὁδός· ἀπὸ Βορυσθέως τ' ἐπὶ τὴν λίμνην τὴν Μαιῆτιν, ἐτέρων δέκα· καὶ τὸ ἀπὸ θαλάσσης ἐς μεσόγαιαν ἐς τοὺς Μελαγχλαίους τοὺς κατύπερθε Σκυθῶν οἰκημένους, εἴκοσι ἡμέρων ὁδός. ἡ δὲ ὁδὸς ἡ ἡμερησίῃ ἀνὰ διηκόσια στάδια συμβέβληται μοι²⁷⁵. οὕτω ἂν εἴη τῆς Σκυθικῆς τὰ ἐπικάρσια²⁷⁶, τετρακισχιλίων σταδίων καὶ τὰ ὄρθια, τὰ ἐς τὴν μεσόγαιαν φέροντα, ἐτέρων τοσούτων σταδίων. ἡ μὲν νῦν γῆ αὕτη ἐστὶ μέγας τοσαύτη.

102 *Οἱ δὲ Σκύθαι δόντες σφίσι λόγον ὡς οὐκ οἶοι τέ εἰσι τὸν Δαρείου στρατὸν ἰθυμαχίῃ διώσασθαι μῦνοι, ἔπεμπον ἐς τοὺς πλησιοχώρους ἀγγέλους· τῶν δὲ καὶ δὴ οἱ βασιλῆες συνελθόντες ἐβουλεύοντο, ὡς στρατοῦ ἐπελαύνοντος μεγάλου ἦσαν δὲ οἱ συνελθόντες βασιλῆες, Ταύρων, καὶ Ἀγαθύρσων, καὶ Νευρῶν, καὶ Ἀνδροφάγων, καὶ Μελαγχλαίων, καὶ Γελωνῶν, καὶ Βουδίνων, καὶ Σαυροματέων*²⁷⁷.

²⁷⁴ ὡς εἰσὶν τετραγώνου, "considered as a square." These words must not be pressed too closely. The writer obviously throws the country of the Tauri entirely out of consideration, and has very vague notions of the dimensions of the territory occupied by the northern neighbours of the Scythians. The main points suggesting the comparison are that he believes each coast line to be 4000 stades in length, and the Melanchlaeni to lie twenty days' journey inland of the Scythians on the banks of the Tanais.

²⁷⁶ ἐπικάρσια. This word has occasioned a good deal of difficulty, and given rise to some false conceptions of the figure which Herodotus attributes to Scythia. It is in fact a relative term, and means "at an angle,"—not "at an oblique angle" in contradistinction to a right angle, but generally "at an angle" in contradistinction to that which is in the same line. Thus in the Odyssey (ix. 70) the expression ἐφέροντ' ἐπικάρσιαι is applied to the ships heeling over on being struck by a squall,—as opposed to sailing on an even keel. The streets of Babylon, according to Herodotus's description (i. 180), were built straight: τάς τε ἄλλας καὶ τὰς ἐπικαρσίας τὰς ἐπὶ τὸν ποταμὸν ἐχούσας, where the word implies merely those turning off from the main streets. So the pontoon-bridge of Xerxes at the Hellespont was so laid that the ships composing it were τοῦ μὲν Πόντου ἐπικαρσίας τοῦ δὲ Ἑλλησπόντου κατὰ ῥέον, "at an angle to the line of coast of the Euxine, but in the line of stream of the canal." In this passage the force of the word consists in its opposition to τὰ ὄρθια, which are the lines drawn from the sea-coast directly inland. The coast lines, being inclined to these, are τὰ ἐπικάρσια, but what the angle of inclination may be is not expressed.

²⁷⁷ ἦσαν δὲ οἱ συνελθόντες . . . Σαυροματέων. With the exception of the Tauri, these tribes are mentioned in the order in which they come from west to east. The Agathyrsi perhaps may be considered to occupy the site of the Carpathian mountains on both sides, and the others to be mere nomad tribes. A river which takes its rise among the Agathyrsi (the Maris) seems to be the Theiss (see § 49); and the circumstance of their being ἄβρότατοι and χρυσόφοροι serves to distinguish them from the filthy nomads of the plains. If they were mountaineers too, there is a reason for their making a stand against the flying Scythians, and for the latter not attempting to force their way through mountainous regions where their wagons could not have travelled. See below, § 125.

²⁷⁸ τῇ Παρθένῳ. The site of the temple of this goddess was a promontory in the Crimea immediately to the south of the city Chersonesus, a colony from Heraclea in Pontus, which is mentioned by Scylax of Caryanda, although neither it nor Heraclea itself are by Herodotus (see the next note). It was near the mouth of the bay at the head of which the Russian arsenal Sebastopol stands. A line drawn from Sebastopol to the south for about eight miles falls into the head of the bay of Balaclava, anciently called Συμβόλων λιμὴν, the chief den of the Tauric wreckers and pirates. Within the peninsula formed by this isthmus (which was called μικρὰ Χερρόνησος to distinguish it from the μεγὰλὴ Χερρόνησος or the Crimea) were three small harbours, besides the Tauric port, and the bay of Aktiar or Sebastopol. The Tauric shore was considered to extend from the Συμβόλων λιμὴν to the town Theodosia (the modern Caffa) a distance of 1000 stades. It was singularly well fitted for piracy, the high shores furnishing excellent stations for observing the vessels going up the Euxine, as they passed through the narrowest part of that sea included between the Ram's head and Cape Carambis in Asia. (STRABO, vii. pp. 91, seqq.)

²⁷⁹ τοὺς ἀν λάβωσι Ἑλλήνων ἐπαναχθέντας. This was a common belief at Athens, and appears to have been inculcated by the dramatic writers. EURI-

PIDES (Ip̄h. Taur. 38) makes Iphigenia say of herself:—

θῶν γὰρ, ὅντος τοῦ νόμου καὶ πρὶν πόλει, ὅς ἀν κατέλθῃ τῇδε γῇν Ἑλλήν ἄνθρ.

And yet it is singular that the very arsenal of the Taurians (see the last note) should have been called συμβόλων λιμὴν, — a name which clearly indicates commercial relations between them and foreigners. One may be inclined to suspect that it was only the Ionians who were treated in the way described in the text, and that a confederacy may have existed for the purpose of monopolizing the traffic with the Sea of Azof which passed through the Cimmerian Bosphorus. If all Greeks had been treated so cruelly, the city Chersonesus would hardly have been founded from Heraclea under the very eye of the Taurians. But Heraclea was essentially Dorian, as the inscriptions on its coins show. (HOFMANN, p. 1591.) If a confederacy existed between the Bosphorane Greeks, the Taurians, and the Heracleots, for the purpose of excluding the Ionian Asiatics from the channel traffic, an explanation is afforded of some of Herodotus's most striking omissions. See note 68 on § 21.

²⁸⁰ λέγουσι αὐτοὶ Ταῦροι. It must not be necessarily concluded from this expression that the writer had himself been on the spot. His ignorance of the outline of the coast (see note 270 on § 94) proves the contrary decisively. And if he obtained his information from Hellenic traders, the real state of the case would no doubt be that they identified the native deity with the Iphigenia of their own mythology, and the Tauri allowed the theory. Some such identification would be requisite for the purposes of traffic, as without some common religious bond no covenant of any kind would be held valid. See note 37 on iii. 11.

²²¹ ὑπὸ ὀφίων. It has been considered that the basis of this story may be the locusts which sometimes cover the plains of southern Russia.

²²³ λύκος γίγεται. This is the superstition of the wer-wolf, which seems to have prevailed in all countries where these ferocious animals were common. Its origin is perhaps to be looked for in the peculiar character which mania would be likely to assume in a population living among forests and accustomed to hear the howling of wolves at night. GARMM (Deutsche Mythologie, p. 621) gives several forms which the superstition takes in different parts of western Europe. In Denmark the bear takes the place of the wolf. In some parts of the east the tiger does, and in Abyssinia the hyena. But transformation into a wolf as a voluntary act implies a belief in witchcraft superadded to experience of the disease of lycanthropy. VIRGIL (Bucol. viii. 97) makes Mæris change himself into a wolf by the help of certain herbs which came from Pontus, the head-quarters of witchcraft, and the source perhaps of Herodotus's story.

²⁸⁵ ἀνθρωποφαγέουσι δὲ μῦνοι τούτων. These words in all the MSS follow the next section.

²⁸⁶ εἴματα μὲν μέλανα. These are doubtless black sheepskins, a dress which at this day distinguishes a tribe found in the Hindoo Koosh, and procures them the name of Siah-roosh, a literal translation of μελάγχλαινοι.

²⁸⁷ γλαυκόν τε πᾶν ἰσχυρῶς ἐστὶ καὶ πυρρόν. The personal description is very much the same as that given by TACITUS of the Germans as a whole: "truces et caerulei oculi: rutilae comae." (German. § 4.)

²⁸⁸ φθειροτραγέουσι. It is to me doubtful whether this word is to be interpreted "are lice-eaters." Where that practice is mentioned (below, § 168), it is described in clearer terms. The seeds of pine-cones were called φθείρες (Τζετζε ad Lycoph. 1383); and these have been a common article of food with the Greeks both in ancient and modern times. HAWKINS says that the kernels of the stone-pine, now called κοκκωνάρια, form an article of exportation from Elis to Zante and Cefalonia (ap. Walpole's Turkey, p. 236).

²⁸⁹ λίμνη μεγάλη τε καὶ πολλή. The whole of the region north of the Caspian between the rivers Volga and Ural is full of lakes of a marsh-like character, but it seems impossible to fix specially upon any of these as the one contemplated by Herodotus's informant.

²⁹⁰ θηρία τετραγωνοπρόσωπα. What these animals were, which are mentioned together with otters and beavers, is not easy to say. It can scarcely be doubted that the ὄρχις presently spoken of are really the bags of the musk-deer; and perhaps the θηρία τετραγωνοπρόσωπα are the seals found in the Caspian and mouths of the Volga, the skins of which would

The Sauro-mata are in the legend connected with the Amazons.

Σαυροματέων δὲ πέρι ὧδε λέγεται· ὅτε Ἕλληνας Ἀμαζόσι ἐμαχέσαντο^a, (τὰς δὲ Ἀμαζόννας καλέουσι οἱ Σκύθαι Οἰόρπατα· δύναται δὲ τὸ οὖνομα τοῦτο κατὰ Ἑλλάδα γλῶσσαν ἀνδροκτόνοι· ΟΙΟΡ γὰρ καλέουσι τὸν ἄνδρα, τὸ δὲ ΠΑΤΑ κτείνειν³⁰².) τότε λόγος, τοὺς Ἕλληνας, νικήσαντας τῇ ἐπὶ Θερμώδοντι μάχῃ, ἀποπλέειν ἄγοντας τρισὶ πλοίοισι τῶν Ἀμαζόνων ὅσας ἡδυνέατο come by the same route into the hands of the Pontine Greeks as the musk-bags and the otter and beaver skins. It was not to be expected that the merchant should be a natural historian; and hence he might not unnaturally believe that the two articles belonged to the same animal. See note 309 on iii. 107.

³⁰¹ περὶ τὰς σισύρνας παραρράπτεται, "are sewed on as a border around the woollen mantles." The Germans, according to TACITUS, attempted to improve the appearance of the skins of land animals by spotting them with seal skin (German. § 27); and EURIPIDES makes the female bacchantes produce a similar variety by white wool upon fawn skin:

στικτῶν δ' ἐνδύτῃ νεβρίδων
στέφετε λευκοτρίχων πλοκάμων μαλλοῖς.
Bacch. 109.

^a ὅτε Ἕλληνας Ἀμαζόσι ἐμαχέσαντο. In the Iliad (iii. 189) a war takes place between the Phrygians and Amazons παρ' ὅχθας Σαγγαρίοιο in 'vine bearing' Phrygia, i. e. the region of Apamea. The Villoison Scholiast on the passage makes them daughters of Ares and Armenia, a Naiad.

³⁰² ΟΙΟΡ γὰρ καλέουσι τὸν ἄνδρα, τὸ δὲ ΠΑΤΑ κτείνειν. It is not at all easy to refer these two words to their analogues in any known language. Οἶδρ is compared by RITTER with the Sanscrit viroh, which shows the connexion with the Latin vir; and this meaning is generally accepted. But there is great apparent difficulty in explaining how παρὰ should mean to kill. In the Sanscrit the root of παρὰ would rather suggest the meaning of "dominari," not of "occidere," and according to BOPP, the nominative pats still means "husband"—a relation which in early times always involves the notion of lordship—in the Lithuanian dialect. As one solution of a difficulty which has not been satisfactorily explained, I should be inclined to believe that οἰόρπατα may be the name which the people, whom the Greeks called Amazons, gave to themselves, and that they understood by it "vīrorum domini," a natural appellation for a martial race to assume. If however their warfare was of a cruel and exterminating character, which it most likely was, this feature would be what would distinguish them in the eyes of other tribes who came into contact with them, and their name, if regarded as significant, might be correspondently interpreted. Hence the same word would possibly mean "vīrorum dominus," or "vīrorum occisor," according as it was used by an Amazon or a Scythian. The case of Melkart (see note 130 on ii. 44) is illustrative of such a change. The Tyrians undoubtedly meant by the name "dominus urbis," while the Greeks understood in Melicerta "dominus navigantium." But the question is an extremely difficult one; for one cannot be certain that the language in which the word οἰόρπατα was used was pure Scythian. It may very well have belonged to the mixed race which sprang up out of the intercourse of Hellenic colonists and traders with the natives, and, if so, παρὰ may be connected with the word παταίκοι. (See note 111 on iii. 37.) I myself believe it is also the root of the word ἀπάτωρος, a surname by which Aphrodite was worshipped at Phanagoria. This was a deity somewhat analogous to the Lydian Omphale, and the later Greeks derived her name from ἀνδρῶν, the legend being that she invited the giants to her embraces separately, and delivered them over to be murdered by Heracles, whom she had previously concealed at hand. (STRABO, xi. p. 404.) The α of ἀπάτωρος is no more an essential part of the word than the first letter of Anaitis. See note 278 on ii. 100.

would suspect it from this passage. It seems not impossible that the whole story of the Amazons is an insertion in a later draught of the work.

²⁹⁴ οὔτε ἄλλη οὐδαμῇ. This is very different from the habits of the Calmucks of southern Russia at the present time. Their women are described by CLARKE as being uncommonly hardy, and on horseback outstripping their male companions in the race. (Travels, i. p. 317.) But the picture in the text is probably drawn by a Greek, who transfers the habits of his own countrywomen to the Scythian matrons.

Legation of the Scythians to their barbarian neighbours

²⁹⁶ ἐν τῷ νῦν κατοικῆνται. The site somewhat differs from that given in § 21, above. There the Sauromatae are represented as extending along the Tanais on the eastern bank, from the very embouchure of the river for fifteen days' journey northwards. The amount of their extension from the river is not stated in either passage. The first natural boundary would be the Wolga, and that at no great distance; but Herodotus's informant obviously knows nothing of the people, except the general bearing of the country supposed to be occupied by them, and the legend which prevailed among his informants as to their origin.

²⁹⁷ νομίζουσι, "ordinarily use." From including the sense of χρῶνται the word is put in the same regimen which χρῶνται would require. See the note 132 on ii. 44, and 181 on § 64, above.

²⁹⁸ πρὶν ἂν τῶν πολεμίων ἄνδρα ἀποκτείνῃ. HIPPOCRATES makes the qualification for a wife to be the having slain three enemies. (De aere, &c., p. 553.) In another place he relates that it is the practice of the Amazons to cripple all their male children by dislocating their knees or their hips at a very early age.

Ταῦτα Σκυθῶν ἐπαγγελιομένων, ἐβουλεύοντο οἱ βασιλῆες οἱ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐθνῶν ἥκοντες· καὶ σφῶν ἐσχίσθησαν αἱ γνώμαι· ὁ μὲν γὰρ Γελωνὸς, καὶ ὁ Βουδῖνος, καὶ ὁ Σαυρομάτης, κατὰ τῶντ' ὀφειλόμενοι, ὑπέδεκοντο Σκύθησι τιμωρήσιν· ὁ δὲ Ἀγάθυρσος, καὶ Νευρὸς, καὶ Ἀνδροφάγος, καὶ οἱ τῶν Μελαγχλαίων καὶ Ταύρων, τὰδε Σκύθησι ὑπεκρίναντο· "εἰ μὲν μὴ ὑμεῖς ἔατε οἱ πρότερον ἀδικήσαντες Πέρσας καὶ ἄρξαντες πολέμου, τοῦτων δέομενοι τῶν νῦν δέεσθε λέγειν τε ἂν ἐφαίνεσθε ἡμῖν ὀρθά, καὶ ἡμεῖς ὑπακούσαντες τῷ αὐτῷ ἂν ὑμῖν ἐπρήσσομεν· νῦν δὲ ὑμεῖς τε ἐς τὴν ἐκείνων ἐσβαλόντες γῆν ἄνευ ἡμέων, ἐπεκρατέετε Περσέων ὅσον χρόνον ὑμῖν ὁ θεὸς παρεδίδου καὶ ἐκεῖνοι, ἐπεὶ σφῶν αὐτὸς θεὸς ἐγείρει, τὴν ὁμοίην ὑμῖν ἀποδιδούσι· ἡμεῖς δὲ οὔτε τι τότε ἡδίκησαμεν τοὺς ἄνδρας τούτους οὐδὲν, οὔτε νῦν πρότεροι πειρησόμεθα ἀδικεῖν· ἢ μὲντοι ἐπὶ καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν ἡμετέραν ἄρξῃ τε ἀδικέων, καὶ ἡμεῖς οὐ πεισόμεθα³⁰². μέχρι δὲ τοῦτο ἴδωμεν³⁰³, μενόμεν παρ' ἡμῖν αὐτοῖσι· ἥκειν γὰρ δοκέομεν οὐκ ἐπ' ἡμέας Πέρσας, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τοὺς αἰτίους τῆς ἀδικίης γενομένους."

The pleonastic use of οὐ in this passage seems to arise from the desire of the speaker to remind the person he addresses that the main proposition is a negative one. Compare v. 94: ἀποδεικνύντες λόγῳ οὐδὲν μᾶλλον Αἰόλεσι μετεδὸν τῆς Ἰλιάδος χάρης ἢ οὐ σφί καὶ τοῖσι ἄλλοις κ.τ.λ., and vii. 16: φανῆναι δὲ οὐδὲν μᾶλλον μοι δεῖται ἔχοντι τὴν σὴν ἐσθλότητα ἢ οὐ καὶ τὴν ἐμὴν.

³⁰¹ τῆς πρόσθε δουλοσύνης. This expression refers to the subjugation of the Medes by the Scythians related in i. 103—105, and above, § 12. That inroad is made the ostensible cause of the expedition of Darius (§ 1, above).

³⁰² οὐ πεισόμεθα. The manuscript S has οὐκ οἰσόμεθα. The text has caused a good deal of difficulty to the commentators, and various conjectures have been proposed. But the expression seems exactly correspondent with the English idiom, "we will not be passive," and not to demand any change.

³⁰³ μέχρι . . . ἴδωμεν. This use of μέχρι in the sense of 'until' with a verb in the subjunctive is uncommon, but not unprecedented. SOPHOCLES has μέχρις μυχοῦς κίχουσι νερέϊον θεῶν.

(Aj. 571.)

XENOPHON (Hist. i. 1. 3) uses it with an indicative: μέχρις οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἀπέπλεονσαν.

³⁰⁴ [καὶ ὑπεξελαίνοντες]. These words appear to me to be an alternative reading for ὑπεξιόντες, which have crept from the margin into the text.

³⁰⁵ τὴν πόλιν ἐκ τῆς γῆς ἐκτρίβειν. This is apparently the notion of a Greek, who knew enough of the nature of Scythia to be aware that the plains were covered with grass instead of grain, but not enough of their extent to be aware how impossible such a course would be. The water too, in the part of the country Herodotus has in view, would scarcely be spring water, but derived either from natural pools or artificial tanks.

³⁰⁶ τῆς βασιλῆης. If this word means the "kingdom of Scythia," and τῶν βασιλῆων "the Royal Scythians," it would seem that in the mind of the narrator the tribes between these and the Ister did not offer any resistance. Perhaps they are not noticed because in a situation of inferiority to the Royal Tribe. (See § 20, above.)

³⁰⁷ Ἰδάνθυρσος. This person is represented as the nephew of Anacharis in a story for which one Timneas, who was probably a functionary holding a post analogous to that of a foreign consul at one of the Hellenic commercial settlements, is quoted as an authority. (See § 76 and note 214, above.) Possibly he may also be the source of the account of Darius's campaign which follows.

³⁰⁸ [ἵνα καὶ τούτους ἐκπολεμώσωσι]. It is not easy to conceive that these words can have stood in the text contemporaneously with the phrase ἀλλ' ἄκοντας ἐκπολεμῶσαι. I imagine that the sentence originally ended with them, but that afterwards the author substituted the words which follow them; and that their existence at present arises from the combination of two different editions.

³¹⁰ οἱ Πέρσαι ἐπιδιαβάντες ἐδίωκον. From the Ister to the Sea of Azof is reckoned by Herodotus to be a twenty days' journey εὐζώνων ἄνδρι, for whom the distance allowed is 200 stadia daily (§ 101). This is far more than could be performed by an army for twenty days together, under any circumstances of pressure. But the real distance is such, that according to RENNELL's estimate no less than fifty days would be requisite for an army to march even to the embouchure of the Tanais (p. 113). From the embouchure the country of the Sauromatæ extends for fifteen days northwards in Herodotus's view (§ 21). This would bring the borders of the Budini about to the region of Woronetz, from which Clarke reached the Sea of Azof in seventeen days. RENNELL (p. 90) believes the Oarus of the text to be the Wolga, which to a casual observer might appear in the higher part of its course to run towards the Sea of Azof.

On arriving at the desert, Darius halts and builds eight castles, of which the ruins remain.

The Scythians disappear, and Darius returns westward to Scythia.

In cases like these the degradation of the mound would produce at a distance the appearance of a fortification, which would easily suggest its connexion with any oral tradition of an invader. A similar cause doubtless originated the popular belief mentioned by CLARKE (vol. i. p. 358), as prevailing in southern Russia, "that Alexander the Great passed the Don, and built a city or a citadel upon the river, at a place called Zimlanskaja, 900 miles above the town of Tcherkaask." See note 380 on ii. 128.

In Scythia he encounters the two other bodies, who retreat before him through the Melanchlaeni, Androphagi, and ³¹⁵ Σύργις. The manuscripts S and V have Σύργης, but that is the only variation. Schäfer alters to "Τρύγίς, because obviously the same river is meant in § 58, where all the MSS have "Τρύγίς, except one, which has "Τρύγης. But this change obliterates one evidence of the original state of the text. See the note 266 on § 97, above.

³¹⁶ τῶν ἐτι ἐς ἐμὲ τὰ ἐρείπια σῶα ἦν. This passage has been cited to shew the extent of the author's travels. But the extremely indistinct character of the description precludes (in my opinion) the inference that he was an eye-witness himself. There is no mention of the material of which these buildings were made, whether stone, brick, wood, or earth. The same expression occurs above (i. 181) also under suspicious circumstances. See note 610. With regard to the ruins themselves, they may possibly have been the stone walls which in some cases surrounded the barrows that cover these plains. "In some cases," probably where the mound was composed of a lighter earth, "it has sunk and left hollow places encircled by a kind of fosse." (CLARKE, vol. i. p. 277.) The tomb of Halyattes was surrounded by a 'maceria' of large stones (i. 93). So was that of Atge in the plain of the Caicus (PAUSANIAS, viii. 4. 7); that of Ἄργυτος in Arcadia (Id. viii. 16. 3); and others. In cases like these the degradation of the mound would produce at a distance the appearance of a fortification, which would easily suggest its connexion with any oral tradition of an invader. A similar cause doubtless originated the popular belief mentioned by CLARKE (vol. i. p. 358), as prevailing in southern Russia, "that Alexander the Great passed the Don, and built a city or a citadel upon the river, at a place called Zimlanskaja, 900 miles above the town of Tcherkaask." See note 380 on ii. 128.

³¹⁷ καὶ πρὸς ἐσπέρην σφέας φεύγειν. There is no reason given by the author why Darius should have supposed that the Scythians had gone westwards. But apparently the narrator supposes him on the western bank of the Oarus, with the desert beyond him northwards. Nothing however can be more vague than the topography.

³¹⁸ ἀνίει. Gaisford prints ἀνίει, which most of the MSS have. But S and V have the common form, as is the case with all in § 152. All but one have it in ii. 113, and that one has ἀνίει. See the note on ix. 13, ἀνίει.

Neuri, to the confines of the Agathyrsi.

The Agathyrsi show a bold front, and the Scythians pass from the Neuri into their own land.

³¹⁹ ὑπήγον ἐπὶ τὴν Νευρίδα . . . τούτων. This clause is wanting in S, apparently from the oversight of the copyist.

³²⁰ οὐκέτι ἀπείπαντας. A good deal of difficulty arises out of these words if ἀπειρεῖν is to be taken in the sense of ἀπαγορεύειν (as it is in iii. 153), for the next sentence seems to prove that the Agathyrsi did not change their mind, and that therefore the Scythians passed from Neuri into their own country. Accordingly it has been proposed to read ἀπείπαντας οὐκέτι ἀπικνέοντο. But a good sense will be elicited from the text as it stands by taking ἀπειρεῖν in a sense which is not unusual in other authors, "to give in" or "succumb." The Melanchlaeni, Androphagi, and Neuri had all professed their intention of resisting the invader if he came against them (above, § 119). But when the brunt arrived, they, ἐπιλαθόμενοι τῆς ἀπειλῆς (an expression which refers to their threatened resistance to the Persians), succumbed and fled northwards. Then the Scythians and Persians reached the Agathyrsi, and found no longer a poltroon people to deal with. Accordingly, out of Neuri the former retreated before the Persians into their own land. The phrase οὐκέτι ἀπείπαντας has a special reference to the preceding expression ἐπιλαθόμενοι τῆς ἀπειλῆς. Translate: "And the Scythians reached indeed the Agathyrsi, but there was an end of giving in, and they on their side out of the Neuri territory led the Persians on into their own."

³²¹ Ἰδάνθυρσον. See the note 215 on § 76.

³²² ἀξιώχρεως. This is the reading of the majority of the MSS. Gaisford, with two, gives the Ionic form ἀξιώχρεος.

²²⁵ Ἰστίην. See § 68.

²²⁶ ἢ ἀπὸ Σκυθέων ῥῆσις. The ordinary salutation of civility among the Greeks was χαίρει or χαίρειν κελεύω. The expression κλαλεῖ or οἰμῶς in the place of it would be considered as the pitch of ruffianly ill-breeding,—the behaviour of a Scythian, to whom the refined Greeks attributed every description of coarseness of which they had any account. (See i. 201 and 216, and note 83, above.) Hence it was proverbially described as ἢ ἀπὸ Σκυθέων ῥῆσις. A humorous delineation of barbarian manners (somewhat in the same spirit as the representation of those of England in a French vaudeville) is given by ARISTOPHANES in the Birds (vv. 1566, seqq.). The unhappy Triballus, the barbarian god, who is united with Poseidon and Heracles in the legation to Nephelococcygia, does every thing which can display a clownish ignorance of social conventionalities. He comes on the stage with his mantle thrown over the wrong shoulder,—a proceeding which would produce nearly the same sense of absurdity in an Athenian audience as the reversal of the nether garments might in a modern. In the course of the transactions which follow, and in which every advantage is taken of his ignorance of the Greek language, among other 'hits' he is asked the question: ὁ Τριβαλλός, οἰμῶς εἰν δοκεῖ σοι; to which insulting question he cheerfully replies in the affirmative. Bias of Priene, although no less desirous than Idanthyrus in the text to exhibit his contempt for the threats of his enemy Halyattes, avoided the Σκυθῶν ῥῆσις by a periphrasis: ἐγὼ δὲ Ἄλυδτην κελεύω κρόμμυα ἐσθλῆν. ³²⁷ σίτα ἀναιρεομένοισι, "while cutting forage." Some difficulty has been occasioned by this phrase being confounded with σίτην ἀρεῖσθαι, which is used by the author (iii. 26; vii. 120) for taking food as at a meal time. σίτα is used in the general sense of edibles (v. 34).

³²⁸ ὡς καὶ πρότερόν μοι δεδήλωται. See above, § 28. What Herodotus says however is not exactly that the country does not produce ass or mule, but that they will not stand the winter. As the Hyperboreans were said to sacrifice asses to Apollo (PINDAR, Pyth. x. 55), this reason can hardly be the real one for their absence. A better one may be found in the fact of the unbounded pasturage of the Scythian plains, which afforded ample supplies for the nobler and more useful animal,—the horse.

³²⁹ ὕβριζοντες, "by braying." There seems little reason to suppose that here the animals are considered as under the influence of sexual desire, and still less that, if so, Herodotus has in his eye the expression of Pindar in the passage just quoted: γελᾷ θ' ὄρων ὄβριον ὀρθῶς κνωδῶλον. The animals in that passage are represented as being sacrificed.

³³⁰ ταῦτα μὲν νυν ἐπὶ σμικρὸν τι ἐφέροντο τοῦ πολέμου. This phrase is a very difficult one, but the sense seems to be, "These results now to a certain small extent they achieved in the war." The expression οὐδὲν φέρειν is used in vii. 211 for "to achieve no advantage." The only pretence to success the Persians had was, that the Scythians were baffled by their infantry; but this appears to have always been the case. On the other hand their cavalry was always driven in by the ancestors of the Cossacks. Each side therefore had some advantages, on a very small scale, to boast of.

³³¹ τῶν πάντων ἐπιδευέες ἔοντες. Whatever may be the degree of credit to be attached to Herodotus's account of the Scythian campaign, it seems (in spite of the Behistun Inscription) to have been a prevalent notion that Darius was, in some Scythian expedition, reduced to great straits. In Aturia there was a village called Γανγάνηλα (which word signified in Greek Καμήλιον οἶκος), where the battle of Arbela was really fought. It was said to have been so named by Darius; and its revenue appropriated to the support of the Camel which did the best service in the transport of his baggage and provisions during the march διὰ τῆς ἐρήμου Σκυθίας. (STRABO, xvi. c. 1, p. 334.) This however is perhaps a later Greek story to account for the name.

³³² καὶ μῦν. ATHENÆUS, in quoting this story, omits all mention of 'the mouse' as one of the presents, and makes only one arrow to be sent (viii. p. 334). The story, as told by PNEUMOTIDES (Clemens Alexandrinus, Stromm. v. § 45), made the presents a mouse, a frog, a bird, an arrow, and a plough, and the parties who interpreted the meaning favourably and unfavourably to have been respectively Orontopages and Xiphodres. (See note 494 on ii. 160.) He also called the Scythian king Idanthures instead of Idanthyrus. The animal called a mouse was probably that which goes by the local name of suslic, and abounds throughout the whole of the steppes of southern Russia, but especially in the neighbourhood of the Don. It is about the size of a small weasel, and of a yellow colour, and it is remarkable for the incredible rapidity with which it burrows, sinking first of all a small cylindrical hole perpendicularly to the depth of three feet, and from the bottom of this running out a level, rather in an ascending direction to avoid the water. At the extremity it boards corn and roots for winter consumption. (CLARKE, i. p. 330.)

³³³ καὶ βάτραχον. EUSTATHIUS gives the form βάθρακος among the peculiarities of Herodotus's idiom. But all the MSS have the common form. Nevertheless the Villosion Scholiast on Iliad iv. 243 confirms the statement of Eustathius, and adds that Herodotus says μονόκυθρον instead of μονόχυτρον. Neither of these words are found in the existing codices. See notes 323 and 332 on Book i.

³³⁴ εἰκάζων. The construction is the same as if instead of saying Δαρείου ἡ γνώμη ἦν, the author had put its equivalent Δαρειὸς ἐνόμιζε.

³³⁵ ὄρνις δὲ μάλιστα ἔοικε ἵππῳ, i. e. as both the one and the other symbolize "swiftness," the characteristic of the Scythians. The perception of this equivalence would be more likely in a Persian; as the birdlike tail and wings with which the figure of Ormuzd is invested in the Behistun Sculptures, seem to have this meaning; and Herodotus asserts that in the sacrifice of the horse to the Sun, the Massagetæ rested upon the same notion (i. 216). See the note on that passage, and compare ISAIAH xxx. 17.

³³⁶ συνεστήκει ταύτῃ τῇ γνώμῃ ἡ Γωβρύεω, “with this opinion that of Gobryas was at direct issue.” See the note on vii. 142. That Gobryas should appear in this confidential relation to Darius is quite in accordance with the genuine Persian traditions. See the notes 199 and 200 on iii. 70.

³³⁷ ἡ ταχθεῖσα πρότερον παρὰ τὴν Μαίητιν λίμνην φρουρέειν. See § 120. But from the description in § 122 it would seem that this division had been driven by the Persians in their march from the Ister to the Oarus, and had not disappeared from before them until the edge of the desert was reached, and Darius began to build his forts (§ 124). This would render it perfectly impossible for it to reach the Ister within the sixty days from Darius's transit (see note 310 on § 122), which is certainly implied in this section.

³³⁹ πυθόμενος δὲ σφεας τὸν λαγὸν διώκοντας, “and learning respecting them that they were pursuing the hare.”

³⁴⁰ ἄρα. This word indicates a tacit conclusion upon some one of the circumstances related. To whom did Darius address his remark? Why, no doubt, to the same persons to whom he was accustomed to say the other things which are reported of him. This thought in the mind of the narrator shows itself by the

πρὸς τοῦσπερ ἑώθεε καὶ τὰ ἄλλα λέγειν “οὔτοι ἄνδρες ἡμέων πολλὸν καταφρονέουσιν· καί μοι νῦν φαίνεται Γωβρύης εἶπαι περὶ τῶν Σκυθικῶν δώρων ὀρθῶς. ὥς ὢν οὕτως ἤδη δοκεόντων καὶ αὐτῷ μοι ἔχειν, βουλῆς ἀγαθῆς δεῖ ὅπως ἀσφαλῶς ἢ κομιδῇ ἡμῖν ἔσται τὸ ὀπίσω.” πρὸς ταῦτα Γωβρύης εἶπε “ὦ βασιλεῦ, ἐγὼ and Gobryas suggests a stratagem for securing their retreat, σχεδὸν μὲν καὶ λόγῳ ἡπιστάμην τούτων τῶν ἀνδρῶν τὴν ἀπορίην³⁴¹, ἐλθὼν δὲ μᾶλλον ἐξέμαθον, ὁρέων αὐτοὺς ἐμπαίζοντας ἡμῖν. νῦν ὢν μοι δοκεῖ, ἐπὶν τάχιστα νῦξ ἐπέλθῃ, ἐκκαύσαντες τὰ πυρὰ ὥς καὶ ἄλλοτε ἑώθαμεν ποιεῖν, τῶν στρατιωτέων τοὺς ἀσθενεστάτους ἐς τὰς ταλαιπωρίας ἐξαπατήσαντας καὶ τοὺς ὄνους πάντας καταδήσαντας, ἀπαλλάσσεσθαι πρὶν ἢ καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν Ἴστρον ἰθῦσαι Σκύθας λύσοντας τὴν γέφυραν, ἢ καὶ τι Ἴωσι δόξαι τὸ ἡμέας οἶόν τε ἔσται ἐξεργάσασθαι³⁴².” Γωβρύης μὲν ταῦτα συν- 135 εβούλευε· μετὰ δὲ, νῦξ τε ἐγένετο καὶ Δαρεῖος ἐχράτο τῇ γνώμῃ ταύτῃ³⁴³. τοὺς μὲν καματηροὺς τῶν ἀνδρῶν καὶ τῶν ἦν ἐλάχιστος ἀπολλυμένων λόγος, καὶ τοὺς ὄνους πάντας καταδήσας, κατέλιπε αὐτοῦ ταύτῃ³⁴⁴ ἐν τῷ στρατοπέδῳ. κατέλιπε δὲ τοὺς τε ὄνους καὶ τοὺς ἀσθενεῖς τῆς στρατιῆς τῶνδε εἵνεκεν ἵνα οἱ μὲν ὄνοι βοὴν παρέχωνται· οἱ δὲ ἄνθρωποι ἀσθενεῖς μὲν εἵνεκεν κατελίποντο, προφάσιος δὲ τῆσδε· δηλαδὴ αὐτὸς μὲν σὺν τῷ καθαρῷ τοῦ στρατοῦ³⁴⁵ ἐπιθήσεσθαι μέλλοι τοῖσι Σκύθησι, οὔτοι δὲ τὸ στρατό- πεδον τοῦτον τὸν χρόνον ῥυοῖατο³⁴⁶. ταῦτα τοῖσι ὑπολειπομένοισι ὑποθέμενος ὁ Δαρεῖος καὶ πυρὰ ἐκκαύσας, τὴν ταχίστην ἐπέειπετο ἐπὶ τὸν Ἴστρον· οἱ δὲ ὄνοι ἐρημωθέντες τοῦ ὁμίλου, οὕτω μὲν δὴ interposition of the particle, thereby producing a shade of meaning too delicate to be expressed directly by a translation. It will be observed that commonly the interlocutor is distinctly named.

³⁴² ἢ καὶ τι Ἴωσι δόξαι τὸ ἡμέας οἶόν τε ἔσται ἐξεργάσασθαι. The cautiousness of the speaker, although distinctly expressing his apprehensions, not to utter words of ill-omen, is to be remarked.

³⁴³ νῦξ τε ἐγένετο καὶ Δαρεῖος ἐχράτο τῇ γνώμῃ ταύτῃ. “as night set in, Darius immediately carried this plan out.” See note 472 on § 181, below.

³⁴⁵ σὺν τῷ καθαρῷ τοῦ στρατοῦ, “with the effective part of the army.” In i. 211 the same thing is expressed by ὁ καθαρὸς στρατός.

³⁴⁷ ἔσαν τῆς φωνῆς. The genitive case is not to be taken with μᾶλλον, but after the pronoun τι understood. The idea expressed by the use of the genitive is that of a store of noise laid up within the animal, a portion of which is emitted at each time the creature brays.

³⁴⁸ καὶ ἡ μία. This is the division of Scopasis, which (in § 133) is represented as having marched to the Ister, and which now therefore must have returned and reunited itself with the other two divisions.

³⁴⁹ παραστησόμεθα. It is not easy to reconcile this use of the word with the one in iii. 155, παρίστασθαι, or παριστάναι ἑαυτοὺς being the appropriate phrase for “yielding” or “submitting.” Perhaps the true solution of the difficulty is that the phrase is here used by the Scythians in bitter irony, with a reference to the claim of Darius to their allegiance (§ 126, δεσπότη τῷ σὺ δῶρα φέρων). Translate: “And for that former master of yours, we will render ourselves up to him in such shrewd sort, that against no man any where, in time to come, shall be march in person.”

³⁵⁰ στρατηγέοντος. See note 365 on § 141.

³⁵¹ Χερσονησιτῶν. One MS (S) has Χερσονησίων, which is perhaps the true reading. STEPHANUS BYZANTINUS, sub v., says that the inhabitants of this town were called Χερσονήσιοι,—the original derivation of the word being apparently lost sight of, and the analogy afforded by the names of other towns followed.

³⁵² ἐλευθεροῦν Ἴωνήν. Miltiades was by ancestral traditions attached to the Lydian dynasty. (See vi. 37.) He was therefore naturally an enemy of that by which it had been overthrown. Besides this, he was much more at the mercy of the Scythians (see vi. 40) than was the case with the Ionians.

³³³ ἔσται. This is the reading of all the MSS, but the irregularity of the construction is so great and so gratuitous, that I should almost be disposed to adopt the conjectural emendation of Bekker, ἴσασθαι.

³³⁴ ἦσαν δὲ οὗτοι. This list is at first sight a remarkable one when compared with the description of the force in general terms as "the Ionians," for it appears from it that the Hellespontine dynasts were not only a great majority numerically, but that one of them, Miltiades, was the στρατηγὸς of the fleet (§ 137). But the influence of Histæus shows that Miltiades's position was more due to his professional skill than to his political weight; and though there are several Hellespontine dynasts named, Histæus's vote probably outweighed all of them put together, if, as will appear probable, he represented all the Ionian cities not named in the list. That the Ionian contingent was very greatly superior to all the rest cannot be doubted, from the infinitely greater commercial importance of the towns. And hence it is not difficult to understand why the aggregate force should be called "the Ionian." See note on vi. 8, αἵται μὲν Ἴωνες ἦσαν.

If too the list be compared with that of the Ionian and Æolian cities given above (i. 142 and 149), there are some remarkable points to be noted. Out of the Ionian cities eight remain unnoticed. Two of them are on the Carian coast, Myus and Priene. From the size and position of these it seems reasonable to suppose that they were in a state of dependence on the tyrant of Miletus, held by him as a fief of the Persian king, Miletus being one of the cities which very early entered into an alliance with Cyrus (ἦσαν ἐν σκέπῃ τοῦ φόβου ὄρκιον ποιησάμενοι, i. 143. See the notes on i. 141 and vi. 8). Of Teos Herodotus relates, that the inhabitants deserted their city and went en masse to Abdæra, leaving their empty walls to the conqueror (i. 168). But there remain five cities, mostly of great importance, the fortunes of which can only be gathered from the scanty notice in i. 169. Is it to be supposed that they were held as fiefs by some of the four tyrants mentioned, and that the hint of Histæus bore upon this circumstance? Of the four Ionian cities which are named, Miletus, and Chios its close ally (see note 67 on i. 19), appear to have made terms with the Persian king without any hostility being exhibited. The latter obtained a footing on the main in return for the extradition of a Persian refugee (i. 160). The tyrant of Samos too was a creature of Persia (iii. 144—9); and for Phocæa, see the note 367, below.

The mention of Cuma alone among the Æolian cities goes to the same point. With the exception of Smyrna (which perhaps was considered as Ionian, and placed in the same category with Ephesus, Colophon, Lebedus, Clazomenæ, and Erythræ, by the Persians), there is no continental Æolian town of any importance in the list given i. 149. The tyrant of Cuma may therefore very reasonably be supposed to have had a jurisdiction over all of them. And that something was done to earn such a trust, seems extremely likely from the story of the extradition of Pactyas (i. 160). Parties were divided on that subject. It was commanded by an oracle; and in spite of the commentary on this which Aristodicus elicited, the Cumæans, although they did not give up the refugee, sent him where he was given up. As for the Æolian islanders, they—from whatever cause—were not afraid of Cyrus. See i. 161.

³³⁷ Λαοδάμας Φωκαεὺς. It must be supposed that after the return of “above half of the population” to Phocæa (as described in i. 164. 5), the town would be held in the strictest control by the Persians. A military despotism would be the only possible government for a population which had just before massacred the garrison which occupied the city. No doubt that Laodamas was in the position of an ἐπίτροπος to the great Persian officer who commanded in chief the army which occupied Asia Minor. See the notes on iii. 127 and 141. The same may be said of the Samian chief, who governed a population (probably of a mixed character) which had been brought to colonize Samos after the extermination of all the inhabitants a very short time before (iii. 149).

³³⁸ Ἀρισταγόρης. The son of Heracles. See v. 37.

³³⁹ πρὸς ταῦτα. The majority of the MSS which Gaisford follows have πρὸς ταῦτα, i.e. τῇ Ἰστιαίου γνώμῃ. But S and V have πρὸς ταῦτα, “under these circumstances,” which appears preferable.

³⁴⁰ ἵνα καὶ ποίειν τι δοκέωσι . . . καὶ οἱ Σκύθαι μὴ πειρώατο. The change of moods arises from the one act being the direct and natural result, the other only a possible and distant one. See the note 40 on i. 9. It was not certain that the Scythians would wish to cross the river by main force, but the operation of the Ionians was to prevent them if they should.

³⁴¹ καὶ βουλόμενοι. These words are omitted in F. It seems probable that βουλόμενοι was an alternative reading for βιόμενοι, and thus crept from the margin into the text.

³⁴² τὰ ἀπ' ὑμέων ἡμῖν χρηστῶς δοῦνται, κ.τ.λ., “your part of the matter is set a-going in a spirit of kindness to us, and our part of it is performing in a way to play into your hands.” δοῦν is “to put a person in the way” to a thing. Thus ÆSCHYLUS (Agam. 184) says, τὸν φρονεῖν βροτοὺς δόσαντα, and (Prom. 497) δυσ-τέκμαρτον εἰς τέχην ἔδωκε θεοποιός.

γὰρ ὁρᾶτε, καὶ λύομεν τὸν πόρον καὶ προθυμίην πᾶσαν ἔχομεν, θέλοντες εἶναι ἐλεύθεροι· ἐν ᾧ δὲ ἡμέες τάδε λύομεν, ὑμέας καιρὸς ἐστὶ διλῆσθαι ἐκείνους, εὐρόντας δὲ, ὑπὲρ τε ἡμέων καὶ ὑμέων αὐτῶν τίσασθαι οὕτως ὥς κείνους πρέπει.”

³⁶³ τὰς νομάς τῶν ἵππων τὰς ταύτῃ διαφθείραντες καὶ τὰ ὕδατα συγχώσαντες. See the note 305 on § 120.

³⁶⁴ ἀντιπολεμίους. Here two manuscripts (S and V) have the reading ἀντιπολέμους. In vii. 236 all have that reading, and so they have in viii. 68. On the other hand in § 134, above, only one (S) has the reading ἀντιπολέμων, the others all giving ἀντιπολεμίων. So impossible is any decision as to the Herodotean usage of peculiar forms.

³⁶⁵ καλέειν Ἰστιαῖον Μιλήσιον. The prominent place which is assigned to the Ionians, and among them to Histieus, and the great importance of Miletus at the time, combined with the circumstance that Miletus alone of all the Asiatic Greeks seems from the very beginning to have entered into an alliance with the Persian power, make it rather a remarkable circumstance that Miltiades should be represented as the στρατηγὸς of the united fleet, he not being even an Ionian. One is inclined to think that possibly this feature of the story, and also that in which he appears to such advantage as a Greek patriot (§ 137) may have been enhanced by the family traditions of his descendants in Athens. His position was perhaps rather that of the chief navigator, as he might easily be familiar with the coast of the Euxine and the dominant winds and currents. (See note 354, above.)

³⁶⁶ ἀπέριπται. The same expression is used i. 153 : ταῦτα ἐς τοὺς πάντας Ἕλληνας ἐπέρριψε ὁ Κύρος τὰ ἔπεα, vii. 13 : ἀεικρότερα ἀπερρίψαι ἔπεα, and viii. 92 : ταῦτα ἀπέριψε ἐς Θεμιστοκλέα. In all these cases it is applied to contemptuous language.

³⁶⁷ Μεγάβαζον. EUSTATHIUS relates the story which presently follows of a Megabazus. But it must not be too hastily assumed that the names are convertible, or that the Persian mentioned here and in v. 10. 12. 24, &c., is the same with the Megabazus selected by Gobryas to assist in the conspiracy against the Magian (iii. 70). For with regard to the story, it is told by PLUTARCH (Apophth. Reg. p. 173) to the credit neither of Megabazus nor Megabyzus, but of Zopyrus. And if the authority Herodotus is here following took the two names to represent the same person, it is strange that he should be introduced here by a description, but one which has no reference to the conspiracy.

³⁶⁸ εἶπας τότε τὸ ἔπος. This mos was in later times attributed to the Delphic oracle. See notes 116 on i. 32 ; 519 on i. 155 ; and 494 on ii. 160.

³⁶⁹ οὐ γὰρ ἂν τοῦ καλλίωνος παρείντος κτίζων χώραν, κ.τ.λ. These words are not to be considered as a part of the saying of Megabazus, but as a commentary of the narrator, suggesting the train of thought which led Megabazus to say what he did.

³⁷⁰ παίδων παῖδες. This expression shows that in the arrangement of the local legends with a view to their combination in one body, the arrival of the Lemnian fugitives at Taygetum was necessarily placed two generations after the Argonautic expedition.

³⁷¹ τῶν ἐκ Βραυρῶνος ληϊσαμένων τὰς Ἀθηναίων γυναικας. This circumstance is described at greater length (vi. 138), where the Pelasgians are asserted to be the same that were shortly before settled on the flanks of Mount Hymettus.

The island Theras was then called Calliste, and held by Phœnicians, who had been left there by Cadmus ³⁷³ ἔστελλε, "was fitting out." The full expression ἔστελλε τὴν στρατὴν is used above (iii. 141), and στέλλειν στρατὸν in EURIPIDES (Iphig. Am. 661). In both cases are denoted the preparations made immediately before putting an army in motion.

³⁷⁴ τῆς μητρὸς ἀδελφεὸς τοῖσι Ἀριστοδήμου παισὶ. This is a genuine Lacedæmonian tradition, and so is the genealogy of Theras. (See vi. 52.) His sister's name was Argeia. In their account of the conquest of Sparta by Aristodemus himself, and not by his children, the Lacedæmonians differed from "all the poetical accounts."

³⁷⁵ ἐπιτροπαίην εἶχε τὴν βασιλιήν, "held the regal office as commissioner." See note 392 on iii. 142.

³⁷⁶ Μεμβλιάρεω. S has Μεβλάρεω and ἑνδρες Φοίνικες.

³⁷⁷ εἶτε καὶ ἄλλως ἠθέλησε ποιῆσαι τοῦτο. A sufficient reason for a Phœnician settlement in Thera would be the extraordinary qualities of the murex found on the Peloponnesian, especially the Læconian, coast. (PLINY, N. H. ix. 36.)

The extent to which this traffic prevailed formerly is evinced by the circumstance, that at Hermione ΣΙΣΤΕΟΡΦ "had the good fortune to stumble over a vast heap of these shells, whose fish or animals had been employed for this purpose" (op. Walpole's Turkey, i. p. 285). Some of these were identified as the Murex Truncatus of Linnæus. It seems not unlikely that the settlement alluded to was in fact for the purpose of dyeing, and that a faint tradition of this remains in the name Poecilas, the father of Membliaras, and in the profession of Corobius (§ 151). Possibly to the vicinity of this settlement the Lacedæmonians owed some of the brilliant accoutrements for their troops to which XENOPHON (Agésilas, c. 2. 8) attributes so striking an effect; for the story told of the distinguished Spartan at the smithy (ἐν θάμνατι ἦν ὁρᾶν τὸ ποιούμενον, i. 68), does not give a high idea of Lacedæmonian armourers; and still less can we suppose the art of dyeing practised where there were no μέτοικοι, and where the free population held every thing but war and hunting in supreme contempt.

³⁷⁸ προσχόντι δὲ εἶπε δὴ οἱ ἡ χώρα ἤρεσε εἶπε καὶ ἄλλως ἠθέλησε ποιῆσαι τοῦτο καταλείπει γὰρ, κ.τ.λ. The irregularity of this construction has caused a good deal of comment; and Matthew has attempted to explain it as if in its normal form it would have been προσχὼν δὲ, εἶπε δὴ οἱ . . . ποιῆσαι τοῦτο, καταλείπει ἐν τῇ νήσῳ, κ.τ.λ., and as if προσχὼν became προσχόντι by the "attraction" of the following dative case οἱ. But against this interpretation it is enough to say that it implies that Cadmus's wish to leave a settlement, 'on other grounds' than the attractive nature of the place, was first formed after he got to Thera. But as the sentence stands, the clause εἶπε καὶ ἄλλως ἠθέλησε ποιῆσαι τοῦτο is entirely disengaged from the operation of the word προσχόντι, and expresses generally a wish entertained by Cadmus to found a settlement in Thera, without any limitation whatever of the time when the wish was formed.
The real difficulty in the sentence consists in the coupling of the clauses expressing the alternative hypotheses by εἶπε—εἶπε instead of ἢ—ἢ, but even this may be justified by the consideration that these particles are better calculated to suggest the idea that the reasons assigned are purely hypothetical, resting wholly on the facts that the island was very beautiful, and that Cadmus did leave a settlement there.

³⁷⁹ Μεμβλιάρων. S has the form Μεβριάρων, which is the one given by PINDAR (Pyth. iv. 88).

³⁸⁰ Παρωρεάτας καὶ Καύκωνας, τούτους δ' ἐξελάσαντες. In the ethnographical outline given by the author in viii. 73, the descendants of these hybrid Lemnians are called Paroreatae. The meaning here probably is that they expelled the then existing population of the Parorea. (See STEPHANUS BYZANTINUS, sub v.) The site of the Caucones in Peloponnese appears to have been a matter of dispute with ancient chorographers; but ARISTO-TLE considered that the most distinct traces of them were in the direction of Dyme, about Buprasia and "hollow" Elis (ap. Strab. viii. 3, p. 157). It is clear that they were either identical or had a very close affinity with the aboriginal race which retained possession of Arcadia.

³⁸¹ ἐξ μοίρας διεῖλον. See the note 435 on ii. 147.

³⁸² Ἐπιον, Νούδιον. One MS (S) has Ἐπειον, Νούθειον.

³⁸³ οὐ γὰρ ἔφη. This expression is equivalent to ἐς οὐκ ἔφη, or rather the particle γὰρ attaches the notion of cau-

Theras leaves his son in Sparta, from whom the Ægidae are descended.

ἔφη αὐτὸν καταλείψειν διὲν ἐν λύκοισιν ἐπὶ τοῦ ἔπεος τούτου οὖνομα τῷ νεηίσκῳ τούτῳ Ὀϊόλυκος ἐγένετο· καὶ κως τὸ οὖνομα τοῦτο ἐπεκράτησε. salinity to the clause which it connects, and may be indifferently rendered by the English "for" or "since," or any other causative particle. Translate: "His son too, as he declined to sail with him, 'Then,' the father said, 'he would leave him behind, a sheep among wolves.'" Similarly below, "And as with the men of this tribe, their children did not live to grow up, they, in pursuance of an oracle, established a temple for the Erinyes of Læus and Œdipodæ."

³⁴⁴ οὐ γὰρ ὑπέμειναν τὰ τέκνα. This calamity was conceived to have come upon the family as the result of the curse uttered by Theras under the feeling of deep irritation at the undutiful conduct of his child. The original idea of the Erinyes is the wrath of a person who has suffered deep wrong and gives vent to his feeling. The passion was regarded as becoming a separate existence, an evil demon (Ἄρα, Ἄττη, Νέμεσις, or Ἐρινύς) pursuing the offending party as an avenging spirit. The subject is admirably developed by MÜLLER, Preface to the Eumenides of Æschylus. This particular story is apparently a tradition connected with the Œdipus worship at Sparta and Thera.

³⁴⁵ τὸ αὐτὸ τοῦτο καὶ ἐν Θήρῃ τοῖσι ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνδρῶν τούτων γεγούσι. This sentence is incomplete as it stands, and attempts have been made to conjecture the word requisite to complete it. Reiske and Schweighäuser acquiesce in the violent measure of interposing συνέβη after τοῦτο, from which the sense would result that in Thera the whole proceeding which had taken place at Lacedæmon was repeated, —the death of the children, the founding of the temple, and the curse of the evil. I cannot think that so curious a parallel would be noticed so obscurely. For who are the persons described by the words τοῖσι ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνδρῶν τούτων γεγούσι, in Thera? They ought to be the descendants of Ægidae; but there is no notice whatever of any of these going to Thera. On the contrary, they (in the person of their ancestor) stay at Sparta, and bring a curse upon themselves for doing so.

If any verb is to be supplied, I should conjecture ἦν after Θήρῃ, which, while the MSS were uncial, might easily be omitted by a transcriber. But I really believe the sentence to be merely a marginal note expressed with the slovenliness as well as the ellipse which in such a case may be expected; and the meaning of the writer to have been that 'this same peculiarity (of the children not living to grow up) was observable at Thera among the descendants of these Minyæans.' This is a very conceivable thing. A small number of Lemnians (δῆλιους τινάς) separated from those about them by peculiar religious rites, and probably following from father to son the same occupation under the tutelary care of Hephestus, would be likely to marry only among one another, and, as the natural result, have unhealthy children.

³⁴⁶ τὸ δὲ ἀπὸ τούτου μῦνοι Θηραῖοι ὥδε γενέσθαι λέγουσι. It must not be assumed because Herodotus says this, that he got the account direct from the Theraeans. What he states is that it is the genuine Theraean account of the case, as contradicting that from the Lacedæmonian. But it does not at all follow that he did not derive it from another quarter, as for instance, such a one as a Samian merchant habitually trading with

The Delphian oracle orders Grinnus of Thera, in whose company was Battus, a Minyean, to found a colony in Libya, then unknown.

The order is neglected, and Thera

151 is without rain for seven years. The Theraeans send to Crete to inquire if any one knows of Libya, and are directed to it by Corobius, a purple merchant.

Thera. See note 338 on i. 95, and note 396, below.

³²⁷ Εὐθυμίδης. This is the reading of all the MSS but one (S), which has Εὐθυμίδης. Gaisford (following others) has adopted the reading Εὐθυμίδης from PINDAR (Pyth. iv. 465). But nothing can be more unsatisfactory than such a proceeding as this. It effectually masks the evidence yet remaining of the differences which existed in the several local accounts, and thus tends to confirm that erroneous opinion of their nature which in its turn suggests similar arbitrary changes. Herodotus is following a Theraean tradition, as he himself says; Pindar, in all probability, a Cyrenian one.

³²⁸ οὔτε Λιβύην εἰδότες δκου γῆς εἴη. Herodotus here seems to be following an authority very different from the one he rests on in ii. 50, where see note 147.

³²⁹ οὐκ ἔβη τὴν Θήρην. The ellipse is of ὁ θεός or ὁ Ζεὺς (see ii. 13; iii. 124. 5), and the accusative Θήρην is governed by the transitive verb βω, “to wet with rain,” of which the passive form appears above, § 50, and elsewhere.

³³⁰ πέμπουσι εἰς Κρήτην ἀγγέλους. The celebrity of the Cretans as bold navigators in early times gave rise to the proverb, Κρῆς ἄγροι· τὴν θάλατταν, applied to persons who pretended to simplicity being in reality remarkable for craft. But besides their general character, the position of Crete is such, that of all the Greeks they would necessarily become first acquainted with Libya. In the time of Strabo there were several direct lines of transit: one from Apollonias, the port of Cyrene, to the westernmost point of Crete (κρυὸς μέσσω), which was a run of 1000 stades with a s. by w. wind (Leuconotus); another from Chersonesus in Africa to Cyclus in Crete, 1500 stades with a s. wind; a third from Megas Limen to Chersonesus in Crete, 3000 stades. (STRABO, xvii. c. 3, pp. 497-9.) Crete is made by Strabo to be only a run of 700 stades from Thera (x. p. 386).

³³¹ ἐς Ἰτανὸν πόλιν. This city was perhaps a Phoenician settlement originally. Its eponymous founder was said to be a Phoenician. (STRAB. BYZ., xiv. v.)

³³² ἀνδρὶ πορφυρεῖ, “a merchant in purple dye.” See the note 377 on § 147.

σαντες ἴγουν ἐς Θήρην ἐκ δὲ Θήρης ἔπλεον κατάσκοποι ἄνδρες, τὰ πρῶτα οὐ πολλοὶ, κατηρησαμένου δὲ τοῦ Κορωβίου ἐς τὴν νῆσον ταύτην δὴ τὴν Πλατέαν, τὸν μὲν Κορώβιον λείπουσι σιτία καταλιπόντες ὅσων δὴ μηνῶν³⁹³, αὐτοὶ δὲ ἔπλεον τὴν ταχίστην ἀπαργελεύοντες Θηραίοισι περὶ τῆς νήσου. Ἀποδημούντων δὲ τούτων πλέω χρόνον τοῦ συγκειμένου, τὸν Κορώβιον ἐπέλεπε τὰ πάντα· μετὰ δὲ, νηὺς Σαμὴ τῆς ναύκληρος ἦν Κωλαῖος, πλέουσα ἐπ' Αἰγύπτου ἀπηνηέχθη ἐς τὴν Πλατέαν ταύτην· πυθόμενοι δὲ οἱ Σάμιοι παρὰ τοῦ Κορωβίου τὸν πάντα λόγον, σιτία οἱ ἐνιαυτοῦ καταλείπουσι³⁹⁴. αὐτοὶ δὲ ἀναχθέντες ἐκ τῆς νήσου καὶ γλιχόμενοι Αἰγύπτου ἔπλεον ἀποφερόμενοι³⁹⁵ ἀπηλιώτῃ ἀνέμῳ, καὶ, οὐ γὰρ ἀνίει^a τὸ πνεῦμα, Ἡρακλέας στήλας διεκπερήσαντες ἀπίκοντο ἐς Ταρτησὸν, θελή πομπῇ χρεώμενοι. τὸ δὲ ἐμπόριον τοῦτο ἦν ἀκήρατον³⁹⁶ τοῦτον τὸν χρόνον ὥστε ἀπονοστήσαντες οὗτοι ὅπισα, μέγιστα δὴ Ἑλλήνων πάντων τῶν ἡμεῖς ἀτρεκλήν ἴδμεν ἐκ φορτίων ἐκέρδησαν, μετὰ γε Σώστρατον τὸν Λαοδάμαντος, Αἰγυινήτῃ τοῦτ' γὰρ οὐκ οὐδ' ἔστι ἐρίσαι ἄλλον. οἱ δὲ Σάμιοι τὴν δεκάτην τῶν ἐπικερδίων ἐξελόντες ἕξ τάλαντα, ἐποίησαντο χαλκίῃσιν κρητήρος Ἀργολικοῦ τρόπον· περίξ δὲ αὐτοῦ γρυπῶν κεφαλῶν πρόκροσσοί³⁹⁷ εἰσι· καὶ ἀνέθηκαν ἐς τὸ Ἡραῖον³⁹⁸, ὑποστήσαντες ³⁹³ ὅσων δὴ μηνῶν, "for so many months, whatever the number was." See the note 525 on i. 157.

³⁹⁴ σιτία οἱ ἐνιαυτοῦ καταλείπουσι. It is remarkable that a Samian vessel bound to Egypt should be able to spare provisions for so large a space of time. If it had been on the return voyage, the circumstance would have been less extraordinary, for corn and salted fish was a cargo that might very easily have been taken in there. See DEMOSTHENES (c. Dionysiodor. p. 1285) and note 54 on ii. 15.

³⁹⁵ ἔπλεον ἀποφερόμενοι ἀπηλιώτῃ ἀνέμῳ. This is a wind of all others the most unfavourable for the course from Platea to Egypt. Perhaps we should put a stop after ἔπλεον, and read ἀποφερόμενοι δὲ ἀπ. ἀν. If the text is not corrupt some explanation like that suggested in note 398, below, seems necessary.

^a ἀνίει. See note 318 on § 125, above.

³⁹⁶ ἀκήρατον. This is scarcely compatible with what the author says (i. 163), that the Phœceans were the discoverers of Tartessus; but I believe that he is here following the account of a Samian, and in the other passage some other authority,—possibly that of an earlier writer. But see the note 538 on i. 163.

³⁹⁷ γρυπῶν κεφαλῶν πρόκροσσοι, "griffin heads standing out from the surface." See note on vii. 188, where all the MSS have the feminine form πρόκροσσαι, although here equally unanimous for the other.

³⁹⁸ εἰς τὸ Ἡραῖον. It seems probable that to this offering was traditionally attached the story which Herodotus has just related. The name of the master of the Samian vessel would appear in such a case, for doubtless it was inscribed on the offering. But if the redæcopos of the Heræum were the channel through which the narrative came to Herodotus, the circumstance of the vessel being outward or inward bound at the time of the incident might easily be mistaken by him. (See above, note 394.) Hence perhaps the difficulty of the course of the Samians may be explained. If they wished to return home, and on getting out to sea found an east wind, they might very reasonably make sail, and, with a wind nearly on the beam, endeavour to shape their course for the westernmost point of Crete (Cape Krio) with the intention of afterwards running eastward under the shore. But if their desire had been to get to Egypt, they would never have made sail at all,—but have used their oars,—with however little success. If an east wind had been blowing while they were at Platae, they would undoubtedly not have put to sea at all.

³⁹⁹ φίλαι μεγάλαι. This friendship, on whatever occasion arising, was probably cemented by commercial interest. The Samians were by the aid of the Cyrenians enabled to get a share of the trade with the interior of Africa, (see ii. 32; iii. 26,) and also advanced somewhat nearer to the great object of Hellenic wishes—trade with Spain. (See the notes on i. 170 and v. 106.) On the other hand the Cyrenians found a ready market for their σιρλήτιον, and perhaps the Theraeans for purple-coloured robes. (See note 377 on § 147.) Amasis the Egyptian not improbably formed another party to this commercial league. See note 554 on ii. 182.

⁴⁰⁰ Κυρηναῖοι γάρ. See the notes 386 on § 150 and 424 on § 163.

⁴⁰¹ Ἀξός. Gaisford prints this on the authority of S and V, but several MSS have Ὀαξός, and that is the form under which STEPHANUS BYZANTINUS describes the place. In the Cretan dialect ἄξος signified κρημνώδης τόπος, and the O of the alternative form is possibly a representative of the digamma, the root being ἄγω.

⁴⁰² πᾶν ἐπ' αὐτῇ μηχανωμένη. Compare v. 62: πᾶν ἐπὶ τοῖσι Πεισιστρατῶσι μηχανώμενοι.

⁴⁰³ ἐπενεικασα. Some of the MSS have the common form ἐπενέγκουσα, although in § 166 they all have ἐπενεικας.

καταποντῶσαι ἀπαγαγόντα· ὁ δὲ Θεμισίων περιημεκτίσας τῇ ἀπάτῃ τοῦ ὄρκου καὶ διαλυσάμενος τὴν ξεινήν, ἐποίηε τοιάδε παραλαβὼν τὴν παῖδα ἀπέπλεε· ὥς δὲ ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ πελάγῃ, ἀποσιεύμενος τὴν ἐξόρκωσιν⁴⁰⁴ τοῦ Ἑτεάρχου σχοινοῖσι αἰτῆρ διαδήσας κατήκε ἐς τὸ πέλαγος, ἀνασπάσας δὲ ἀπῆκετο ἐς τὴν 155 Θήρην. Ἐνθεύτεν δὲ τὴν Φρονίμην παραλαβὼν Πολύμνητος, ἐὼν τῶν Θηραίων ἀνὴρ δόκιμος, ἐπαλλακεύετο⁴⁰⁵. χρόνου δὲ περιῶντος ἐξεγένετο οἱ πᾶσι ἰσχυρόφωνος καὶ τραυλὸς, τῷ οὖνομα ἐτέθη Βάττος, ὡς Θηραῖοι τε καὶ Κυρηναῖοι λέγουσι· ὥς μέντοι ἐν δοκῷ, ἄλλο τι, Βάττος δὲ μετωνομάσθη ἐπεὶ τε ἐς Λιβύην ἀπῆκετο, ἀπὸ τε τοῦ χρηστηρίου τοῦ γενομένου ἐν Δελφοῖσι αὐτῷ καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς τιμῆς τὴν ἔσχε τὴν ἐπωνυμίην ποιούμενος· Λίβυες γὰρ βασίλεια Βάττον καλέουσι· καὶ τούτου εἵνεκα δοκῷ⁴⁰⁶ θεοπίζουσιν τὴν Πυθίην καλέσαι μιν Λιβυκὴ γλώσση, εἰδυῖαν ὡς βασιλεὺς ἔσται ἐν Λιβύῃ. ἐπεὶ τε γὰρ ἠνδράθη οὗτος, ἦλθε ἐς Δελφοὺς περὶ τῆς φωνῆς· ἐπειρωτέοντι δὲ οἱ χρᾶ ἢ Πυθίῃ τάδε·

The word Battus means "prince" in the Libyan language.

ὥσπερ εἰ εἴποι Ἑλλάδι γλώσση χρεωμένη· "ὦ βασιλεῦ, ἐπὶ φωνὴν ἦλθες." ὁ δὲ ἀμείβετο τοῖσδε· "ὦ ἄναξ, ἐγὼ μὲν ἦλθον παρὰ σέ· χρῆσόμενος περὶ τῆς φωνῆς· σὺ δέ μοι ἄλλα ἀδύνατα χρᾶς κελεύων Λιβύην ἀποικίζεω· τέφ' δυνάμει; κοίῃ χειρί;"

⁴⁰⁴ ἀποσιεύμενος τὴν ἐξόρκωσιν, "just saving the oath imposed on him." See below, § 203: λόγιόν τι ἀποσιεύμενοι, "just saving his obedience to a certain oracle."

⁴⁰⁵ ἐπαλλακεύετο. It must not be supposed that Polymnestus necessarily entertained Phronime in the relation of a mistress (ἐταίρη). The word παλλαχὴ would be employed to designate a wife by a morganatic marriage. It answers to the Latin concubina as well as pelles; and where a marriage was contracted between parties who were not citizens of the same state, it and not the word γυνή would be used to describe the wife. No doubt the term is susceptible of the other sense; but in this instance there can be little doubt that Battus was in fact the issue of a marriage of disparagement, such as those of which Phalaris and the Partheniae were the offspring at Lacedæmon, or those between patricians and plebeians at Rome antecedently to the passing of the Licinian laws.

⁴⁰⁶ καὶ τούτου εἵνεκα δοκῷ. PAUSANIAS saw at Delphi a statue of Battus in a chariot, crowned by a figure impersonating Libya, the chariot being driven by another representing Cyrene; and to this the story was traditionally attached that Battus recovered his voice by the fright of suddenly coming on a lion in the neighbourhood of Cyrene (x. 15. 4). The statue was said to be the work of Amphion the son of Acæstor, a sculptor of Cnossus (whom SELLIG places about the beginning of the Peloponnesian war). If this statue had been at Delphi when Herodotus visited the place, it seems unlikely that he should have omitted to mention it and the story connected with it.

⁴⁰⁷ οἰκιστῆρα. The manuscripts S and V have οἰκίζοντα.

ταῦτα λέγων οὐκ ἔπειθε ἄλλα οἱ χράν ὥς δὲ κατὰ ταῦτὰ ἐθέσπιζέ

⁴⁰⁸ συνεφέρετο παλιγκότως. The ellipse is probably of ὁ θεός. The word παλιγκότος is especially applicable to a person whose irritation, after being apparently allayed, breaks out afresh. παλιγκότα παθήματα are, in the technical phraseology of HIPPOCRATES, ailments which burst forth over and over again. Translate: "After this, a spiteful fortune clings both to this man himself and to the rest of the Theraeans." The anger of the god is conceived of as an evil genius inseparable from the side of his victims: "neque de- cedit arata triverni et Post equitem sedet atra cura."

⁴⁰⁹ ἀπέπλων. Here the majority of the MSS have ἀπέπλεον, which in the next section is the reading of all but one (S). On the other hand, in vi. 116, all of them have περιέπλων. In viii. 5, S and V have ἀποπλέσσεσθαι, and the rest the common form.

⁴¹⁰ οὐδὲν σφί χρηστὸν συνεφέρετο, "nothing but ill-luck haunted them." The expression οὐδὲν χρηστὸν is an euphemism for πάντα ποιηρὰ, the use of a word of ill omen being avoided as far as possible even in a narrative of a still existing settlement.

⁴¹¹ Λιβύην μηλοτρόφον. PLUTARCH (Cur Pythia, &c., § 27, t. ii. p. 408) quoting this oracle, gives the Doric forms Λιβύαν μαλοτρόφον, but all the MSS here have the Ionic dialect, although in the oracle recited in § 169, they are equally unanimous in giving γὰς ἀναδαιο- μένας. Plutarch has also ἄρειον for ἄμει- νον.

¹¹³ Ἀζύρις. CALLIMACHUS (Hymn.
Apoll. 89) has the form Ἀζύρις.

¹¹⁴ ἐνθαῦτα γὰρ ὁ οὐρανὸς τέτρηται.
The plain of Cyrene lies remarkably insulated, being throughout backed by a range of high mountains lying e. and w., from which spurs run out towards the sea.
On the south side of the range rain seldom or never falls, and this contrast with the condition of the Cyrenian plain doubtless produced the expression in the text.
But still the climate, considered absolutely, was not an excessively moist one.
THEOPHRASTUS (De causis plantarum, vi. 18. 3) even says of it, ἡ χώρα λεπτή καὶ ξηρὰ καὶ οὐκ ἄγαν θερμή· καθαρόν τε γὰρ τῷ ἀέρι καὶ ἀνύδρῳ περιέχεται, — an expression which Schneider considers corrupt, but which is extremely appropriate if we suppose it to refer to the air of the circumjacent desert.

Valokmaer has proposed the conjecture βουρὸς for οὐρανός, considering the allusion to be to the excellent spring which the natives pointed out. There never was so unfortunate an application of acuteness.

The frequent fall of rain is perhaps the form of all others in which the peculiar favour of Providence would, by persons inhabiting the arid soil of Africa, be recognized as resting upon the land. Thus this feature is put prominently forward in Deuteronomy (xi. 11) as distinguishing Canaan from Egypt. The former is “a land of hills and valleys which drinketh water of the rain of heaven, a land which the Lord God careth for.” And in xxviii. 12, the special blessing: “The Lord shall open unto thee his good treasure, the heaven to give the rain unto thy land in his se-son, and to bless all the work of thine hand,” corresponds to the special curse (ver. 23): “Thy heaven that is above thy head shall be brass.” The expression, “Behold, if the Lord would make windows in heaven” (2 Kings vii. 2) is apparently a proverbial phrase derived from the same idea as that expressed in the text.

¹¹⁵ Βάττει. The MSS vary in this section between this form and Βάττει.
In § 162 they all have Βάττει.

⁴¹⁶ Ἀπρίῃ τῷ Αἰγύπτου βασιλεῖ. This is no doubt the place where Herodotus intended to fulfil the promise (made in ii. 161) of a more detailed account of the expedition of the Egyptian king against Cyrene. But it is not easy to conceive that the passage in the text is really the fulfilment of it, or any thing more than an outline of what was contemplated by the author when he was writing the second book.

⁴¹⁷ ἀντὶ τούτων Αἰγύπτιοι κατὰ ταῦτα. This is the reading retained by Gaisford, but it seems impossible to believe that it is not corrupt. It has been proposed to read κατὰ ταῦτά, and give it the sense of antitica; but if it could be used in this sense—which I doubt, its proper place would be before the word ἀπέστησαν. The best solution I can offer of the difficulty is that ἀντὶ τούτων and κατὰ ταῦτα may be alternative readings, of which several instances have been pointed out in the notes.

⁴¹⁸ Βάττεω. Gaisford gives this reading from a single MS (S). The others all have the common form Βάττου, although in both the instances in which the name appears in the last section, some of them have Βάττεω.

Ἐπὶ μὲν δὴ τούτου τοῦ Βάττεω οὕτω διετέλλε ἔοντα, ἐπὶ δὲ τοῦ τούτου παιδὸς Ἀρκεσίλειω πολλὴ ταραχὴ περὶ τῶν τιμέων ἐγένετο. (τῆς δὲ Σαλαμῖνος τοῦτον τὸν χρόνον ἐπεκράτεε Εὐέλθων⁴²², ὃς τὸ ἐν Δελφοῖσι θυμητήριον, ἔδν ἀξιοθέητον, ἀνέθηκε, ⁴²⁰ τεμένεια ἐξελὼν καὶ ἱρῶσύνας. There is some difficulty in deciding on the exact meaning of this phrase; but perhaps we shall be right in considering that what Demonax did was to secure certain priestly functions to the house of the king, and to give it likewise the full control of a domain set apart for defraying the religious ceremonies. See the note 396 on iii. 143.

⁴²¹ ἡ δὲ μήτηρ οἱ εἰς Σαλαμίνα τῆς Κύπρου ἔφυγε. The use of the dative οἱ here is not superfluous. It seems to imply a concert between Pheretima and her son. She went in his interests. See note 318 on ii. 113.

⁴²² τῆς δὲ Σαλαμῖνος τοῦτον τὸν χρόνον ἐπεκράτεε Εὐέλθων. The compound ἐπεκράτεε induces the belief that Salamis was an addition which Evelthon had made to his paternal dominions. The circumstance of his offering at Delphi being placed in the Corinthian treasury (which in reality was the treasury of the Cypselid dynasty, i. 14) suggests that he might have been mixed up with the commercial policy of that family. Perhaps the object of Pheretima was to show the advantages which it was in her son's power to bestow should he, by the aid of Evelthon, be restored to his sovereignty, while on the other hand her son addressed himself to a people who knew how much they would lose if the traffic with Cyrene got into other hands. See the note 399, above.

⁴²³ τοῦτο ἐπὶ παντὶ γὰρ τῷ διδομένῳ ἔλεγε. So two manuscripts (S, F). Gaisford with others has τοῦτο γὰρ ἐπὶ π. δ. ε., and places a full stop after the word ἔλεγε. But for the construction see note 383 upon § 149.

⁴²⁴ τοῦτον τὸν χρόνον ἐὼν ἐν Σάμῳ. The occasion here referred to would undoubtedly cause the whole history of Cyrene to be brought to the common knowledge of the Samians. See notes 386 and 399, above.

⁴²⁵ [ἄνδρῶν]. This word is omitted in

S and V. I am inclined to suspect that the whole clause ὅκτῳ ἀνδρῶν γενεὰς is an interpolation of two different dates, and that S and V exhibit it in its earliest form.

⁴²⁶ κατ' οὖρον, “with all speed,” literally “adown the wind.” Compare ÆSCHYLUS (Theb. 696):—

ἴτω κατ' οὖρον κύμα Κνωκυτοῦ λαχὼν φοίβη στυγερὴν πᾶν τὸ Λαίου γένος.

⁴²⁷ ταῦρος ὁ καλλιστεύων. This is probably a reference to Alazir, the father-in-law of Arceilaus, king of Barca, and as such described as the “vir gregis,” the leading bull of the herd.

⁴²⁰ ἐς Θήρην ἀπέστειλαν. From this place being selected, it seems likely that the prisoners were individuals belonging to the first of the three tribes of Demonax, —perhaps descendants of the original colonists.

⁴²¹ μαθὼν ἐπ' ἐξεργασμένοις. Compare JUVENAL (Sat. xiii. 237):

“—quid fas

Atque nefas, tandem incipiunt sentire peractis Criminibus.”

⁴²² θυγατέρα τοῦ τῶν Βαρκαίων βασιλέως τῷ ὄνῳμα ἦν Ἀλαξίρ. By the circumstance of the Barcean prince bearing this barbarous name, one may be inclined to suppose that the policy of the brothers of Arcesilaus's grandfather, who built Barca, was to identify themselves as much as possible with the African population, and even adopt barbarian appellations. Perhaps Alasir is the equivalent of a Hellenic name in the native language. It is clear that Alasir was not a native chief, from the circumstance that his daughter was a συγγενής of Arcesilaus.

⁴²³ ἐξεργασμένος ἑωυτῷ κακὸν, i. e. by taking the step against which the oracle warned him,—εἰσελθὼν ἐς τὴν ἀμφίρρυντον.

⁴²⁴ εὐεργεσίαι. This would be the mode most tolerable to Hellenic ears of expressing the payment of tribute to an oriental liege lord. The circumstances of the case are related in iii. 13, although in a very different form,—for with the narrator there the central feature of the story is obviously Cambyses's largesse to the soldiery. But the substantial identity of the two accounts appears in the circumstance of the Barceans and Cyrenians being combined in iii. 13 (although it was only the Cyrenian offering which was so contemptuously treated), while again in the narrative here some connexion between the two states is evident, both from the marriage of Arcesilaus with Alasir's daughter, and from the refuge found by the former in Barca.

⁴³³ ἐς διὰ τὸν μηδισμὸν ὁ παῖς τέθνηκε. It is very difficult, in the present paucity of information, to say how this profession could be made out. Possibly Cambyzes was considered as the representative of the line of Apries, whose grandson some Egyptian accounts made him (iii. 2). Compare also the statement of DIONON, quoted in the note 9 on iii. 3. Now Apries was the feudal lord of the native inhabitants, the perieci, of Cyrene (iv. 159); and on the other hand the connexion of Amasis with the Greeks (φιλέλλην γενόμενος, ii. 178), and especially with the Cyrenians was a very close one (ii. 181, 182). And if the return of Arcesilaus was brought about in a great measure by sacrificing the interests or prejudices of the Hellenic element of the population in favour of the aborigines which formed a δῆμος there,—which several circumstances make not at all improbable,—he would transfer to his cause the political traditions of the party which originally called Apries in. (See the notes 419, 430, and 432.) His conduct therefore might be represented as a μηδισμὸς, inasmuch as he and Cambyzes would under such circumstances stand to each other in the relation of vassal and suzerain. At any rate there would be enough for a πρόσχημα, in order that Libya might be conquered. (See § 167.)

⁴³⁴ παρισεύμενος. The force of the preposition should not be overlooked—"indirectly" putting himself on a footing with Darius." The assertion of sovereignty was contained in the fact of his issuing a coinage at all, but masked by the comparative meanness of the metal in which it was struck.

⁴³⁵ τοῦτο τὸ μὴ ἄλλῃ εἰη βασιλεῖ κατεργασμένον. This expression must be taken with an allowance of some kind or other. Perfectly pure gold from its softness would spoil a coinage; and if the circumstance of the coinage being gold at all was what constituted it a memorial, the minting silver could not be attempted with even the semblance of that excuse. Possibly the real novelty consisted in the fact that Darius was the first oriental sovereign who issued an independent coinage. The wealth of Croesus appears to have consisted of ingots (i. 50) and gold dust (vi. 125), although the Sardians boasted of being the first who coined money (i. 94). The passage containing the account of his largesse to the Delphians of two staters a-piece does not exist in the manuscripts 8 and V; and, supposing it to be genuine, it may very reasonably be an expression in terms of a later time of the sum which was really paid. But if the distinctive character of what Darius did was that it was the first oriental coinage, it must be put together with his cadastral system, and regarded as constituting one portion of a large financial measure which redeemed the Persian empire from the condition of an assemblage of barbarian hordes, and earned for its author the soudriquet of ὁ κάπηλος from his ignorant and ruffianly countrymen. See note on vii. 28.

⁴³⁶ μαθὼν δὲ Δαρείος μιν ταῦτα ποι-εῖντα. The precarious position of Darius for some time after his accession is shown by several circumstances, of which we here have one. The issuing the silver coinage was a symbol of the position which Aryandes hoped to occupy—one very similar to that of Oroctes in Asia. (See note 350) on iii. 127.) He had been appointed by Cambyses as Oroetes had been by Cyrus, and he wished to convert his tenure into an independent kingdom, owing a nominal allegiance to the king of Persia, as a duke of Burgundy in the twelfth century might to a king of France, or a pasha of Egypt to the Porte. It is observable that Darius keeps out of sight the delicate question of independent sovereignty. Probably at this time his own father-in-law was holding a similar position in Asia, and his plan for the subdivision of satrapies had not been got into work. (See notes 240 on iii. 88 and 390 on iii. 141.) But as soon as any charge was brought against him, Aryandes knew what was the real point at issue, and threw off the mask by an open revolt.

⁴³⁷ ἐπενείκας. See note 403, above.

⁴³⁸ ἐπανίσταται. The MSS vary between ἐπανίσταται, ἐπανιστάται, and ἐπανιστάται. Gaisford adopts the second of these readings. But Herodotus habitually uses the optative mood in such cases.

⁴³⁹ τὸν ἐξ Αἰγύπτου ἅπαντα. See the next note.

⁴⁴⁰ ἄνδρα Μαράφιον. The appointment of an individual to the command of the whole land army, who was not a Pasargad, and consequently not closely connected with the reigning dynasty, is not to be overlooked with reference to the schemes noticed in the note 436. For the tribes of the Persians see i. 125.

⁴⁴¹ Βάδρην. The manuscript S has Μάρδην and V has Μάδρην. These forms are all etymologically equivalent with one another, and also with Βάρδης or Bartius and Smerdis. See note 83 on iii. 30. It is a curious circumstance that an individual of this name should be placed in a high office by Aryandes.

⁴⁴² Λίβυες. In the description of Libya which follows Herodotus appears to rest on the authority of merchants' stories, of which that in ii. 32 is a remarkable specimen. It seems to me not improbable that from here to the end of § 180, his information is gained from coasting navigators, while at § 181 he begins to depend upon the accounts brought by the caravan traders into Egypt. Hence the diversity apparent in some of the details may perhaps be accounted for. See for example note 456 on § 174.

⁴⁴³ μέχρι λιμένος τῷ ὀνόματι Πλυνός ἐστι. SCYLAX (p. 48) places the Adyrmachidæ entirely within the Egyptian boundary, which he makes to extend as far as Apis (a town in the immediate vicinity of Parætonium), of which Herodotus perhaps speaks above (ii. 8). Eastward he brings them as far as the Canobic branch of the Nile.

⁴⁴⁵ τὸ σίλφιον. The use of the article is to be observed. See note 490 on § 191, below. The Silphium was well known in its imported state. It was used, among other purposes, to sprinkle the fried Boeotian eels,—a dish held in the highest estimation. (ANTIPHANES ap. Athenæum, vii. p. 623. Compare ANISTOPHANES, Av. 1579.) The sale of it produced so much as to render the expression τὸ Βάρτου σίλφιον proverbial to denote unbounded wealth; and it appears on the coins of Cyrene, as being the staple produce of the place. For a description of the plant see PLINY (N. H. xix. 3), and for its medical uses (xxiii. 23). In the time of PLAUTUS, Capua was the great staple for it. (Rud. iii. 2. 16.)

⁴⁴⁶ Ἀσβύσαι. Two of the MSS (M and K) have Ἀσύνται, and Ἀσύντειον for Ἀσβυστέων, below. Gaisford suggests that this variation may arise from the confusion of the contractions of βυ and υν, which are very similar.

⁴⁴⁷ Εὐεσπερίδας. This place was founded under the auspices of the fourth Arcesilaus. (Schol. ad Pind. Pyth. v. 33.) It was subsequently called Βερενίκη after the queen of Ptolemy III., who beautified it. (STEPHANUS BYZANTINUS, v. Βερενίκαι.)

⁴⁴⁸ Κάβαλες. So Gaisford prints on the authority of the majority of MSS. Two however have Βάκαλες.

⁴⁴⁹ Ταύχειρα. The site of this town is said to be still traceable in some ruins called Tekra, about ten hours' distance from Ptolemais.

⁴⁵⁰ τὸ θέρος. Some unnecessary difficulty as regards these words has been occasioned by the circumstance that the date harvest generally begins in October; and Larcher, to avoid it, proposes to read μετὰ τὸ θέρος. But there seems no occasion to resort to this alteration, or to the theory that the date harvest would in some years take place much earlier than in others. All that Herodotus says is, that during the dry season (to which the Hellenic expression θέρος is the nearest approach) the Nasamones left their flocks in the pastures on the northern coast, and went into the interior to secure the date harvest (whenever that may have taken place). They really were the carriers in the caravan traffic which took place between the coast and the interior. They appear to have had business at the Oasis of Ammon (ii. 32), and doubtless were carriers of salt, which forms so important an article of African trade. We may suppose them to leave the north just after the sheep shearing, and to re-appear again after the date harvest, having in the mean time been engaged in a course of traffic, the last results of which appeared at the ports on the coast in the shape of dates, or possibly of palm wine.

⁴⁵² ἐπικούουν αὐτέων τὴν μίξιν ποιεῦνται. There is no reason whatever to suppose that these words involve a contradiction to what follows, and are an interpolation. The very instance of the Massagetae referred to disproves such a notion. MARCO POLO relates a similar practice to that of the Nasamones and Massagetae as existing among the tribes of central Asia and China. He says that it was sanctioned by the priests of their religion, and that the people considered a deviation from it as likely to bring barrenness on the country. Perhaps if it had a religious sanction, it was originally adopted by the priests as a first step towards bringing the people from a yet more degraded state, such as that attributed to the Aues and Machlyes (§ 180, below). So far as the community extended to members of the same tribe, it would probably be interpreted on the principle ascribed by Herodotus to the Agathyrsi: ἵνα κασίγνητοί τε ἀλλήλων ἔωσι, καὶ οἰκῆοι ἐόντες πάντες μήτε φθόρε μήτ' ἐχθεὶ χρέωνται ἐς ἀλλήλους (§ 104, above).

⁴⁴⁶ Γαράμαντες. The description which follows of this tribe seems to accord rather with the timorous Troglodytæ (the Tibboos), whom, according to Herodotus in another passage (§ 183, below), the Garamantes hunt. Accordingly a factitious distinction has been attempted by Larcher between a tribe of nomad Garamantes (to whom he supposes the author to allude in the other passage) and another portion of the same nation having fixed habitations, which are meant here. Another solution of the difficulty has been sought by reading Γαμφάσαντες here instead of Γαράμαντες, to which some colour is given by a passage in MELA (i. 8), and one in PLINY (N. H. v. 8. 8). But there is no variation in the MSS of Herodotus to supply the least support to this conjecture; and possibly a less violent explanation of the diversity of description is to be found in the conjecture that the authority here followed by Herodotus took the Garamantes for the Troglodyte Tibboos.

⁴⁴⁷ στρουθῶν καταγαίων δορὰς. The Asiatic Ethiopians in the army of Xerxes are similarly represented as using the skins of cranes by way of defensive armour (vii. 70). Probably a covering of feathers was so contrived as to break the blow of a sharp instrument, a result achieved by the South Sea islanders with the same materials.

⁴⁴⁸ Κίνυψ ποταμός. This is the site on which Dorieus the Spartan attempted to found a colony (v. 42). Its extreme productiveness above every other part of Libya is remarked (§ 198, below).

⁴⁶⁰ καὶ οἶνον. According to POLYBIUS (Fragm. xii. 2), the lotus wine was produced by first steeping the fruit for some time in water, and then pressing it. It would not however keep for more than ten days; so that it could never have been exported.

⁴⁶¹ Μάχλυνες. It seems doubtful whether this is a genuine Libyan name, or has a Greek root. In the latter case it would probably, like Troglodytæ and Lotophagi, have a reference to the habits of the people who were called by it. See the latter part of § 180.

⁴⁶² ἑκατόμβην. By this name must be understood the aggregate offering to the deity, and not merely the cattle designed for sacrifice. The tripod made a part of it.

⁴⁶³ κρύψαι τὸν τρίποδα. The tripod (the symbol of the tutelary deity of the settlers, see note 493 on i. 144) is a most important feature in the legend, and appears in all the versions of it. The whole story is a fair specimen of the mythical way in which the history of colonization was described in early times. The later ages consolidated the poetic fictions of the earlier period into facts, and accounted for them on the principle which Euhemerus was noted for systematically carrying out. Thus APOLLONIUS RHODIUS makes the sacred tripod a return for the piece of earth, which in his narrative, as well as that of PINDAR (Pyth. iv. 22, seqq.), is the symbol by which Triton makes over the soil to the Hellenic settlers (iv. 1548). DIODORUS brings the matter down even closer to the level of daily experience. Triton, according to him, was the king of the country, who, on explaining to the Argonauts the difficulties of the coast, was rewarded by them with a brazen tripod, which in after times was to be actually seen, covered with hieroglyphics, at Berenice (iv. 56).

See, for further illustration of the way in which mythical stories were used by the ancients for the purpose of justifying actual policy, the notes on vi. 140.

⁴⁶⁴ τρωμάτων. This form, which Gaisford adopts, rests on the authority of M, K, P, S, V, F, and α, the other MSS having τρωνμάτων or τρωμάτων. EUSTATHIUS (ad Il. v. 596) lays down the canon that where the diphthong αυ is changed into ων without crasis, the latter form is in Ionic a dissyllable. On this principle one ought to write θάωμα and ἐωόντων, although the crasis which had taken place would justify ἐμεωντοῦ and σεωντοῦ (ἐμέο αὐτοῦ and σέο αὐτοῦ), τάνωτ' (τὸ αὐτὸ) ὄντως (ὁ αὐτός), and ὄντοι (οἱ αὐτοί). But in this particular case τρώμα may be reasonably concluded a form directly derived from a present tense τρώω. And even if this were not the case, it seems very hazardous to be guided by the factitious rules of Alexandrine grammarians or their followers in the case of an author who writes so loosely as Herodotus.

⁴⁶⁵ περιάγουσι τὴν λίμνην κύκλῳ. The existence of this practice may have suggested to the friends of Pisistratus the demonstration described by Herodotus above, i. 60, where see note 201. It seems scarcely doubtful that this Athene is a war goddess, a kind of Enyo, Bellona, or Amazon, analogous to the Mother of Ares at Papremis, where on the day of the high festival there was "a passage of arms" not unlike the one described in the text. See ii. 63.

⁴⁶⁶ οὐκ ἔχω εἶπαι. This expression indicates that no positive knowledge respecting the practice reached back to an earlier time than that in which direct mercantile transactions between Hellas and Libya existed.

⁴⁶⁷ ἀπὸ γὰρ Αἰγύπτου... Ἑλληνας. It is not easy to reconcile this statement with what is known of the Hellenic armour. Before the time of Psammitichus (as it would seem from the story in ii. 152), the Hellenic casque and shield must have been unknown to the Egyptians. But they were long before familiar to the Greeks of Asia, as appears from the Homeric poems, and probably to the Carians (who formerly inhabited the islands) even at an earlier period. See THUCYDIDES i. 8. If they came from Egypt to the Greeks at all in early times, it was perhaps only as from a staple of manufactures fabricated by foreigners settled there. See notes

128, 129, and 134 on Book ii. But the Egyptian priest in PLATO (Timæus, p. 24) takes the same view as Herodotus.

⁴⁶⁸ τοῦτον παῖς νομίζεται. The description of the tribes on the coast is continued in § 186, the intermediate five sections being taken up with an account of the tribes inland, apparently derived from information brought by the caravans into Egypt.

⁴⁶⁹ ψάμμης. The form ψάμμη in place of the more common ψάμμος is defended by the use of ARISTOPHANES (Lyssistr. 1260): ἦν γὰρ τῶνδ' οὐκ ἐλάσσους τὰς ψάμμης. It would almost seem however as if the expression was put in the mouth of the speaker in that passage as a Dorian peculiarity, and if so, its use here may be thought to indicate the source of the information. But elsewhere Herodotus uses the other form (i. 47; iii. 26, 102; and even 182, below). And in this passage S and V have ψάμμος, as if in the sense of ψάμμινος, or as if a gloss of ὄφρῃ standing alone. Perhaps the last is the most probable supposition. For in § 182 all the MSS have τῆς ψάμμου, and it is scarcely conceivable that if Herodotus had advisedly used the feminine termination here, he would have changed it so soon in a part of the narrative closely cohering with this.

⁴⁷⁰ διὰ δέκα ἡμερέων ὁδοῦ. The real distance of Thebes from the Oasis of Ammon is nearly 400 geographical miles. Probably there is some confusion between it and the greater Oasis (El Wah) of which the author speaks in iii. 26, where see note 73. The Oasis of Ammon is situated lat. 29° 8' 50", long. 26° 20'. HERODOTUS indeed attempts to identify the distances given by Herodotus with those of existing caravan routes, by supposing a station left out between Thebes and the Oasis of Ammon, and another between Augila and the Garamantes. But his whole discussion (African Nations, chapter vi.) although ingenious, is based upon the assumption of much greater exactness in Herodotus's work than is compatible with the phenomena observable therein. That every station should consist of a hill of salt, and that from the summit of every hill a stream of fresh water should burst out, ought to have raised some suspicion of the accuracy of the narrative. The phenomena of the region are in fact such as to suggest the account in the text, but not to warrant it. There are large deposits of salt, and out of some fresh water springs rise, but the appearance in the great majority of cases is that of a field, not a hillock, of salt; and the water springing from the deposit is generally saline.

For the accounts prevalent among the ancients with regard to this fountain see ARISTOTLE (op. Antigonium Caryatium, De Mirabilibus, § 144) and LUCRETIUS (vi. 849—874). The physical fact causing the general belief doubtless is the circumstance that while the temperature of the water coming from a considerable depth remained constant, that of the air would vary enormously; and by comparison with this the apparent temperature of the water would be such as described in the text. See a parallel case with regard to the effect of the sun in India (iii. 104, note 301).

⁴⁷² δύεταί τε ὁ ἥλιος καὶ τὸ ὕδωρ γίνεταί χλιαρόν, "as the sun sets, so does the water grow tepid." This mode of expression, in which the synchronism of two events is denoted by coupling the clauses expressing them by the particles τε—καί, is a favourite one with Herodotus, but peculiar to him. Thus, below, παρέρχονται τε μέσαι νύκτες καὶ ψύχεται μέχρι ἐς ἡῶ, "as midnight passes, so does the water grow colder even till dawn." § 199: συγκεκόμεσται τε οἱ τοὺς δὲ μέσος καρπὸς καὶ ἐν τῇ κατωπεράτῃ τῆς γῆς πεπαινεταί, "as this midland-grown crop is housed, the crop in the highlands is getting ripe." And above, § 135: νύξ τε ἐγένετο καὶ Δαρείος ἐχράτο τῇ γυνάμει ταύτῃ. v. 86: τοὺς τε Ἀθηναίους ἀποβεβάναι . . . καὶ παρῆναι τοὺς Ἀργεῖους.

⁴⁷⁶ τετρίγασιν. The Tibboos, the race living in the holes of the Tibesti mountains, still, as formerly, hunted for the purpose of making slaves of them, are said by the Augilians to have a language like the "whistling of birds." But this is the effect of almost any language which is entirely unintelligible upon the ear of an uneducated person. Thus Herodotus endeavours to explain the legend of the pigeon of Dodona, (ii. 57;) and Clytemnestra in ÆSCHYLUS compares the unknown foreign language of Cassandra to the voice of the swallow (Agam. 1050). See also ARISTOPHANES (Birds, 1681). An ingenious attempt has been made to show that the names of many of the tribes mentioned in the Homeric poems are derived from this supposed similarity of their languages to the notes of birds. See the Cambridge Philological Museum, vol. i. pp. 609—627.

⁴⁷⁷ Ἀτάραντες. So Gaisford prints, and the commentators universally since the time of Salmasius have approved of the change. It is however a conjectural one from Ἀτλάντες, the reading of all the MSS. And it would seem that both PLINY and STEPHANUS BYZANTINUS found the reading Ἀτλάντες in their copies. HEEREN places the tribe in question in the territory of Tegerry, the frontier town of Fezzan, the halting-places for the caravans from the south. Here the Arabic language ceases and the Bornou begins. The Bornouese are said by LEO AFRICANUS (quoted by Heeren) to have no proper names strictly speaking, but to be called by nicknames derived from some accidental quality. But Herodotus does not seem to mean this, which is in fact the origin of the great majority of surnames in all languages; but that they have no individual names at all, and are a mere herd of men. It is plain that his information is in the highest degree vague; and it is worse than useless to attempt to disguise this by arbitrary emendations and strained explanations.

⁷⁸ ὁδοῦ. This word is omitted from the manuscripts M, K, P, S, V.

⁷⁹ διὰ δέκα ἡμερέων ὁδοῦ. This ten days' march would probably, in the views of Herodotus, have to be reckoned from the Atlantes, of whom he has just spoken. Heeren attempts to fix the site at the salt mines of Tegazah, spoken of by LEO AFRICANUS, about twenty days' journey from Timbuctoo, on the caravan road to Morocco.

⁸⁰ ἐκ τῶν ἁλίων χόνδρων οἰκοδομέσθαι. STRABO relates that Gerrha, a city built by Chaldean exiles on the coast of the Persian gulf, was constructed of salt, and that when the surface scaled off by the excessive heat of the sun, the inhabitants were accustomed to repair the mischief by sprinkling it with water (xvi. c. 3, p. 382). The houses of Tegazah are described by IEN BATUTA as built of rock salt and covered with camels' hides. The mountain Had-Deffa, which consists of the purest rock salt, at the eastern extremity of the Lake of Marks (the ancient Tritonis), is said by modern travellers to be as hard as stone, quite different from pit salt, and to be of a red hue, although the salt which is detached by dew loses this colour and becomes white.

⁴⁴¹ οὕτω μὲν μέχρι τῆς Τριτωνίδος λίμνης. Here is resumed the account of the tribes on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea which had been broken off with § 180, the intervening five sections being derived from a different class of authorities. See above, note 442 on § 168. It seems not impossible that the mine of rock salt which is described in the last section is an union of accounts of two distinct places, the red rock Had-Deffa and the pits at Bilma.

⁴⁴² αἱ Κυρηναίων γυναῖκες. It was quite to be expected that there should be a mixture of race between the early Hellenic settlers and the aborigines whom they found; and that it actually took place appears from the genealogy of Telesicrates (PINDAR, Pyth. ix. 109) and from CALLIMACHUS (Hymn. Apoll. 85, 87).

⁴⁴³ οὐκέτι νομάδες εἰσὶ Λίβυες. It has been thought that this expression is an inaccurate one, from the circumstance of the Auses, a tribe on the west of Lake Tritonis (§ 180), being included among the nomad Libyans (§ 181). But the inaccuracy, such as it is, seems rather to lie in the including such tribes as the Auses and Machlyes among nomads. They appear by the description to be entirely confined to the shore of the lake, and the deity whom they worship is termed αἰθιγερῆς, an expression quite inapplicable in the case of a tribe without a local habitation. But all that Herodotus seems to say amounts to stating that the country east of the Lake Tritonis is the region of the nomad races, and that when you pass it you no longer find them. Neither the Kabales (§ 171) nor the Lotus-eaters (§ 177) appear to be a nomad race in the strict sense of the term.

⁴⁸⁵ τράγου οὖρον σπείσαντες. The restorative effect would no doubt arise from the ammonia with which the urine is strongly impregnated.

⁴⁸⁶ θύσανοι . . . οὐκ ὀφίεις εἰσι. The development of the fringe of the ægis into snakes was due to the progress of art, and preceded the time of Herodotus by a very little. In the oldest monument of Hellenic pictorial art, the Panathenaic vase discovered by Mr. Burgon, the fringe still remains.

⁴⁸⁷ καὶ δὴ καὶ τὸ οὖνομα κατηγορεῖ. The name αἰγλή is unquestionably a purely Hellenic word; so that if the peculiar garb of Athens and its name (αἰγῆς) were imported simultaneously into Hellas, and both derived from the Libyan women, it cannot be supposed that these were a pure native population. Now both the αἰγῆς and the ὀλολυγὴ are in the Homeric poems found as part and parcel of the garb and ritual of Athens;—which decisively shows their familiarity in Asiatic Greece long before the settlement of Battus at Cyrene. Nevertheless the garb of Athens being the same as the common dress of the Libyan women seems on the other hand a certain evidence that such a representation of the deity must be of Libyan origin,—or, at least, could not possibly have been brought into Libya from a country where the costume was different. And as soon as ever it became a sacred garb, a sacredness would also attach to its name, and the two, if exported, would be exported together. The combination of these varied data must be very arbitrary; but as one hypothesis, I should be inclined to suggest that the Libyans found by Battus were the descendants of very early settlers (perhaps Carian islanders) who had become incorporated with the aboriginal Africans (perhaps Berbers), had adopted the native ægis-bearing deity, and super-added to her costume the casque and shield. (See note 467 on § 180, above.) If these settlements happened before the time represented by the reign of Minos, there would be room left for the exportation of Athens with her whole costume and ritual to Asiatic Greece before the composition of the Homeric poems.

⁴⁸⁸ κεχριμένας ἐρευθεδάνῃ. These red-dened goat-skins are perhaps represented by the red morocco leather of the present day.

⁴⁸⁹ ἡ δὲ χώρα, κ.τ.λ. This part of Africa, answering to the pashalik of Tunis, was a part of the domain or under the influence of Carthage; and the exclusive policy of that country doubtless contributed to exaggerate the formidable character of the animals which inhabited the region. The soldiers of Regulus were very reluctant to follow him into a country about which such terrible stories were current. (See the next note.)

⁴⁹⁰ οἱ ὄφεις ἄρκτοι. The use of the article is to be remarked. "The serpents and the lions," i.e. which we hear such stories of. So again οἱ κυνοκέφαλοι and οἱ ἀκέφαλοι. See notes 206, 222, and 232 on Book ii., and note 445, above. No elephants are found now in this region, although they seem to have existed in the time of Pompey. See PLUTARCH. Pomp. § 12.

⁴⁹¹ οἱ τὰ κέρα. One manuscript (c) omits οἱ τὰ. The animal described is perhaps the nylghau, unless it be merely taken from a picture. Such a representation is to be found in the Monuments Egyptiens, pl. 84.

⁴⁹² καὶ οἱ ἀκέφαλοι. That the author intends a human race by these seems likely from his using the term στέθεσ, which could hardly be applied to any other. They have doubtless only a traditional existence. PLINY (v. 8) terms them Blennyæ, and SIR JOHN MANDEVILLE, who calls them "folk of fowle stature and of cursed kynde, that have no heddes, and here eyen ben in here scholdres," puts them in "an ile toward the south" (p. 203). Possibly the origin of the fiction is some symbolical representation. Pliny (l. c.) speaks also of some Himantopodes, which seem to be a fiction arising out of the symbolical representations of Abrahas. See Monuments Egyptiens, pl. 86.

Animals found among the nomad tribes.

d have ἀκατάφαστα. Bekker reads κατάφαστα, D'Orville ἐκατάφαστα.

⁴⁹⁴ πύγαργοι, possibly "bisons." The animal is spoken of in Deuteronomy (xiv. 5). The ζορκάδες (for which S has δορκέες and V δορκάδες) and βουβάλιες are two species of antelope, and the same may be said of the ὄρνος,—an animal which ARISTOTLE calls ὄρνος and PLINY oryx.

⁴⁹⁵ τῶν τὰ κέρεια . . ποιεῖνται, "whose horns are made into the frames for the Phœnician lutes." See ATHENÆUS, xiv. p. 63. The construction of the sentence is the same as that of viii. 27: ἡ δὲ δεκάτη ἐγένετο τῶν χρημάτων ἐκ ταύτης τῆς μάχης οἱ μεγάλοι ἀνδριάντες οἱ περὶ τὸν τρίποδα συνεστώτες.

⁴⁹⁶ βασσάρια, "foxes." The Etymologicum Magnum says: λέγεται βάσσαρος ἢ ἀλάτῃς ἐπὶ Κυρηναίων. If the word be a local one, we may conjecture that here the author is following (mediately or immediately) a Cyrenian authority.

⁴⁹⁷ δίκτυες. What these animals are it is impossible to say, as no other author mentions them. The Lacedæmonians gave the name δίκτυς to the 'kite' (HESYCHIUS), but it seems impossible that any bird should be interposed among a list of beasts.

⁴⁹⁷ ὕς ἀγρίου . . . οὐκ ἔστι. Herodotus in this statement is followed by ARISTOTLE (Hist. Animal. viii. 28). But SHAW says that wild hogs abound, and are in fact the chief food of the lion. In Socrates (lat. 13°, long. 6°) CLAPPERTON found them, but Herodotus is here apparently confining himself to the north of Africa. Perhaps the origin of the assertion is, that while in Greece the deer and boar comprised the whole of the nobler kind of game, in Africa they constituted a very small part in comparison with the enormous flocks of antelopes of different kinds.

⁴⁹⁸ οἱ μὲν δίποδες καλέονται. These animals are doubtless the jerboa, which, although a quadruped, uses its forelegs very little, but, like the kangaroo, skips and sits upon its hind legs. It is probably the creature mentioned in ISAIAH (lxvi. 17), which our translators render by the word 'mouse.'

⁴⁹⁹ οἱ δὲ ζεγῆριες. BOCHART (quoted by Larcher, ad loc.) derives this word from the Punic word zagar, which is said to mean a kind of turnip. If the plural zagar meant "bulbs," it would not be far off the signification of Bouvol. Bochart wished to change Bouvol into Bouvoloi, but it seems doubtful whether Bouvol is not really an adjective, the masculine of the feminine βοῦνις, which is used by ÆSCHYLUS (Suppl. 117. 128). The pair of forms would be analogous to ὄρνος and ὄρνις, χρυσῶπις and χρυσῶπις.

⁵⁰¹ Γύζαντες. This is the reading of the majority of MSS, but some have Ζύζαντες. Another form Βύζαντες had the authority of other writers. STEPHANUS BYZANTINUS (sub v.) says: Λίβυες περὶ Καρχηδόνα τῆς Λιβύης· ἔθνος, ἀφ' οὗ ἡ πόλις Βυζάντιον, καὶ Βυζάντιοι οἱ ἐν Λιβύῃ· παρ' Ἡροδότῃ δὲ κακῶς διὰ τοῦ γ Γύζαντες.

⁵⁰⁴ τῆς Πιερικῆς πίσσης ἀμείνω. Herodotus's authority probably merely judged from appearance. The substance really possesses a corrosive quality, which renders it unfit to be applied to cordage, although mixed with other pitch it does for paying the outside of boats. The Pierian pitch with which Herodotus compares the produce of the Zante tar springs is spoken of by PLINY (N. H. xiv. 21) as having the same repute in Greece as the pitch from Mount Ida enjoyed in Asia. The Zante tar can scarcely have been an important article of commerce, as its present yield is no more than about twenty barrels annually. It became however sufficiently well known for PLINY to compare it with the Babylonian and contrast it with the Judean (xxxv. 15).

⁵⁰⁵ ἀπέχει ὥς τέσσερα στάδια ἀπὸ τῆς λίμνης. The exactness of the eye-witness is manifest from this expression, although the face of the locality is changed. The tar springs were visited by HAWKINS in 1795, and a full description of them is given in Walpole's Turkey, vol. ii. At the s.e. extremity of the island a morass of an oval form and about one-fourth of a mile long is formed by a narrow bar of shingle which has been thrown up by the sea, and intercepts the water which would otherwise run out. There are two springs from which the tar is taken,—the most productive being that which is farthest from the sea, and to which Herodotus here alludes. It now rises in the peat moss, in which a hole is cut for the purpose of procuring the tar, which, gradually oozing out from the surface of the earth, settles at the bottom of the hole. In calm weather the bitumen is observed to rise from the bottom of the sea in several parts of the adjoining bay; and there can be no doubt that it was this circumstance which led to the notion that substances thrown into the hole appear in the sea.

⁵⁰⁶ οὕτω δὲν . . . οἰκόντα ἐστὶ ἀληθῆ. It seems strange that the existence of any single tar spring should have had such weight with the writer as to render the Carthaginian story credible to him, unless he had been ignorant of the existence of others. Yet he describes (vi. 119) some springs, of the same kind but even more remarkable, and alludes to others (i. 179). Perhaps however the passage in the sixth book is an addition by an ancient editor. See note on οἱ καὶ μέχρι ἐμὸ ἀρχαίην γλώσσων.

⁵⁰⁷ ἀδικεῖν δὲ οὐδετέρους. All modern travellers confirm the credibility of this story, by showing its coincidence with the practice of the present day in the traffic between the different races of Africa. There being no intercourse between them except on the arrival of the caravans, and the use of money being unknown, trade must of necessity be a barter, and business be conducted by signs. SHAW gives an account of this kind of transaction between the western Moors and the Nigritians, and LYON of the same between some tribes in Soudan and the traders from Fes.

perhaps may be considered to date from the time of Alexander's expedition) very forcibly in the time of Herodotus. See v.

¹¹⁶ τοὺς μαζοὺς. The grammarians confine this form to the breast of the male, but the distinction appears to be a factitious refinement of the Alexandrines. In ii. 85, above, and ix. 112, below, the greater part of the MSS have the form μαζοὺς, and here only one (V) has μαστούς. Yet in iii. 133, and v. 18, there is an unanimous consent for the form μαστός.

ease, but does not mention Pheretime. Familiar instances in later times are Sulla, Antiochus Epiphanes, Herod, Galerius, and Philip II. of Spain.

⁵²³ τῆς Βάττω. The manuscripts S, K, F, have Βαρκαίου. Pheretime was the wife of a Battus (as appears from § 162), but there is nothing in Herodotus (except this passage may be taken as such) to show whose daughter she was. But as confessedly Βάττος is the Libyan name for a chieftain, it seems far from impossible that she was represented as the daughter of a Battus or Battæus, and that the appellative was mistaken for a proper name.

EXCURSUS ON IV. 199.

Τῶν ὑπερθαλασσιδίων χώρων τὰ μέσα ὀργᾶ συγκομίζεσθαι, τὰ βουνούς καλέουσι.

FROM this passage it appears that in the region of Cyrene the term βουνοὶ was locally given to a particular part of the country, viz. that which was at a medium elevation between the coast, and the high chain which ran e. and w. and formed the southern boundary of the district.

Herodotus undoubtedly speaks of the word as if not a familiar one to the inhabitants of Hellas, although in common use at Cyrene. From other sources we learn that it was often found in the Syracusan poetry (PHRYNICHUS, p. 156). In later times, it and its derivatives are found at Alexandria (See the LXX in Genesis xxxi. 46. Exodus xvii. 9. Numbers xxiii. 9. Deuteronomy xxxiii. 15. Joshua v. 3. Ruth ii. 14. 16). This, from the known commercial intercourse between Alexandria and the parts of Libya about Cyrene, may be accounted for equally well on the hypothesis that the word was an importation into Egypt from Cyrene, being originally African, and on that of its existence in the Macedonian dialect, and therefore in the Hellenic language in its early state.

After the growth of the κουῆ διάλεκτος of literature, the foreign character of the word appears to have worn off. Thus POLYBIUS has βουνώδης, DIODORUS SICULUS βουνοειδής, STRABO and PAUSANIAS βουνός. But this was not the case before the time of the Ptolemies. PHILEMON, the comic poet, ridiculed the word as a foreign one (ap. Eustath. in Il. λ'. 831, 832) in one of his plays; and although it is perhaps impossible to give a certain interpretation to the obscure passage of ÆSCHYLUS (Suppl. 116), ἰλέομαι μὲν Ἀπία βοῦνιν καρβάνα δ' αὐδάν

εὐακοεῖς,

yet it is plain that Ἀπία βοῦνιν there, and γὰ βοῦνιν (776), are phrases unfamiliar to the ear of an Athenian. Accordingly it has been supposed that the word βοῦνός was a native African word, adopted by the Cyrenian settlers, transported in the course of commercial intercourse to Sicily, and brought by Æschylus from thence to Athens, on his return from his sojourn in the island.

But another theory seems at least equally plausible, viz. that the word is Pelasgian, that is to say, belonging to the very earliest stage of the Greek language, and that instead of being brought from Africa, it was taken thither, and also to Syracuse, from Hellas Proper; that in a time antecedent to the colonization of Cyrene, it was common in Peloponnese, but that it there became obsolete, or at least archaic and peculiar to religious offices, while at the same time it was retained in ordinary language in the colony¹.

That, if a Hellenic word at all, it belonged to the earliest stage of the language, seems to follow from the circumstance that the Cyrenian colonists were not a homogeneous population, being partly from Crete, partly from Thera, and partly Minyæans from Laconia and Elis (HEROD. iv. 145—161). If used by all of them, it cannot have been a provincialism, but must have formed a part of their common inherited vocabulary. Therefore, on this hypothesis, we may expect to find its etymological equivalents in the other dialects of the same family. Following this clue, there do seem to be grounds for the belief that a root βῶν, βοῦν, or βόν, signified in the early language of which these are off-shoots, "the Earth," or, to speak more exactly, "a mountain." From this fundamental conception, it is only natural that two classes of words should be derived, the one inheriting the sensuous, the other the religious portion of the original notion: the former conveying always a notion of elevation or convexity, the latter, one of sanctity, arising from the sacred character of the earth as an object of worship in the ancient elemental religions².

Instances of the former class are the following. 1. The Gaelic "Ben" (Armorican "Pen"), signifying "a mountain." This root shows itself in the mediæval Latin "Benna," which, according to DUCANGE, was a Gallic term for a car (perhaps rather, like currus, the elevated seat in a car). It is also traceable in the English "bench" (boenchen?), "bank," and the French "banc." 2. The word "bon" preserved in the mediæval Latin "bonna," which, according to DUCANGE, means "a boundary mound," and remains in the English "bound."³ 3. The German "Buehne," signifying an elevation of planks, a stage or dais. 4. The Greek βουβών (where the first syllable is a prefix, as in βούπαις, βουκαῖος, &c.), which was used as early as the time of HIPPOCRATES in its modern medical sense. 5. βουνός, which HESYCHIUS says the Cyprians used in the sense of στῖβας, "a heap of litter." 6. βουνοί βουμοί, HESYCH., a sense of the word which seems archaic, as in the early rituals altars were mounds of earth.

The following instances seem referable to the latter class.

1. HERE βουναία is a name under which an elemental deity, apparently identical with the Earth or Hecate, was worshipped at Corinth. See the note on v. 92, ἐς τὸ Ἡραῖον. That this surname was not derived from the locality of the temple, as being on the top of a βουνός, but was the ancient name of the goddess, seems probable from the circumstance, that in PAUSANIAS's time a mythical Bonus, son of Hermes, was put forward as the eponymous founder, although the word βουνός in the sense of "a hill" had by that time become common. Also the temple stood together with one of a Demeter, to whom therefore the epithet, if merely expressing locality, would have been equally applicable.

² These, it should be remembered, regarded every distinct form in which the natural forces developed themselves, as a separate divinity. Thus the mountain was divine, no less than the forest, and the spring: and superstition accordingly produced its Oreads as well as its Dryads and its Naiads. It seems not unlikely that the relation of Ζεὺς Δαδωναῖος to the Dryads, and of Oceanus to the Naiads, is paralleled by that of a Bouvala to the Oreads.

³ This word seems to have been sometimes pronounced bôn. In Hertfordshire I have found the expression "bone-plate" (i. e. bound-platte), used to signify a space left as a boundary between two parishes. Bon would be related to Ben, as bonus to bene, an adverb which implies a form benus or boenus.

2. The same deity, under the same name slightly modified, appears also in the old Latin rituals. The Roman antiquaries doubted whether the month of May was so called from Maius—(the Deus Maius of Tusculum, a deity identical with Jupiter)—from Maia the wife of Vulcan, or from Maia the mother of Hermes. But Cornelius Labeo asserted that the Maia to whom the Flamen Vulcanalis sacrificed on the kalends of May was nothing else than the Earth. She was conjoined with Mercury (as the Here Bunæa of Corinth was with Hermes through the mythical Bunus) in the ritual which was assigned to her; the victim sacrificed was a pregnant sow; and the ceremonies were of a secret nature. In the Pontifical Books she was invoked (indigetabatur) under the names of Bona Dea, Ops, Fauna, and Fatus (MACROBIUS, Saturnal. i. c. 12). Macrobius adds: “Sunt qui dicant hanc deam potentiam habere Junonis, ideoque sceptrum regale in sinistrâ manu ei additum. Eandem alii Proserpinam credunt, alii χθονίαν Ἑκάτην Bæoti Semelam credunt Quidam Medeam putant.” The decided identity of this deity with the Here Bunæa of Corinth, and of both with the Earth, makes it a probable supposition that both Bona and Bunæa are merely dialectal variations of the same word⁴, which if so must have been Pelasgian. The religious formula, “Quod bonum faustumque sit,” derives its origin (I believe) from the ritual of this deity.

3. In the Scandinavian and Anglo-Saxon dialects, there are, according to GRIMM (Deutsche Mythologie, p. 20), a whole groupe of words signifying “prayer.” Old Norwegian bón, Swedish and Danish boen, Anglo-Saxon bén; from whence came bénsian (supplicare), English boon (which in Chaucer and Robert of Gloucester is bone). These all appear to me to be connected with the root of Bunæa.

4. The word *Penas*⁵, which DIONYSIUS OF HALICARNASSUS mentions as having been inscribed on the figures of the Dioscuri, that he saw in a part of Rome called “Sub Olivis” seems to be merely equivalent to θεός. The Penates in the adytum at Lavinium were two heralds' staves (one of iron and one of brass) and a vase of Trojan pottery (Antiqq. i. 67).

⁴ The difference in quantity between ‘bûnus’ and βουνός is no argument against this view. It is justified by many similar diversities, e.g. βραχίων and ‘brachium.’

⁵ He says the word was DENAS, but Scaliger considers it certain that he mistook the ancient ρ for a ν.

5. The English word bon-fire (anciently bone-fire) is perhaps best explained by considering it to mean "bene-ominatus ignis," and to have had originally a religious (probably lustral) significance, like the Palilia at Rome, the St. John's Fire of Germany, and the ritual alluded to in Deuteronomy (xviii. 10) and 2 Kings (xvi. 3). On the latter passage THEODORET remarks: εἶδον γὰρ ἔν τισι πόλεσιν ἅπαξ τοῦ ἔτους ἐν ταῖς πλατείαις ἀπομένους πυρὰς, καὶ ταύτας τινὰς ὑπερ-λομένους τὰ δὲ γε βρέφη παρὰ τῶν μητέρων παραφερόμενα διὰ τῆς φλογός· ἐδόκει δὲ τοῦτο ἀποτροπιασμός εἶναι καὶ κάθαρσις. (Opp. i. 362, ed. Paris.) But the connexion of lustral fire with Earth-worship is in Greece at least as ancient as the time of the Homeric Hymn, in which the legend of the fiery purgation of Demophoon by Demeter appears (vv. 230, seqq.); and in Italy the same early connexion is indicated by the fact of the Flamen Vulcanalis sacrificing to the Earth, under the name of Maia or Bona Dea, as observed above.
